RELIGUES

OF

ANCIENT ENGLISH POETRY.
RELIQUES
OF
ANCIENT ENGLISH POETRY: CONSISTING OF OLD HEROIC BALLADS, SONGS, AND OTHER PIECES, OF OUR
EARLIER POETS,
TOGETHER WITH SOME FEW OF LATER DATE,
AND A COPIOUS GLOSSARY.

BY THOMAS PERCY, D.D.
BISHOP OF DROMORE.

LONDON:
JOHN TEMPLEMAN, REGENT STREET;
JOHN RUSSELL SMITH, OLD COMPTON STREET, SOHO;
JOHN MILLER, OXFORD STREET.
MDCCXL.
1840
WALTER SPIERS, PRINTER, 399, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
TO

ELIZABETH,
LATE DUCHESS AND COUNTESS OF NORTHUMBERLAND, IN HER OWN RIGHT
BARONESS PERCY,
ETC. ETC. ETC.,
WHO, BEING SOLE HEIRESS TO MANY GREAT FAMILIES
OF OUR ANCIENT NOBILITY, EMPLOYED THE PRINCELY FORTUNE, AND SUSTAINED
THE ILLUSTRIOUS HONOURS, WHICH SHE DERIVED FROM THEM, THROUGH HER WHOLE LIFE,
WITH THE GREATEST DIGNITY, GENEROSITY, AND SPIRIT; AND WHO FOR HER MANY PUBLIC AND PRIVATE VIRTUES
WILL EVER BE REMEMBERED
AS ONE OF THE FIRST CHARACTERS OF HER TIME, THIS LITTLE WORK
WAS ORIGINALLY DEDICATED:
AND AS IT SOMETIMES AFFORDED HER AMUSEMENT, AND WAS HIGHLY DISTINGUISHED BY HER INDULGENT APPROBATION,
IT IS NOW,
WITH THE UTMOST REGARD, RESPECT, AND GRATITUDE, CONSECRATED TO HER BELOVED AND HONOURED MEMORY.
CONTENTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>8 The Farewell to Love, from Beaumont and Fletcher</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>The ancient Ballad of Chevy Chase.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Notes and Illustrations.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Illustration of the Names in the foregoing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Ballads.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>The Jew's Daughter. A Scottish Ballad.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Sir Cauine.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Edward, Edward. A Scottish Ballad.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>King Estmere.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>On the word Termagant.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Sir Patrick Spence. A Scottish Ballad.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>An Elegy on Henry, Fourth Earl of Northumberland, by Skelton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>The Tower of Doctrine, by Stephen Hawes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>The Child of Elle.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Edom (Adam) o'Gordon. A Scottish Ballad</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Essay on the Origin of the English Stage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Adam Bell, Clyn o' the Clough, and William of Cloudesly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>The aged Lover renounceth Love</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Jephthah Judge of Israel.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>A Robyn, Jolly Robyn.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>A Song to the Lute in Musiecke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>King Cophetua and the Beggar-maid.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Take thy old Cloak about thee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Willow, Willow, Willow.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Sir Lancelot du Lake.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Corydon's Farewell to Phillis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>The Ballad of Constant Susannah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>Gernutus, the Jew of Veneto</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>The Passionate Shepherd to his Love, by Marlow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>The Nymph's Reply, by Sir W. Ruleigh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31</td>
<td>Titus Andronicus's Complaint</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>32</td>
<td>Take those Lips away.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>33</td>
<td>King Leir and his Three Daughters</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>34</td>
<td>Youth and Age, by Shakspeare</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>35</td>
<td>The Frolicksome Duke, or the Tinker's Good Fortune</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>36</td>
<td>The Friar of Orders Gray.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>37</td>
<td>The more modern Ballad of Chevy Chase.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>38</td>
<td>Illustration of the Northern Names.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>39</td>
<td>Death's Final Conquest, by James Shirley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>40</td>
<td>The Rising in the North.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>41</td>
<td>Northumberland betrayed by Douglas.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>42</td>
<td>My Mind to me a Kingdome is.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>43</td>
<td>The Patient Countess, by W. Warner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>44</td>
<td>Downshall, by Drayton.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>45</td>
<td>Death's Farewell to Love, from Beaumont and Fletcher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>46</td>
<td>Ulysses and the Syren, by S. Davison</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>47</td>
<td>Cupid's Pastime, by Davison</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>48</td>
<td>The Character of a Happy Life, by Sir H. Wotton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>49</td>
<td>Gilderoy. A Scottish Ballad</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>50</td>
<td>Winifreda.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>51</td>
<td>The Witch of Wokey.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>52</td>
<td>Bryan and Pereene. A West India Ballad, by Dr. Grainger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>53</td>
<td>Gentle River, Gentle River. Translated from the Spanish</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>54</td>
<td>Alcanzar and Zayda. A Moorish Tale</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SERIES THE FIRST.

BOOK THE FIRST.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>1 Richard of Almaine</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>On the Death of King Edward I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>An original Ballad, by Chaucer.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>The Tournament of Tottenham.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>For the Victory at Agincourt.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>The Not-browne Maid.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>A Balet by the Earl Rivers, by Dr. Grainger.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Cupid's Assault. By Lord Vaux.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Sir Aldingar.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>The Gaberlanzie Man. Scottish. By King James V.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>On Thomas Lord Cromwell.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Harpalus. An ancient English Pastoral.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Robin and Makyne. An ancient Scottish Pastoral.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Gentle Herdman, tell me.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>King Edward IV. and the Tanner of Tamberthorne.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>As ye came from the Holy Land.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SERIES THE SECOND.

BOOK THE FIRST.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>1 A Ballad of Luther, the Pope, a Cardinal, and a Husbandman</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>John Anderson my Jo, A Scottish Song.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Little John Nobody.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Queen Elizabeth's Verses, while Prisoner at Woodstock.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>The Heir of Linne.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Gascoigne's Praise of the fair Bridges, afterwards Lady Sandes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Fair Rosamond. By Thomas Delome.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Queen Eleanor's Confession.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>The Sturdy Rock.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>The Beggar's Daughter of Bedal Green. An Essay on the word Ffr, and the Ancient Ballad Singing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Sir Andrew Barton.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Lady Anne Bothwell's Lament. A Scottish Ballad.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>The Murder of the King of Scots.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

BOOK THE THIRD.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>18 The Friar of Orders Gray.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>The more modern Ballad of Chevy Chase.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Illustration of the Northern Names.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Death's Final Conquest, by James Shirley.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>The Rising in the North.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Northumberland betrayed by Douglas.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>My Mind to me a Kingdome is.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Downshall, by Drayton.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author/Note</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>A Sonnet by Queen Elizabeth</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>The King of Scots and Aud. Browne</td>
<td>By W. Elderton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>The Bonny Earl of Murray. A Scottish Song</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Young Waters. A Scottish Song</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Mary Ambree</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Brave Lord Willoughby</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Victorious Men of Earth. By James Shirley</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>The Winning of Caes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>The Spanish Lady's Love</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Argenteil and Curan. By W. Warner</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Corin's Fate</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Jane Shore</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>Corydon's Doleful Knell</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

BOOK THE THIRD

Essay on the Metre of Pierce Plowman's Visions

1. The Complaint of Conscience                                  161
2. Plain Truth and Blind Ignorance                                163
3. The Wandering Jew                                              164
4. The Lye. (viz. two Sonnets) by King James I.                   167
5. King John and the Abbot of Canterbury                          167
7. You Meager Beauties. By Sir H. Wotton                         169
8. The Old and Young Courtier                                     169
9. Sir John Suckling's Campaigne                                  170
10. To Althea from Prison. By Col. Lovelace                      171
11. The Downfall of Charing Cross                                 171
12. Loyalty Confined. By Sir Roger L'Estrange                    172
13. Verses by King Charles I.                                     173
14. The Sale of Rebellious Household Stuff                       174
15. The Baffled Knight, or Lady's Policy                          175
16. Why so Pale? By Sir John Suckling                            177
17. Old Tom of Bedlam. Mad Song the First                        177
18. The Distracted Puritan. Mad Song the Second                  178
19. The Lunatic Lover. Mad Song the Third                        179
20. The Lady Distracted with Love. Mad Song                       180
21. The Distracted Lover. Mad Song the Fifth                     180
22. The Frantic Lady. Mad Song the Sixth.                        181
23. Lilli-Burlero. By Lord Wharton                               181
24. The Braes of Yarrow. In imitation of the ancient Scottish Manner, By W. Hamilton | 182 |
25. Admiral Hosier's Ghost. By Mr. Glover.                       183
26. Jemmy Dawson. By Mr. Stenstone                               185

SERIES THE THIRD

BOOK THE FIRST

Essay on the Ancient Metrical Romances . 186

1. The Boy and the Mantle                                        196
2. The Marriage of Sir Gawaine                                    199
3. King Ryence's Challenge                                        202
5. The Legend of King Arthur                                      205
6. A Dyttie to Hey Downe                                          206
7. Glasperon                                                       206
8. Old Robin of Portugale                                        208
9. Child Waters                                                    209
11. Little Musgrave and Lady Barnard                              212
12. The Kw-bughts Marion. A Scottish Song.                       213
13. The Knight and Shepherd's Daughter                            214
14. The Shepherd's Address to his Muse. By N. Breton             215
15. Lord Thomas and Fair Ellinor                                  213
17. The Lady turned Serving man                                   217
18. Gil (Child) Morrice. A Scottish Ballad.                      218

BOOK THE SECOND

1. The Legend of Sir C.A.                                        220
2. Guy and Amarant. By Sam. Rowlands                            222
3. The Auld Good-man. A Scottish Song                            225
7. Sir John Grehme and Barbara Allan. Dits                     228
8. The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington                          228
9. The Willow Tree. A Pastoral Dialogue                         229
10. The Lady's Fall                                              230
11. Waly, waly, Love be bonny. A Scottish Song                   231
12. The Bride's Burial                                           232
13. Dulcinea                                                     233
14. The Lady Isabella's Tragedy                                  234
15. A Hue and Cry after Cupid. By Ben Jonson                     235
16. The King of France's Daughter                                235
17. The Sweet Negotl. By Ben Jonson                               237
18. The Children in the Wood                                     238
19. A Lover of late was I.                                      239
20. The King and the Miller of Mansfield                         240
21. The Shepherd's Resolution. By G. Wither                     242
22. Queen Dido, or the Wandering Prince of Troy                  243
23. The Witches Song. By Ben Johnson                             244
24. Robin Good-fellow                                            245
25. The Fairy Queen                                              247
26. The Fairies Farewell. By Dr. Corbet                          247

BOOK THE THIRD

1. The Birth of St. George                                       249
2. St. George and the Dragon                                     252
3. Love will find out the Way                                    254
4. Lord Thomas and Fair Annet. A Scottish Ballad                255
5. Unfading Beauty. By Tho. Carew                                256
6. George Barnwell                                               257
7. The Steedfast Shepherd. By Geo. Wither                       260
8. The Spanish Virgin; or the Effects of Jealousy               261
10. Constant Penelope                                            263
11. To Lucasta, on going to the Wars. By Col. Lovelace           264
12. Valentine and Ursaine                                       264
13. The Dragon of Wantley                                       268
16. Margaret's Ghost. By David Mallet                            276
17. Lucy and Colin. By Tho. Tickell                             277
18. The Boy and the Mantle. Revised, &c.                       278
19. The ancient Fragment of the Marriage of Sir Gawaine         280
20. Hermit of Warkworth                                          283
21. Glossary                                                     293
ADVERTISEMENT

TO THE

FOURTH EDITION.

Twelve years have nearly elapsed since the last edition of this work appeared. But, although it was sufficiently a favourite with the public, and had long been out of print, the original Editor had no desire to revive it. More important pursuits had, as might be expected, engaged his attention; and the present edition would have remained unpublished, had he not yielded to the importunity of his friends, and accepted the humble offer of an Editor in a nephew, to whom, it is feared, he will be found too partial.

These volumes are now restored to the public with such corrections and improvements as have occurred since the former impression; and the text in particular hath been emended in many passages by recurring to the old copies. The instances being frequently trivial, are not always noted in the margin; but the alteration hath never been made without good reason: and especially in such pieces as were extracted from the folio manuscript so often mentioned in the following pages, where any variation occurs from the former impression, it will be understood to have been given on the authority of that MS.

The appeal publicly made to Dr. Johnson in the first page of the following preface, so long since as in the year 1765, and never once contradicted by him during so large a portion of his life, ought to have precluded every doubt concerning the existence of the MS. in question. But such, it seems, having been suggested, it may now be mentioned, that while this edition passed through his press, the MS. itself was left for near a year with Mr. Nichols, in whose house, or in that of its possessor, it was examined with more or less attention by many gentlemen of eminence in literature. At the first publication of these volumes, it had been in the hands of all, or most of, his friends; but, as it could hardly be expected that he should continue to think of nothing else but these amusements of his youth, it was afterwards laid aside at his residence in the country. Of the many gentlemen above mentioned, who offered to give their testimony to the public, it will be sufficient to name the Hon. Daines Barrington, the Rev. Clayton Mordaunt Cracherode, and those eminent Critics on Shakespeare, the Rev. Dr. Farmer, George Steevens, Esq., Edmund Malone, Esq., and Isaac Reed, Esq., to whom I beg leave to appeal for the truth of the following representation.

The MS. is a long narrow folio volume, containing 195 Sonnets, Ballads, Historical Songs, and Metrical Romances, either in the whole or in part, for many of them are extremely mutilated and imperfect. The first and last leaves are wanting; and of 54 pages near the beginning half of every leaf hath been torn away, and several others are injured towards the end; besides that through a great part of the volume the top or bottom line, and sometimes both have been cut off in the binding.

In this state is the MS. itself; and even where the leaves have suffered no injury, the transcripts, which seem to have been all made by one person, (they are at least all in the same kind of hand,) are sometimes extremely incorrect and faulty, being in such instances probably made from defective copies, or the imperfect recitation of illiterate singers; so that a considerable portion of the song or narrative is sometimes omitted; and miserable trash or nonsense not unfrequently introduced into pieces of considerable merit. And often the copyist grew so weary of his labour as to write on without the least attention to the sense or meaning; so that the word which should form the rhyme is found misplaced in the middle of the line; and we have such blunders as these, want and will for wanton will; even pan and voile for van and palet, &c. &c.

Hence the Public may judge how much they are indebted to the composer of this collection; who, at an early period of life, with such materials and such subjects, formed a work which hath been admitted into the most elegant libraries; and with which the judicious antiquary hath just reason to be satisfied, while refined entertainment hath been provided for every reader of taste and genius.

THOMAS PERCY,
FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

* Page 130. Ver. 117.—This must have been copied from a reciter.
† Page 130. Ver. 164, viz. "His visage waxed and wane."
The reader is here presented with select remains of our ancient English Bards and Minstrels, an order of men, who were once greatly respected by our ancestors, and contributed to soften the roughness of a martial and unlettered people by their songs and by their music.

The greater part of them are extracted from an ancient folio manuscript, in the Editor's possession, which contains near two hundred Poems, Songs, and Metrical Romances. This MS. was written about the middle of the last century; but contains compositions of all times and dates, from the ages prior to Chaucer, to the conclusion of the reign of Charles I.*

This manuscript was shown to several learned and ingenious friends, who thought the contents too curious to be consigned to oblivion, and importuned the possessor to select some of them, and give them to the press. As most of them are of great simplicity, and seem to have been merely written for the people, he was long in doubt, whether, in the present state of improved literature, they could be deemed worthy the attention of the public. At length the importunity of his friends prevailed, and he could refuse nothing to such judges as the Author of the Rambler and the late Mr. Shenstone.

Accordingly such specimens of ancient poetry have been selected, as either show the gradation of our language, exhibit the progress of popular opinion, display the peculiar manners and customs of former ages, or throw light on our earlier classical poets.

They are here distributed into volumes, each of which contains an independent series of poems, arranged chiefly according to the order of time, and showing the gradual improvements of the English language and poetry from the earliest ages down to the present. Each volume, or series, is divided into three books, to afford so many pauses, or resting-places to the reader, and to assist him in distinguishing between the productions of the earlier, the middle, and the latter times.

In a polished age, like the present, I am sensible that many of these reliques of antiquity will require great allowances to be made for them. Yet have they, for the most part, a pleasing simplicity, and many artless graces, which in the opinion of no mean critics* have been thought to compensate for the want of higher beauties, and, if they do not dazzle the imagination, are frequently found to interest the heart.

To atone for the rudeness of the more obsolete poems, each volume concludes with a few modern attempts in the same kind of writing: and, to take off from the tediousness of the longer narratives, they are every where intermingled with little elegant pieces of the lyric kind. Select ballads in the old Scottish dialect, most of them of the first rate merit, are also interspersed among the greater number of English Minstrels; and the artless productions of these old rhapsodists are occasionally confronted with specimens of the composition of contemporary poets of a higher class; of those who had all the advantages of learning in the times in which they lived, and who wrote for fame and for posterity. Yet perhaps the palm will be frequently due to the old strolling Minstrels, who composed their rhimes to be sung to their harps, and who looked no further than for present applause, and present subsistence.

The reader will find this class of men occasionally described in the following volumes, and some particulars relating to their history in an Essay subjoined to this preface.

It will be proper here to give a short account of the other collections that were consulted, and to make my acknowledgements to those gentlemen who were so kind as to impart extracts from them; for, while this selection was making, a great number of ingenious friends took a share in the work, and explored many large repositories in its favour.

The first of these that deserved notice was the Pepysian library at Magdalen College, Cambridge. Its founder, Sam. Pepys, Esq., Secretary of the Admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. had made a large collection of ancient English ballads, near two thousand in number, which he has left pasted in five volumes in folio; besides Garlands and other smaller miscellanies. This collection, he tells us, was "begun by Mr. Selden; im-

* Mr. Addison, Mr. Dryden, and the witty Lord Dorset, &c. See the Spectator, No. 70. To these might be added many eminent judges now alive. The learned Selden appears also to have been fond of collecting these old things. See below.

† A Life of our curious collector, Mr. Pepys, may be seen in "The Continuation of Mr. Collier's Supplement to his Great Dictionary", 1715, at the end of vol. iii. folio. Art. PEP.
The plan of the work was settled in concert with the late elegant Mr. Shenstone, who was to have borne a joint share in it had not death unhappily prevented him.* Most of the modern pieces were of his selection and arrangement, and the Editor hopes to be pardoned if he has retained some things out of partiality to the judgement of his friend. The old folio MS. above mentioned was a present from Humphrey Pitt, Esq. of Prior’s-Lee, in Shropshire, to whom this public acknowledgement is due for that, and many other obliging presents. Sir David Dalrymple, Bart. of Hales, near Edinburgh, the editor is indebted for most of the beautiful Scottish poems with which this little miscellany is enriched, and for many curious and elegant remarks with which they are illustrated. Some obliging communications of the same kind were received from John Mac Gowan, Esq. of Edinburgh; and many curious explanations of Scottish words in the glossaries from John Davidson, Esq. of Edinburgh, and from the Rev. Mr. Hutchison, of Kimbolton. Mr. Warton, who has twice done so much honour to the Poetry Professor’s chair at Oxford, and Mr. Hest of Worcester College, contributed some curious pieces from the Oxford libraries. Two ingenious and learned friends at Cambridge deserve the Editor’s warmest acknowledgements: to Mr. Blakeway, late fellow of Magdalen College, he owes all the assistance received from the Pepsian library: and Mr. Parmer, fellow of Emanuel, often exerted, in favour of this little work, that extensive knowledge of ancient English literature for which he is so distinguished.† Many extracts from ancient MSS. in the proved by the addition of many pieces older thereto in time; and the whole continued down to the year 1700; when the form peculiar till then thereto, viz. of the black letter with pictures, seems (for cheapness sake) wholly laid aside for that of the white letter without pictures.”

PREFACE.

In the Ashmole Library at Oxford is a small collection of Ballads made by Anthony Wood in the year 1676, containing somewhat more than two hundred. Many ancient popular poems are also preserved in the Bodleian Library.

The archives of the Antiquarian Society at London contain a multitude of curious political poems in large folio volumes, digested under the several reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, Elizabeth, James I., &c.

In the British Museum is preserved a large treasure of ancient English poems in MS. besides one large folio volume of printed ballads.

From all these some of the best pieces were selected; many from illiterate transcripts, as well printed as manuscript, particularly from one large folio volume which was lent by a lady.

And such a fund of materials, the Editor is afraid he has been sometimes led to make too great a parade of his authorities. The desire of being accurate has perhaps seduced him into too minute and trifling an exactness; and in pursuit of information he may have been drawn into many a petty and frivolous research. It was however necessary to give some account of the old copies; though often, for the sake of brevity, one or two of these only are mentioned, where yet assistance was received from several. Where any thing was altered that deserved particular notice, the passage is generally distinguished by two inverted commas. And the Editor has endeavoured to be as faithful as the imperfect state of his materials would admit. For these old popular rhimes being many of them copied only from illiterate transcripts, or the imperfect recitation of itinerant ballad-singers, have, as might be expected, been handed down to us with less care than any other writings in the world. And the old copies, whether MS. or printed, were often so defective or corrupted, that a scrupulous adherence to their wretched readings would only have exhibited unintelligible nonsense, or such poor meagre stuff as neither came from the Bard nor was worthy the press; when, by a few slight corrections or additions, a most beautiful or interesting sense hath started forth, and this so naturally and easily, that the Editor could seldom prevail on himself to indulge the vanity of making a formal claim to the improvement; but must plead guilty to the charge of concealing his own share in the amendments under some such general title as a “Modern Copy,” or the like. Yet it has been his design to give sufficient intimation where any considerable liberties were taken with the old copies, and to have retained either in the text or margin any word or phrase which was antique, absolute, unusual, or peculiar, so that these might be safely quoted as of genuine and undoubted antiquity. His object was to please both the judicious antiquary and the reader of taste; and he hath endeavoured to gratify both without offending either.

Such liberties have been taken with all those pieces which have three asterisks subjoined, thus: * * *
British Museum, and other repositories, were owing to the kind services of Thomas Astle, Esq. to whom the public is indebted for the curious Preface and Index annexed to the Harleian Catalogue*. The worthy Librarian of the Society of Antiquaries, Mr. Norris, deserves acknowledgement for the obliging manner in which he gave the Editor access to the volumes under his care. In Mr. Garrick's curious collection of old plays are many scarce pieces of ancient poetry, with the free use of which he indulged the Editor in the poliest manner. To the Rev. Dr. Birch he is indebted for the use of several ancient and valuable tracts. To the friendship of Dr. Samuel Johnson he owes many valuable hints for the conduct of the work. And, if the Glossaries are more exact and curious than might be expected in so slight a publication, it is to be ascribed to the superintendence of a friend, who stands at this time the first in the world for Northern literature, and whose learning is better known and respected in foreign nations than in his own country. It is perhaps needless to name the Rev. Mr. Lye, Editor of Junius's Etymologicum, and of the Gothic Gospels.

The names of so many men of learning and character the Editor hopes will serve as an amulet, to guard him from every unfavourable censure for having bestowed any attention on a parcel of Old Ballads. It was at the request of many of these gentlemen, and of others eminent for their genius and taste, that this little work was undertaken. To prepare it for the press has been the amusement of now and then a vacant hour amid the leisure and retirement of rural life, and hath only served as a relaxation from graver studies. It has been taken up at different times, and often thrown aside for many months, during an interval of four or five years. This has occasioned some inconsistencies and repetitions, which the candid reader will pardon. As great care has been taken to admit nothing immoral and indecent, the Editor hopes he need not be ashamed of having bestowed some of his idle hours on the ancient literature of our own country, or in rescuing from oblivion some pieces (though but the amusements of our ancestors) which tend to place in a striking light their taste, genius, sentiments, or manners.

Except in one paragraph, and in the Notes subjoined, this Preface is given with little variation from the first edition in mcccLXV.

Editor in his attempts to illustrate the literature or manners of our ancestors. Some valuable remarks were procured by Samuel Pegge, Esq. author of that curious work the "Curialia," 4to.; but this impression was too far advanced to profit by them all; which hath also been the case with a series of learned and ingenious annotations inserted in the Gentleman's Magazine for August, 1793, April, June, July, and October, 1794, and which, it is hoped, will be continued.

* Since Keeper of the Records in the Tower.
AN ESSAY ON THE ANCIENT MINSTRELS IN ENGLAND.

I. The Minstrels (A) were an order of men in the middle ages, who subsisted by the arts of poetry and music, and sang to the harp verses composed by themselves, or others*. They also appear to have accompanied their songs with mimicry and action; and to have practised such various means of diverting as were much admired in those rude times, and supplied the want of more refined entertainment (B). These arts rendered them extremely popular and acceptable in this and all the neighbouring countries; where no high scene of festivity was esteemed complete, that was not set off with the exercise of their talents; and where, so long as the spirit of chivalry subsisted, they were protected and caressed, because their songs tended to do honour to the ruling passion of the times, and to encourage and foment a martial spirit.

The Minstrels seem to have been the genuine successors of the ancient Bards (C), who under different names were admired and revered, from the earliest ages, among the people of Gaul, Britain, Ireland, and the North; and indeed, by almost all the first inhabitants of Europe, whether of Celtic or Gothic race; but by none more than by our own Teutonic ancestors, particularly by all the Danish tribes. Among these, they were distinguished by the name of Scalds, a word which denotes "smoothers and polishers of language." The origin of their art was attributed to Odin or Woden, the father of their gods; and the professors of it were held in the highest estimation. Their skill was considered as something divine; their persons were deemed sacred; their attendance was solicited by kings; and they were every where loaded with honours and rewards.

In short, Poets and their art were held among them in that rude admiration which is ever shown by an ignorant people to such as excel them in intellectual accomplishments.

As these honours were paid to Poetry and Song, from the earliest times, in those countries which our Anglo-Saxon ancestors inhabited before their removal into Britain, we may reasonably conclude, that they would not lay aside all their regard for men of this sort immediately on quitting their German forests. At least so long as they retained their ancient manners and opinions, they would still hold them in high estimation. But as the Saxons, soon after their establishment in this island, were converted to Christianity; in proportion as literature prevailed among them, this rude admiration would begin to abate; and Poetry would be no longer a peculiar profession. Thus the Poet and the Minstrel early with us became two persons (D). Poetry was cultivated by men of letters indiscriminately; and many of the most popular rhymes were composed amidst the leisure and retirement of monasteries. But the Minstrels continued a distinct order of men for many ages after the Norman conquest; and got their livelihood by singing verses to the harp at the houses of the great (E). There they were still hospitably and respectfully received, and retained many of the honours shown to their predecessors, the Bards and Scalds (F). And though, as their art declined, many of them only recited the compositions of others, some of them still composed songs themselves, and all of them could probably invent a few stanzas on occasion. I have no doubt but most of the old heroic Ballads in this collection

(A) The larger Notes and Illustrations referred to by the capital letters (A) (B) &c. are thrown together at the end of this Essay.
* Wedged to an hypothesis, the Author hath readily corrected any mistakes which have been proved to be in this Essay; and, considering the novelty of the subject, and the time, and place, when and where he first took it up, many such had been excusable. That the term Minstrel was not confined, as some contend, to a mere Musician, in this country, any more than on the Continent, will be considered more fully in the last note (G) at the end of this Essay.
† Vide Pellechet Hist. des Celtes, tom. 1, l. 2, c. 6, 10.
‡ Tacit. de Mor. Germ. cap. 2.
§ Vide Bartholin. de Cassis contempta a Dannis Mortis, lib. 1, cap. 10.—Wormij. Literatura Runic. ad finem.—See also * Northern Antiquities, or, a Description of the Manners, Customs, &c. of the ancient Danes and other Northern Nations: from the French of M. Mallet." London, printed for T. Curnam, 1770, 2 vols. 8vo.

were composed by this order of men. For although some of the larger metrical romances might come from the pen of the monks or others, yet the smaller narratives were probably composed by the minstrels who sang them. From the amazing variations which occur in different copies of the old pieces, it is evident they made no scruple to alter each others productions; and the reciter added or omitted whole stanzas, according to his own fancy or convenience.

In the early ages, as was hinted above, the profession of oral itinerant Poet was held in the utmost reverence among all the Danish tribes; and, therefore, we might have concluded, that it was not unknown or unrespected among their Saxon brethren in Britain, even if history had been altogether silent on this subject. The original country of our Anglo-Saxon ancestors is well known to have been chiefly in the Cimbric Chersonese, in the tracts of land since distinguished by the name of Jutland, Angelen, and Holstein. The Jutes and Angles in particular, who composed two-thirds of the conquerors of Britain, were a Danish people, and their country at this day belongs to the crown of Denmark; so that when the Danes again infested England, three or four hundred years after, they made war on the descendants of their own ancestors. From this near affinity, we might expect to discover a strong resemblance between both nations in their customs, manners, and even language; and, in fact, we find them to differ no more than would naturally happen between a parent country and its own colonies, that had been severed in a rude uncivilized state, and had dropped all intercourse for three or four centuries: especially if we reflect that the colony here settled had adopted a new religion, extremely opposite in all respects to the ancient Paganism of the mother country; and that even at first, along with the original Angli, had been incorporated a large mixture of Saxons from the neighbouring parts of Germany; and afterwards, among the Danish invaders, had come vast multitudes of adventurers from the more northern parts of Scandinavia. But all these were only the different tribes of the same common Teutonic stock, and spoke only different dialects of the same Gothic language.

From this sameness of original and similarity of manners, we might justly have wondered, if a character, so dignified and distinguished among the ancient Danes, as the Scald or Bard, had been totally unknown or unregarded in this sister nation. And, indeed, this argument is so strong, and, at the same time, the early annals of the Anglo-Saxons are so scanty and defective (1), that no objections from their silence could be sufficient to overthrow it. For if these popular Bards were confessedly revered and admired in those very countries which the Anglo-Saxons inhabited before their removal into Britain, and if they were afterwards common and numerous among the other descendants of the same Teutonic ancestors, can we do otherwise than conclude, that men of this order accompanied such tribes as migrated hither; that they afterwards subsisted here, though, perhaps, with less splendour than in the North, and that there was wanting a succession of them to hand down the art, though some particular conjunctures may have rendered it more respectable at one time than another? And this was evidently the case. For though much greater honours seem to have been heaped upon the northern Scalids, in whom the characters of historian, genealogist, poet, and musician, were all united, than appear to have been paid to the Minstrels and Harpers (H) of the Anglo-Saxons, whose talents were chiefly calculated to entertain and divert; while the Scalds professed to inform and instruct, and were at once the moralists and theologues of their Pagan countrymen; yet the Anglo-Saxon Minstrels continued to possess no small portion of public favour; and the arts they professed were so extremely acceptable to our ancestors, that the word Glee, which peculiarly denoted their art, continues still in our own language to be of all others the most expressive of that popular mirth and jollity, that strong sensation of delight, which is felt by unpolished and simple minds (1).

II. Having premised these general considerations, I shall now proceed to collect from history such particular incidents as occur on this subject; and, whether the facts themselves are true or not, they are related by authors who lived too near the Saxon times, and had before them too many recent monuments of the Anglo-Saxon nation; not to know that was conformable to the genius and manners of that people; and therefore we may presume, that their relations prove at least the existence of the customs and habits they attribute to our forefathers before the conquest, whatever becomes of the particular incidents and events themselves. If this be admitted, we shall not want sufficient proofs to show that Minstrelsy and Song were not extinct among the Anglo-Saxons; and that the professor of them here, if not quite so respectable a personage as the Danish Scald, was yet highly favoured and protected, and continued still to enjoy considerable privileges.

Even so early as the first invasion of Britain by the Saxons, an incident is recorded to have happened, which, if true, shows that the Minstrel or Bard was not unknown among this people; and that their princes themselves could, upon occasion, assume that character. Colgrin, son of that Ella who was elected king or leader of the Saxons in the room of Hengist, was shut up in York, and closely besieged by Arthur and his Britons. Baldulph, brother of Colgrin, wanted to gain access to him, and to apprise him of a reinforcement which was coming from Germany. He had no other way to accomplish his design, but to assume the character of a Minstrel. He therefore shaved his head and beard, and, dressing himself in the habit of that profession, took his harp in his hand. In this disguise, he walked up and down the town without suspicion, playing all the while upon his instrument as a Harper. By little and little he advanced near to the walls of the city, and, making himself known to the sentinels, was in the night drawn up by a rope.

* "Angii Vetus, hodie etiam Anglien, sita est inter Saxoni- ones et Giotas [Jutos], habens oppidum capitale...Sleswick." Ethelward, lib. 1.
* Vid. Northern Antiquities, &c. vol. i. pag. 7, 8, 185, 259, 260, 261.

* See Rapin's Hist. by Tindal, vol. 1732, vol. i. p. 36, who places the incident here related under the year 695.
Although the above fact comes only from the sus-spicious pen of Geoffrey of Monmouth (K), the judicious reader will not too hastily reject it; because, if such a fact really happened, it could only be known to us through the medium of the British writers: for the first Saxons, a martial but unlettered people, had no historians of their own; and Geoffrey, with all his fables, is allowed to have recorded many true events, that have escaped from the annals of posterity.

We do not however want instances of a less fabulous era, and more induitable authority: for later history affords us two remarkable facts (L), which I think clearly show that the same arts of poetry and song, which were so much admired among the Danes, were by no means unknown or neglected in this sister nation: and that the privileges and honours which were so lavishly bestowed upon the Northern Scalds, were not wholly withheld from the Scandinavian Minstrels.

Our great King Alfred, who is expressly said to have excelled in music*, being desirous to learn the true situation of the Danish army, which had invaded his realm, assumed the dress and character of a Min-strél (M): when, taking his harp, and one of the most trusty of his friends disguised as a servant, (for in the early times it was not unusual for a minstrel to have a servant to carry his harp,) he went with the utmost security into the Danish camp; and, though he could not but be known to be a Saxon by his dialect, the character he had assumed procured him a hospitable reception. He was admitted to entertain the king at table, and staid among them long enough to contrive that assault which afterwards destroyed them. This was in the year 878.

About sixty years after, a Danish king made use of the same disguise to explore the camp of our king Aethelstan. With his harp in his hand, and dressed like a Minstrél (N), Aulaff$ king of the Danes, went among the Saxons lest, and, taking his stand near the king's pavilion, began to play, and was immediately admitted. There he entertained Aethelstan and his lords with his singing and his music, and was at length dismissed with an honourable reward, though his songs must have discovered him to have been a Dane (O). Aethelstan was saved from the consequences of this stratagem by a soldier, who had observed Aulaff bury the money which had been given him, either from some scruple of honour, or motive of superstition. This occasioned a discovery.

Now if the Saxons had not been accustomed to have Minstrels of their own, Alfred's assuming so new and unusual a character would have excited suspicions among the Danes. On the other hand, if it had not been customary with the Saxons to show favour and respect to the Danish Scalds, Aulaff would not have ventured himself among them, especially on the eve of a battle (P). From the uniform procedure then of both these kings, we may fairly conclude that the same mode of entertainment prevailed among both people, and that the Minstrel was a privileged character with each.

But, if these facts had never existed, it can be proved from undoubted records, that the Minstrel was a regular and stated officer in the court of our Anglo-Saxon kings: for in Doomesday book, Joculator Regis, the King's Minstrel, is expressly mentioned in Gloucestershire; in which county it should seem that he had hands assigned him for his maintenance (Q).

III. We have now brought the inquiry down to the Norman Conquest; and as the Normans had been a late colony from Norway and Denmark, where the Scalds had arrived to the highest pitch of credit before Rollo's expedition into France, we cannot doubt but this adventurer, like the other northern princes, had many of these men in his train, who settled with him in his new duchy of Normandy, and left behind them successors in their art: so that, when his Bastard, William, the Bastard, invaded this kingdom in the following century*, that mode of entertainment could not but be still familiar with the Normans. And that this is not mere conjecture will appear from a remarkable fact, which shows that the arts of poetry and song were still as reputable among the Normans in France, as they had been among their ancestors in the North; and that the profession of Minstrel, like that of Scald, was still aspired to by the most gallant soldiers. In William's army was a valiant warrior, named Taillefer, who was distinguished no less for the Minstrel-arts (R) than for his courage and intrepidity. This man asked leave of his commander to begin the onset, and obtained it. He accordingly advanced before the army, and with a loud voice animated his countrymen with songs in praise of Charlemagne and Roland, and other heroes of France; then rushing among the thickest of the English, and valiantly fighting, lost his life.

Indeed the Normans were so early distinguished for their Minstrelsy, that an eminent French writer (S) makes no scruple to refer to them the origin of all modern poetry, and shows that they were celebrated for their songs near a century before the Troubadours of Provence, who are supposed to have led the way to the Poets of Italy, France, and Spain.

We see then that the Norman conquest was rather likely to favour the establishment of the Minstrel profession in this kingdom, than to suppress it; and although the favour of the Norman conquerors would be probably confined to such of their own countrymen as excelled in the Minstrel arts; and in the first ages after the conquest no other songs would be listened to by the great nobility, but such as were composed in their own Norman French: yet as the great mass of the original inhabitants were not extirpated, these could only understand their own native Gleemen or Minstrels; who must still be allowed to exist, unless it can be proved that they were all proscribed and massacred, as, it is said, the Welsh were at an earlier date by the severe policy of king Edward I. But this we know was not the case; and even the cruel attempts of that monarch, as we shall see below, proved ineffectual (S').

* By Bale and Spelman. See note (M). t Ibid.
2 Anno 938. Vid. Rapiin, &c.
3 So the name should be printed, rather than Aulaff the more usual form (the same traces of the letters express both names in MS.) Aulaff being evidently the genuine Scaldic name Olafr, or Olaf, Lat. Olafus. In the old romance of "Horn-Childe" (see vol. iii. p. xxxvii.)
the name of the king his father is Allof, which is evidently Olaf, with the vowels only transposed.

* Rollo was invested in his new duchy of Normandy, † Vid. "Hist. des Troubadours, 3 tom." passim; et vid.
Fabuleux ou Contes du XII. et du XIII. Siecle, traduit
&c. avec des Notes historiques et critiques. &c. par M. Le
Grand. Paris, 1781. 9 to. 12mo.
The honours shown to the Norman or French Minstrels, by our princes and great barons, would naturally have been imitated by their English vassals and tenants, even if no favour or distinction had ever been shown here to the same order of men in the Anglo-Saxon and Danish reigns. So that we cannot doubt but the English harper and songster would, at least in a subordinate degree, enjoy the same kind of honours, and be received with similar respect among the inferior English gentry and populace. I must be allowed therefore to consider them as belonging to the same community, as subordinate members at least of the same college; and therefore, in gleaning the scanty materials for this slight history, I shall collect whatever incidents I can find relating to Minstrels and their art, and arrange them, as they occur in our own annals, without distinction; as it will not always be easy to ascertain, from the slight mention of them by our regular historians, whether the artists were Norman or English. For it need not be remarked that subjects of this trivial nature are but incidentally mentioned by our ancient annalists, and were fastidiously rejected by other grave and serious writers; so that, unless they were accidentally connected with such events as became recorded in history, they would pass unnoticed through the lapse of ages, and be as unknown to posterity as other topics relating to the private life and amusements of the greatest nations.

On this account it can hardly be expected that we should be able to produce regular and unbroken annals of the Minstrel Art and its professors, or have sufficient information whether every Minstrel or Harper composed himself, or only repeated, the songs he chanted. Some probably did the one, and some the other: and it would have been wonderful indeed if men whose peculiar profession it was, and who devoted their time and talents to entertain their hearers with poetical compositions, were peculiarly deprived of all poetical genius themselves, and had been under a physical incapacity of composing those common popular rhimes which were the usual subjects of their recitation. Whomever examines any collection of those fragments of their works, finds a style and colouring as different from the elaborate production of the sedentary composer at his desk or in his cell, as the rambling Harper or Minstrel was remote in his modes of life and habits of thinking from the retired scholar or the solitary monk (T).

It is well known that on the Continent, whence our Norman nobles came, the Bard who composed, the Harper who played and sang, and even the Dancer and the Minstrel, were all considered as of one community, and were even all included under the common name of Minstrels*. I must therefore be allowed the same application of the term here, without being expected to prove that every singer composed, or every composer chanted, his own song; much less that every one excelled in all the arts which were occasionally exercised by some or other of this fraternity.

IV. After the Norman Conquest, the first occurrence which I have met with relating to this order of men is the founding of a priory and hospital by one of them: scil. the Priory and Hospital of St. Bartholomew, in Smithfield, London, by Roger or Raherus the King's Minstrel, in the third year of King Henry I., A. D. 1102. He was the first prior of his own establishment, and presided over it to the time of his death (Tg).

In the reign of King Henry II. we have upon record the name of Galfrid or Jeffrey, a harper, who in 1180 received a corrobry or annuity from the abbey of Hiele near Winchester; and, as in the early times every harper was expected to sing, we cannot doubt but this reward was given to him for his music and his songs; which, if they were for the solace of the monks there, we may conclude would be in the English language (U).

Under his romantic son, King Richard I., the Minstrel profession seems to have ICONG to decline; splendour. Richard, who was the great hero of chivalry, was also the distinguished patron of Poets and Minstrels. He was himself of their number, and some of his poems are still extant*. They were no less patronized by his favourites and chief officers. His chancellor, William Bishop of Ely, is expressly mentioned to have invited Singers and Minstrels from France, whom he loaded with reward; and they in return celebrated him as the most accomplished poet of his time. The high distinction and regard, although confirmed perhaps in the first instance to Poets and Songsters of the French nation, must have had a tendency to do honour to poetry and song among all his subjects, and to encourage the cultivation of these arts among the natives; as the indulgent favour shown by the monarch, or his great courtiers to the Provencal Troubadour, or Norman Rynour, would naturally be imitated by their inferior vassals to the English Glemann or Minstrel. At more than a century after the conquest, the national distinctions must have begun to decline, and both the Norman and English languages would be heard in the houses of the great (U 3); so that probably about this era, or soon after, we are to date that remarkable intercommunication and exchange of each other's compositions, which we discover to have taken place at some early period between the French and English Minstrels; the same set of phrases, the same species of characters, incidents, and adventures, and often the same identical stories, being found in the old metrical romances of both nations (V).

The distinguished service which Richard received from one of his own minstrels in rescuing him from his cruel and tedious captivity, is a remarkable fact, which ought to be recorded for the honour of poets and their art. This fact I shall relate in the following words of an ancient writer.

* The Englishmen were more than a whole yeare without bearing any tydings of their king, or in what place he was kept prisoner. He had trained up in

* See a pathetic song of his in Mr. Walpole's Catalogue of Royal Authors, vol. i. p. 5. The reader will find a translation of it into modern French, in Hist. Literaire des Troubadours, 1797, 3 tom. p. 12mo. See vol. i. p. 58, where some more of Richard's poetry is translated. In Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. ii. p. 238, is a poetical version of it in English.

+ Mons. Favine's Theatre of Honour and Knighthood, translated from the French. Lond. 1623. fol. tom. ii. p. 49. An elegant relation of the same event (from the French of Prevost, Fauchet's Recueil, &c.) may be seen in "Miscellanea in prose and verse, by Anna Williams, Lond. 1706," 4to. p. 46.—It will excite the reader's admiration to be informed, that most of the pieces of that collection were composed under the disadvantage of a total depravation of sight.
his court a Rimer or Minstrell*, called Blondell de Nesle : who (so saith the manuscript of old Poeties, and an ancients manuscript French Chronicle) being so long without the sight of his lord, his life seemed witherose to him, and he became confounded with melancholy. Knowne it was, that he came backe from the Holy Land; but none could tell in what countrey he arrived. Whereat this Blondel, resolving to solace himself, went to a townet (by good hap) neere to the castell where his master King Richard was kept. Of his host he demanded to whom the castell appertained, and the host told him, that it belonged to the Duke of Austria. Then he enquired whether there were any prisoners therein detained or no; for always he made such secret questionings wheresoever he came. And the host gave answer, there was one onely prisoner, but he knew not what he was, and yet he had bin detained there more then the space of a yeere. When Blondel heard this, he wrought such meanes, that he became acquainted with them of the castell, as Minstrels doe easily win acquaintance any where: but see the king he could not, neither understand that it was he. One day he sat directly before a window of the castell where King Richard was kept prisoner, and began to sing a song in French, which King Richard and Blondel had some time composed together. When King Richard heard the song, he knew it was Blondel that sung it: and when Blondel paused at halfe of the song, the king 'began the other half and compleat it.' Thus Blondel won knowledge of the king his master, and returning home into England, made the barons of the countrie acquainted where the king was." This happened about the year 1193.

The following old Provençal lines are given as "the very original song"; which I shall accompany with an imitation offered by Dr. Burney, ii. 237.

* Favine's words are, "Jongleur appelé Blondiaux de Nesle." Paris, 1529, 4to, p. 1106. But Fauchet, who has given the same story, thus expresses it, "Or ce roy ayant nomme a son poete, plusieurs Blondiaux de Nesle, des ancients Poëtes Français."—He is however said to have been another Blondel, not Blondel (or Blondiaux) de Nesle, of the same age as the monarch of this story.

† This the Author calls in another place, "An ancient MS. of old Poeties, written about these very times."—From this MS. Favine gives a good account of the taking of Richard by the Duke of Austria, who sold him to the Emperor. As for the MS. chronicle, it is evidently the same that supplied Fauchet with this story. See his "Recueil de l'Origine de la Langue et Poësie Française. Ryme, et Romans," &c. Par. 1581.

§ C. R. Manenret accointent legereentum." Favine. Fauchet expresses it in the same manner.

I give this passage corrected, as the English translator of Favine's book appeared here to have mistaken the original:—Seil. "Et quant Blond eut dit la moitie de la Chanson, le roy Richard se prist a dire l'autre moitie et l'acheva." Favine, p. 1106. Fauchet has also expressed it in nearly the same words. Recueil, p. 53.

V. In a little romance or novel, entitled, "La Tour Tenebreuse, et les Jours Lamineux, Contes Anglois, accompagniez d'histoires, et tirez d'une ancienne chronique composée par Jean de la Tour Tenebreuse, et Coeur de Lion, Roy d'Angleterre," &c. Paris 1755, 12mo., the ancient author has added another song of Blondel de Nesle, as also a copy of the song written by King Richard, and published by Mr. Johnson, "Faints et Flora," p. 136. The Editor has given another song of Blondel de Nesle, as also a copy of the song written by King Richard, and published by Mr. Johnson, "Faints et Flora," p. 136. The prose idees of the ancient Minstrel have been taken from the conduct of Dutton, (this steward,) a gallant youth, who was also his son-in-law. The Welsh, alarmed at the approach of this rouble, sup-

* The words of the original, viz. "Citharisator bono joco imus in Gestis antiquissimo valerius partis," according to the precise idees of the ancient Minstrel. See note (V. 2) That Gestia was appropriated to romantic stories, see note (1) Part IV (1).

† See Dugdale, Bar. i. 42, 191. who places it: after 13 John, A. D. 1212. See also Plot's Statoiue, Camden's Britann. (Cheshire.) posing them to be a regular body of armed and disciplined veterans, instantly raised the siege and retired."

For this good service Ranulph is said to have granted to De Lacy, by charter, the patronage and authority over the Minstrels and the lower inferior people: who, retaining to himself that of the lower artificers, conferred on Dutton the jurisdiction of the Minstrels and Harlots*; and under the descendants of this family the Minstrels enjoyed certain privileges, and protection for many ages. For even so late as the reign of Elizabeth, when this profession had fallen into such discredit that it was considered in law as a nuisance, the Minstrels under the jurisdiction of the family of Dutton, are expressly excepted out of all acts of parliament made for their suppression; and have continued to be so excepted ever since (W).

The ceremonies attending the exercise of this jurisdiction are thus described by Dugdale, as handed down to his time, viz. "That at midsummer fair there, all the Minstrels of that country resorting to Chester do attend the heir of Dutton, from his lodging to St. John's Church, (he being then accompanied by many gentlemen of the country,) one of the most ancient and finest images in the church of his arms depicted on taffeta; the rest of his followers proceeding (two and two) and playing on their several sorts of musical instruments. And after divine service ended, give the like attendance on him back to his lodging; where a court being kept by his [Mr. Dutton's] steward, and all the Minstrels formally called, certain orders and laws are usually made for the better government of that society, with penalties on those who transgress.

In the same reign of King John we have a remarkable instance of a Minstrel, who to his other talents superadded the character of soothsayer, and by his skill in drugs and medicated potions was able to rescue a knight from imprisonment. This occurs in Leland's Narrative of the Gestes of Guinevere (or Warren) and his sons, which he "excerptid owte of an old Englishe boke yn rymer," and is as follows:

Whittington Castle in Shropshire, which together with its surroundings the most excellent and noble part of the new kingdom of England, and which was the residence of our Saxon kings, tells us, at least, something of the history of this country. Here the Minstrel was wont to keep his court, and to keep a great store of his kind, who, as they lived in the castle, and were paid by the king, were engaged in his service, and performed their duties with the greatest fidelity and punctuality. This custom continued until the time of King Richard the Third, when he removed the court to Windsor, and the Minstrels were dismissed from their places in the castle.

V. The Harper, or Minstrel, was so necessary an attendant on a royal personage, that Prince Edward (afterwards King Edward I.) in his crusade to the Holy Land, in 1271, was not without his Harper: who must have been officially very near his person; as we are told by a contemporary historian, that, in the attempt to assassinate that heroic prince, when he had wrested the poisoned knife out of the Saracen's hand, and killed him with his own weapon; the attendants, who had stood apart while he was whispering to their master, hearing the struggle, ran to his assistance, and one of them, to wit his Harper, seizing a tripod or trestle, struck the assassin on the head and beat out his brains. And though the prince blamed him for striking the man after he was dead, yet his near access shows the respectable situation of this officer; and his affectionate zeal should have induced Edward to entreat his brethren the Welsh Bardis afterwards with more lenity.

* See the ancient record in Blount's Law Dictionary. (Art. Minstrel.)
- Leland's Collectanea, vol. i. pages 261, 266, 267.
* This old feudal custom of marryng an heir to the knight who should vanquish all his opponents in solemn contest, &c. appears to be burlesqued in the Tournament of Tonhetam, as well observed by the learned author. of Remarks, &c. in Gent. Mag. for July, 1794, p. 613. + "John, sun to King Henry, and Fulke sole at variance at Chester [r. Cheaste]; and John brake Fulke [s] hat with the King, and there Fulke gave him such a blow, that he had almost killid hym." (Lod. Coll i. p. 264.) A curious picture of courtly manners in that age! Notwithstanding this next paragraph, that King Henry dubbid Fulke & 3 of his brethren Knighth at Winchester." Ibid.

no gracious answer, renounced their allegiance and fled into Bretagne. Returning into England after various conflicts, "Fulco resorted to one John of Raunpayne, a Sothsayuer and Jocular and Minstryle, and made hym his spy to Morice at Whittington." The same prince, in the next character we have already seen, and John so well availed himself of them, that in consequence of the intelligence which he doubtless procured, " Fulco and his brethren laide waite for Morice, as he went toward Salesbyry, and Fulco ther woundid hym : and Bracy," a knight who was their friend and assistant, " cut of Morice[s] hdde." This Sir Bracy being in a subsequent encounter wounded, was taken and brought to King John; from whose vengeance he was however rescued by this notable Minstrel; for "John Ranmpayn founde the meane to cast them, that kepte Bracy, into a deadly slepe ; and so he and Bracy cam to Fulco to Whittington," which on the death of Morice had been restored to him by the Prince of Wales. As no further mention occurs of the Minstrel, I might here conclude this narrative; but I shall just add that Fulco was obliged to flee into France, where, assuming the name of Sir Amice, he distinguished himself in just war, and for several years, after various roman- tic adventures by sea and land, was successful in a style of chivalry rescued " certeyne ladies owt of prison;" he finally obtained the king's pardon, and the quiet possession of Whittington Castle.

In the reign of King Henry III., we have mention of Master Ricard the King's Harper, to whom in his thirty-sixth year (1292) that monarch gave not only forty shillings and a pipe of wine, but also a pipe of wine to Beatrice his wife*. The title of Magister, or Master, given to this Minstrel deserves notice, and shows his respectable situation.

* "Accrentes ad hanc Miniss vi ejus, qui a longe susterunt, inuenerrunt eum [seil. Nuntium] in terra moruem, et ap prehendit unus eorum tripodier, scilicet Cithareda susa, & percussit eum in capitae, et effundit cerebrum ejus. Incravpitque eum Edwards quod hominem mortuum percuterit." Ibid. These Ministri must have been upon a very confidential footing, as it appears above in the same chapter, that they had been made masters of all the secrets of the letters which the assassin had delivered to the prince from his master.
Whatever was the extent of this great monarch’s severity towards the professors of music and of song in Wales; whether the executing by martial law such of them as fell into his hands was only during the heat of conflict, or was continued afterwards with more systematic rigour;* yet in his own court the Minstrels appear to have been highly favoured: for when, in 1306, he conferred the order of knighthood on his son and many others of the young nobility, a multitude of Minstrels were introduced to invite and induce the new knights to make some military vow (X). And under the succeeding reign of King Edward II., such extensive privileges were claimed by these men, and by dissolve persons assuming their character, that it became a matter of public grievance, and was obliged to be reformed by an express regulation in A. D. 1315 (Y). Notwithstanding which, an incident is recorded in the extenuation, how that Minstrels still retained the liberty of entering at will into the royal presence, and had something peculiarly splendid in their dress. It is thus related by Stow (Z).

"In the year 1316, Edward the Second did solemnize his feast of Pentecost at Westminster, in the great hall; where sitting royally at the table with his peers about him, there entered a woman adorned like a Minstrel, sitting on a great horse trod as Minstrels then used; who rode round about the table, shewing pastime; and at length came up to the king’s table, and laid before him a letter, and forthwith turning her horse saluted every one and departed."—The subject of this letter was a remonstrance to the king on the favours heaped by him on his minions, to the neglect of his knights and faithful servants.

The privileged character of a Minstrel was employed on this occasion, as sure of gaining an easy admittance; and a female the rather deputed to assume it, that, in case of detection, her sex might disarm the king’s resentment. This is offered on a supposition that she was not a real Minstrel; for there should seem to have been women of this profession (A a), as well as of the other sex; and no accomplishment is so constantly attributed to females, by our ancient bards, as their singing to, and playing on, the harp (A 2).

In the fourth year of King Richard II., John of Gaunt erected at Tutbury in Staffordshire, a court of Minstrels, similar to that annually kept at Chester, and which, like a court-leet or court baron, had a legal jurisdiction, with full power to receive suit and service from the men of this profession within five neighbouring counties, to enact laws, and determine their controversies; and to apprehend and arrest such of them as should refuse to appear at the said court annually held on the 16th of August. For this they had a charter, by which they were empowered to appoint a King of the Minstrels with four officers to preside over them (B b). These were every year elected with great ceremony; the whole form of which, as observed in 1680,* is described by Dr. Plot:† in whose time however they appear to have lost their singing talents, and to have confined all their skill to "wind and string music."

The Minstrels seem to have been in many respects upon the same footing as the heralds: and the King of the Minstrels, like the king at arms, was both here and on the Continent an usual officer in the courts of princes. Thus we have in the reign of King Edward I., a mention of a King Robert and others. And in 16 Edward III. is a grant to William de Morley "the King’s Minstrel, styled Roy de Norbolt," of houses which had belonged to another king, John le Boteler (B b 2). Rymer hath also printed a licence granted by King Richard II. in 1387, to John Caum, the King of his Minstrels, to pass the seas, recommending him to the protection and kind treatment of all his subjects and allies.

In the subsequent reign of King Henry IV. we meet with a reference or allusion relating to the Minstrels in England, but we find in the Statute Book a severe law passed against their brethren the Welsh Bards; whom our ancestors could not distinguish from their own Riumors Minstralls; for by these names they describe them (B b 5). This act plainly shews, that far from being extirpated by the rigorous policy of King Edward I., this order of men were still able to alarm the English government, which attributed to them "many diseases and mischiefs in Wales," and prohibited "their maintaining and distributions."

When his heroic son King Henry V. was preparing his great voyage for France, in 1415, an express order was given for his Minstrels, fifteen in number to attend him: and eighteen are afterwards mentioned, to each of whom he allowed xii d. a day, when that sum must have been of more than ten times the value it is at present. Yet when he entered London in triumph after the battle of Agincourt, he, from a principle of humility, slighted the pageants and verses which were prepared to hail his return; and, as he himself said, "he would not suffer "any ditties to be made and song by Minstrels, of his glorious victory; for that he would whollie have the praise and thanks altogether given to God" (B b 4). But this did not proceed from any disregard for the professors of music or of song; for at the feast of Pentecost, which he celebrated in 1416, having the

* See Gray’s Ode; and the Hist. of the Gwedir Family in "Miscellaneies by the Hon. Daines Barrington," 1781, 4to. p. 386; who in the Laws, &c. of this monarch could find no instances of severity against the Welsh. See his observations on the Statutes, 4to. 4th. edit. p. 338.
† Hist. of Staffordshire, ch. 16, § 69—76, p. 433 et seqq, of which see Extracts in Sir J. Hawkins’s Hist. of Music, vol. ii. p. 64; and Dr. Barneby’s Hist. vol. ii. p. 290 et seqq.
‡ N. B. The barbarous division of ball-running was no part of the original institution, &c. as is fully proved by the Rev. Dr. Pegge, in Archaeologia, vol. ii. no. xiii. page 86. * See the charge given by the Steward, at the time of the election, in Plot’s Hist. ubi supra; and in Hawkins, p. 67. Barneby, p. 365—4.
§ So among the Heralds Norrey was anciently styled Roy d’Armes de North. (Anstis, ii. 360.) And the Kings at Arms in general were originally called Reyes Heraldorum, (Ibid. p. 392,) as these were Reges Ministrallorum.
💰 See his article, sub anno 1414 p. 1170. He also gives this other instance of the king’s great munificence, "that he would not suffer his helmet to be carried with him, and shewed to the people, that they might behold the diates and cuites which were in the same, of the said days and attire as hee received the daye of the battell." Ibid. Vid. T. de Elyonam, c. 59, p. 72.

The prohibition against vain and secular songs would probably not include that inserted in Series the Second Book I. No. V., which would be considered as a hymn. The original verses in English Songs for three and four Voices, * and in Dr. Barneby’s History of Music, ii. p. 384.
Emperor and the Duke of Holland for his guests, he ordered rich gowns for sixteen of his Minstrels, of which the particulars are preserved by Rymer*. And having before his death orally granted an annuity of one hundred shillings to each of his Minstrels, the grant was confirmed in the first year of his son, King Henry VI. A.D. 1423, and payment ordered out of the Exchequer.

The unfortunate reign of King Henry VI., affords no occurrences respecting our subject; but in his 34th year, A.D. 1456, we have in Rymer a commission for impressing boys or youths, to supply vacancies by death among the King's Minstrels: in which it is expressly directed that they shall be elegant in their limbs, as well as instructed in the Minstrel art, wherever they can be found, for the solace of his majesty.

In the following reign, King Edward IV., in his 9th year, 1469,) upon a complaint that certain rude husbandmen and artificers of various trades had assumed the title and livery of the King's Minstrels and under that colour and pretence had collected money in diverse parts of the kingdom, and committed other disorders, the King grants to Walter Haliday, Marshal, and to seven others his own Minstrels whom he names, a charter, by which he creates, or rather restores, a fraternity or perpetual gild (such as, he understands, the brothers and sisters of the fraternity of Minstrels had in times past) to be governed by a Marshall appointed for life, and by two Wardens to be chosen annually; who are empowered to admit brothers and sisters into the said gild, and are authorized to examine the pretensions of all such as affected to exercise the Minstrel profession; and to regulate, govern, and punish them throughout the realm (those of Chester excepted).—This seems to have some resemblance to the Earl Marshal's court among the heralds, and is another proof of the great affability and resemblance which the Minstrels bore to the members of the College of Arms.

It is remarkable that Walter Haliday, whose name occurs as a Marshal in the foregoing charter, had been retained in the service of the two preceding monarchs, King Henry V.] and VIE. Nor is this the first time he is mentioned as Marshal of the King's Minstrels, for in the third year of this reign, 1464, he had a grant from King Edward of 10 marks per annum during life, directed to him with that title.

But besides their Marshal we have also in this reign mention of a Sergeant of the Minstrels, who upon a particular occasion was able to do his royal master a singular service, wherein his confidential situation and ready access to the king at all hours is very apparent: for "as he [King Edward IV.] was in the north contrary in the moneth of September, as he lay in his bedde, one namid Alexander Carlile, that was Saruant of the Mynstrells, cam to him in grete haste, and babde hym uryse for he hadde ene-nyes cummynf for to take him, the which were within vi. or vii. mylys, of the which tydinges the king gretely marveyled, &c." This happened in the year 1469, wherein the King granted an annuity of six shillings to the bachelor of arts, who had confirmed the charter for the fraternity or gild above mentioned; yet this Alexander Carlile is not one of the eight Minstrels to whom that charter is directed.

The same charter was renewed by King Henry VIII. in 1520, to John Gilman, his then marshal, and to seven others his Minstrels: and on the death of Gilman, he granted in 1529 this office of Marshal of his Minstrels to Hugh Wodehouse, whom I take to have borne the office of his serjeant over them].

VI. In all the establishments of royal and noble households, we find an ample provision made for the Minstrels; and their situation to have been both honourable and lucrative. In proof of this it is sufficient to refer to the household book of the Earl of Northumberland, A.D. 1512 (C c). And the rewards they received so frequently recur in ancient writers that it is unnecessary to crowd the page with them here.

The name of Minstrel seems however to have been gradually appropriated to the musician only, especially in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; yet we occasionally meet with applications of the term in its more enlarged meaning, as including the Singer, if not the composer, of heroic or popular rhymes*.

In the time of King Henry VIII., we find it to have been a common entertainment to hear verses recited, or moral speeches learned for that purpose by a set of men who got their livelihood by repeating them, and who intruded without ceremony into all companies; not only in taverns, but in the houses of the nobility themselves. This we learn from Erasmus, whose argument led him only to describe a species of these men who did not sing their compositions; but the others that did, enjoyed, without doubt, the same privileges (D d).

For even long after, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, it was usual "in places of assembly" for the company to be "desirous to hear of old adventures and valiancies of noble knights in times past, as those of King Arthur, and his knights of the round table, Sir Bevys of Southampton, Guy of Warwick and others like" in "short and long metres, and by breaches or divisions, [sc. Figs]* to be more commodiously sung to the harpe" as the reader may be informed by a courtev writere, in 1589+. Who himself had "written for pleasure a little briefe romance

---

† Rymer, xi. 642.
‡ Ibid. xii. 705.
§ Rymer, tom. xiv. 2. 93.
¶ So I am inclined to understand the term Serviens master Hugio Wodehous, in the original grant. (See Rymer ubi supra.) It is needless to observe that Serviens expressed a serjeant as well as a servant. If this interpretation of Serviens be allowed, it will account for his placing Wodehouse at the head of his gild, although he had not been one of the eight minstrels who had had the general direction. The Serjeant of his Minstrels, we may presume, was next in dignity to the Marshal, although he had no share in the government of the gild.
∥ See below, and note (G g).
* See vol. ii. page 174.
or histori cal ditty ... of the Isle of Great Britain" in order to contribute to such entertainment. And he subjoins this caution: "Such as have not premonition hereof," (viz. that his poem was written in short metre, &c. to be sung to the harp in such places of assembly,) "and consideration of the causes alledged, would peradventure reproove and disgrace every romance, or short historicall ditty, for that they be not written in long meeters or verses Alexandrins," which constituted the prevailing versification among the poets of that age, and which no one now can endure to read.

And that the recital of such romances sung to the harp was at that time the delight of the common people, we are told by the same writer, who mentions that "common rimer," were fond of using rimes at short distances, "in small and popular musickes song by these Cantabnanqui" [the said com- mon rimer] "upon benches and barrel heads," &c. "or word by word Haryers" or such like Taverne Minstrels that give a fit of mirth for a groat; and their matter being for the most part stories of old time, as the tale of Sir Topas, the reportes of Bevis of Southampton, Guy of Warwick, Adam Bell, and Clynome of the Clough, and such other old romances, or historicall rhymes," &c. "also they be used in carols and roundes, and such light or fasci- vious poems, which are commonly more commo- diously uttered by these buttons, or vices in places, then by any other people." Such were the rimes of Skelton ( usurping the name of a Poet Laureat) being in deede but a rude railing rimer, and all his doings ridiculous.

But although we find here that the Minstrels had lost much of their dignity, and were sinking into contempt and neglect: yet that they still sustained a character far superior to any thing we can conceive at present of the singers of old ballads, I think, may be inferred from the following representation.

When Queen Elizabeth was entertained at Killingworth Castle by the Earl of Leicester in 1575, among the many devices and pageants which were contrived for her entertainment, one of the personages introduced was to have been that of an ancient Minstrel; whose appearance and dress are so minutely described by a writer there present; and gives us so distinct an idea of the character, that I shall quote the passage at large.

"A person very meet seemed he for the purpose, of a xlv years old, apparelled partly as he would himself. His cap off; his head seemly rounded tonsterwise; fair kenned, that with a sponge daintily dipt in a little capon's grease was finely smoothed, to make it shine like a mallard's wing. His beard smugely shaven: and yet his shirt after the new trink, with ruffs fair starched, sleeked and glistering like a pair of new shoes, marshalled in good order with a setting stick, and strut, that every ruff stood up like a wafer. A side [i. e. long] gown of Kendal green, after the freshness of the year now, gathered at the neck with a narrow gorget, fastened afore with a white clasp and a keeper close up to the chin; but easily, for heat to undo when he list. Seemly begirt in a red caddis girdle: from that a pair of capped Sheffield knives hanging a two sides. Out of his bosom drawn forth a lappet of his napkin* edged with a blue lace, and marked with a true love, a heart, and a D for Damian, for he was but a bat- chelor yet.

"His gown had side [i. e, long] sleeves down to mid-leg, slit from the shoulder to the hand, and lined with white cotton. His doublet-sleeves of black worsted: upon them a pair of poynets of tawny chamolet laced along the wrist with blue threaden points, a wealt towards the hand of fustian- a-napes. A pair of red leather stocks. A pair of pumps on his feet, with a cross cut at the toes for corns: not new indeed, yet cleanly blackt with soot, and shining as a sloining horn.

"About his neck a red riband suitable to his girdle. His harp a pair of crutches dependent before him. His wrast tyed to a green lace and hanging by. Under the gorget of his gown a fair flaggon chain (pewter,) for silver, as a Squire Minstrel of Middlesex, that tavelled the country this summer season, unto fairs and worshipful mens houses. From his chain hung scuttleon, with metal and colour, resplendant upon his breast, of the ancient arms of Islington."

This Minstrel is described as belonging to that village. I suppose such as were retained by noble families were the arms of their patrons hanging down by garter chain as a kind of badge. From the expression of Squire Minstrel above, we may conclude there were other inferior orders, as Yeomen
Minstrels, or the like.

This Minstrel, the author tells us a little below, "after three lowly courtesies, cleared his voice with a "hem . . . . and . . . . wiped his lips with the hollow of his hand for 'filling his napkin, tempered a string or two with his wrest, and after a little warbling on his harp for a prelude, came forth with a solemn song, warranted for every out of King Arthur's acts, &c."

"This song the reader will find and printed in this work.

Towards the end of the sixteenth century this class of men had lost all credit, and were sunk so low in the public opinion, that in the 39th year of Elizabeth*, a statute was passed by which "Minstrels, wandering abroad," were included among "rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars," and were adjudged to be pu-

* i. e. bankrcherif. So in Shakspear's Othello, passim.
† Perhaps, points.
‡ The key, or screw, with which he tuned his harp.
§ The reader will remember that this was not a real Minstrel, but only one personating that character; his ornaments therefore were only such as outwardly represented those of a real Minstrel.
¶ As the House of Northumberland had anciently three Minstrels attending on them in their castles in Yorkshire, so they still retain three in their service in Northumberland, who wear the badge of the family, (a silver crescent on the right arm,) and are thus distributed, viz. One for the barony of Prudhoe, and two for the barony of Rothbury. These attend the court leets and fair held for the lord, and pay their annual suit and service at Alnwick Castle; their instruments being the ancient Northumberloid bagpipe (very different in form and execution from that of the Scots; being smaller, and blown, not with the breath, but with a small pair of bellows).

This with many other venerable customs of the ancient Lord Percy, was revived by their illustrious representatives
the late Duke and Duchess of Northumberland.

nished as such. This act seems to have put an end to the profession (E 2).

VII. I cannot conclude this account of the ancient English Minstrels, without remarking that there are most of them represented to have lived in the North of England, and that they have described for "sympathonic harmony" or singing "in two parts, the one murmuring in the base, and the other warbling in the acute or treble." (I use Dr. Burney's Version, vol. ii. p. 108.) This he describes, as practised by their very children from the cradle; and he derives it from the Danes (So Duci signifies in our old writers) and Norwegians, who long overran and in effect new-peopled the Northern parts of England, where alone this manner of singing prevailed. (Vide Cambria Descriptio, cap. 13, and in Burney ibi supra.—Giraldus is probably right as to the origin or derivation of this practice, for the Danish and Iceländic Scalds had carried the arts of Poetry and Singing to great perfection at the time the Danish settlements were made in the North. And it will also help to account for the superior skill and fame of our northern Minstrels and Harpers afterwards; who had preserved and transmitted the arts of their Scaldic ancestors. See Northern Antiquities, vol. i. c. 13, p. 386, and Five Pieces of Runic Poetry, 1763, 8vo.—Compare the original passage in Giraldus, as given by Sir John Hawkins, t. 498; and by Dr. Burney, ii. 108, who are both at a loss to account for this peculiarity, and therefore doubt the fact. The eretic of Giraldus, which hath been attacked by some partial and bigoted antiquaries, the reader will find defected in the learned and curious work, "Antiquities of Ireland, by Edward Ledwich, LL. D. &c. Dublin,1790," 4to, p. 207 & seqq.

This line being quoted from memory, and given as old Scottish Poetry, now is usually printed, would have been readily corrected by the copy published in "Scottish Songs, 1714," 2 vols, 12mo, i. p. 207, thus, (though apparently corrupted from the Scottish Idiom.)

"Live you upo' the Border" had not all confidence been destroyed by its being altered in the "Historical Essay" prefixed to that publication (p. cx.) to "Ye live upo' the Border." the better to favour a position, that many of the pipers "might live upon the border, for the convenience of attending fairs, &c. in both kingdoms." But whoever is acquainted with that part of England, knows that on the English frontier reside mountains and barrens, wastes reach almost across the island, scarcely inhabited by any but solitary shepherds; many of whom durst not venture into the opposite border on account of the ancient fires and subsequent disputes concerning the Debatable Lands, which separated the boundaries of the two kingdoms, as well as the estates of the two great families of Percy and Douglas; till these disputes were settled, not many years since, by arbitration between the present Lord Douglas and the late Duke and Duchess of Northumberland.

metropolis must have been ever the scene of novelty and refinement, the northern countries, as being most distant, would preserve their ancient manners longest, and of course the old poetry, in which those manners are peculiarly described.

The reader will observe in the more ancient ballads of this collection, a cast of style and measure very different from that of contemporary poets of a higher class; many phrases and idioms, which the Minstrels seem to have appropriated to themselves, and a very remarkable licence of varying the accent of words at pleasure, in order to humour the flow of the verse, particularly in the rhymes; as

"Country harper battled morning
Lady singer damsel loving,
Instead of country, lady, harper, singer, &c.—This liberty is but sparingly assumed by the classical poets of the same age; or even by the latter composers of heroic ballads; I mean, by such as professedly wrote for the press. For it is to be observed, that so long as the Minstrels subsisted, they seem never to have designed their rhymes for literary publication, and probably never committed them to writing themselves; what copies are preserved of them were perhaps taken down from their mouths. But as the old Minstrels gradually wore out, a new race of ballad-writers succeeded, an inferior sort of minor poets, who wrote narrative songs merely for the press. Instances of both may be found in the reign of Elizabeth. The two latest pieces in the genuine strain of the old minstrelsy that I can discover, are No. III. and IV. of Book III. Series the First. Lower than these I cannot trace the old mode of writing.

The old Minstrel ballads are in the northern dialect, abound with antique words and phrases, are extremely incorrect, and run into the utmost license of metre; they have also a romantic wildness, and are in the true spirit of chivalry. The other sort are written in exacter measure, have a low or subordinate correctness, sometimes bordering on the insipid, yet often well adapted to the pathetic: these are generally in the southern dialect, exhibit a more modern phraseology, and are commonly descriptive of more modern manners.—To be sensible of the difference between them, let the reader compare in Series the First, No. III. of Book III, with No. XI. of Book II.

Towards the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign (as is mentioned above) the genuine old minstrelsy seems to have been extinct, and thenceforth the ballads that were produced were wholly of the latter kind, and these came forth in such abundance, that in the reign of James I. they began to be collected into little miscellanies, under the name of garlands, and at length to be written purposely for such collections (F f 2).

P.S. By way of Postscript, should follow here the discussion of the question whether the term Minstrels was applied in English to Singers, and Composers of Songs, &c., or confined to Musicians only. But it is reserved for the concluding note (G g).
NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS REFERRED TO IN THE FOREGOING ESSAY.

(A) The Minstrels, &c. The word Minstrel does not appear to have been in use here before the Norman Conquest; whereas, it had long before that time been adopted in France."—MINESTREL, so early as the eighth century, was a title given to the Maestro di Capella of King Pepin, the father of Charles magne; and afterwards to the Croyinac, or leader of any band of musicians. [Vid. Burney's Hist. of Music, ii. 268.] This term menestrel, menestrier, was thus expressed in Latin, ministellus, ministrellus, ministrallus, menestrellus, &c. [Vid. Gloss. Du Cange et Supplem.]

Menage derives the French words above mentioned from ministerialis, or ministeriarius, barbarous Latin terms, used in the middle ages to express a workman or artificer, (still called in Languedoc ministral,) as if these men were styled Artificers or Performers by way of excellence. [Vid. Dict. Etym.] But the origin of the name is given, perhaps more truly, by Du Cange: "MINISTELLI, . . . quos vulgo menestrex vel menestriers appellamus, quod minoribus alias ministris accenserent." [Gloss. iv. p. 769.] Accordingly, we are told, the word "minister" is sometimes used "pro ministrellus." [Ib.]

and an instance is produced which I shall insert at large in the next paragraph.

Minstrels sometimes assisted at divine service, as appears from the record of the 9th of Edw. IV. quoted above in p. xix. by which Haliday and others are erected into a perpetual gild, &c. See the original in Rymer, xi. 642. By part of this record it is recited to be their duty, "to pray (exorare: which it is presumed they did by assisting in the chant, and musical accompaniment, &c.) in the king's chapel, and particularly for the departed souls of the king and queen when they shall die, &c."—The same also appears from the passage in the Supplem. to Du Cange, alluded to above. "Minister . . . pro ministrellus joculator,"—Vetus Cerimoniale MS. B.M.

* The Anglo-Saxon and primary English name for this character was Gleman [see below, note (I) sect. 1.] so that, wherever the term Minstrel is in these pages applied to it before the Conquest, it must be understood to be only by anticipation. Another early name for this profession in English was Jugler, or Jocular. Lat. Joculator. [See p. 15, as also note (V) 2 and note (Q). To prevent confusion, we have chiefly used the more general word Minstrel: which (at the author of the Observ. on the Statutes hath suggested to the Editor) might have been originally derived from a diminutive of the Lat. Minister, scil. Ministrallus, Ministrallus.

duarate Tolos. "Item, etiam congregabuntur picatores, qui debent interesse isto die in processione cum ministris seu juculatoribus: quia ipsi picatocos tenentur habere isto die juculatorum, seu minime ob honorem suum—et vadunt primi ante processionem cum ministris seu juculatoribus semper pulsantibus usque ad ecclesiam S. Stephani." [Gloss.775.]—This may, perhaps, account for the clerical appearance of the minstrels, who seem to have been distinguished by the tonsure, which was one of the inferior marks of the clerical character*. Thus Jeffery of Monmouth, speaking of one who acted the part of a minstrel, says, "Rasit capillos suos et barbam" (see note K.). Again, a writer in the reign of Elizabeth, describing the habit of an ancient minstrel, speaks of his head as "rounded Tonasterwise," (which I venture to read tonsure-wise), "his beard smugly shaven." See above, p. xxl.

It must, however be observed, that notwithstanding such clerical appearance of the minstrels, and though they might be sometimes countenanced by such of the clergy as were of more relaxed morals, their sportive talents rendered them generally obnoxious to the more rigid ecclesiastics, and to such of the religious orders as were of more severe discipline; whose writings commonly abounded with heavy complaints of the great encouragement shown to those men by the princes and nobles, and who can seldom afford them a better name than that of s度uce, famelici, nebulones, &c. of which innumerable instances may be seen in Du Cange. It was even an established order in some of the monasteries, that no minstrel should ever be suffered to enter the gates.

We have however innumerable particulars of the good cheer and great rewards given to the Minstrels in many of the Convents, which are collected by T.

* It has however been suggested to the Editor by the learned and ingenious author of "Irish Antiquities," 4to. that the ancient Monrin among the Romans had their heads and beards shaved, as is shown by Salmains in Notis ad Hist. August. Scriptores VI. Paris. 1029, fol. p. 355. So that this peculiarity had a classical origin, though it afterwards might make the Minstrels sometimes pass for Ecclesiastics, as appears from the instance given below. Dr. Burney tells us that Histriiones, and Miniri, abounded in France in the time of Charlemagne (ii. 221.) so that their profession was handed down in regular succession from the time of the Romans, and therewith some leading distinctions of their habit or appearance; yet with a change in their arts of pleasing, which latterly were most confined to singing and music.

* Yet in St. Mary's church at Beverley, one of the columns hath this inscription: "Thys Pillar made the Myn- strylls;" having its capital decorated with figures of five men in short coats; one of whom holds an instrument resembling a lute. See Sir J. Hawkins, Hist. n. 295.
NOTES ON THE FOREGOING ESSAY.

Worton, (i, 91, &c.) and others. But one instance, quoted from Wood's Hist. Antiq. Univ. Ox. i. 67. (sub an. 1224), deserves particular mention. Two itinerant priests, on a supposed of their being Mimi or Minstrels, gained admittance. But the cellarer, sacrist, and others of the brethren, who had hoped to have been entertained with their diverting arts, when they found them to be only two indigent Ecclesiastics, who could only administer spiritual consolation, and were consequently dispointed of their mirth, beat them and turned them out of the monastery. (Ibid. p. 92.) This passage furnishes an additional proof that a Minstrel might by his dress or appearance be mistaken for an Ecclesiastic.

(B) "The Minstrels use mimicry and action, and other means of diverting, &c." It is observable, that our old monkish historians do not use the words Cantator, Citharacus, Musica, or the like, to express a Minstrel in Latin, so frequently as Mimus, Histrio, Joculator, or some other word that implies gesture. Hence it might be inferred, that the Minstrels set off the various arts of the Minstrels, &c., or according to the ingenious hypothesis of Dr. Brown, united the powers of melody, poem, and dance. [See his History of the Rise of Poetry, &c.]

But indeed all the old writers describe them as exercising various arts of this kind. Joinville, in his Life of St. Lewis, speaks of some Armenian Minstrels, who were very dextrous Tumblers and Posture-masters. "Avec le Prince vinrent trois Messieurs de la Grande Hyeromenie (Armenia) ..., et avoient trois cors—Quand ils encommencenoient a corner, vous disiez que ce sont les voix de cygnes, ..., et fesoient les plus douces melodies. ... Ils fesoient trois merveilles sous, car on leur metoit une tournaille sous les piez, et tournoiroient tout debout ... Les deux tournoiroient les testes ariere, &c. [See the extract at large, in the Hon. D. Barrington's Observations on the Anc. Statutes, 4to, 2d. Edit. p. 273; omitted in the last impression.]

This may also account for that remarkable clause in the press warrant of Henry VI. "De Ministrallis proper solutam Regis providendia," by which it is required, that the boys, to be provided "in arte Ministrallatis instructos," should also be "membris naturalibus elegantes." See above pag. 19. (Observ. on the Anc. Stat. 4th Edit. p. 537.)

Although by Minstrel was properly understood, in English, one who sang to the harp, or some other instrument of music, verses composed by himself or others; yet the term was also applied by our old writers to such as profess'd either music or singing separate, and perhaps to such as practised any of the sportive arts connected with these music however being the leading idea, was at length peculiarly called Minstrelsy, and the name of Minstrel at last confined to the Musician only.

In the French language all these Arts were included under the general name of Menestrande, Menestrasde, Jonglerie, &c. [Med. Lat. Menestralium Ars, Ars Joculatoria, &c.—] On peut comprendre sous le nom de Jonglerie tout ce qui appartient aux anciennes chansonniers Provençaux, Normands, Picards, &c. Le corps de la Jonglerie etoit formé des Trouvères, ou Troubadours, qui composoient les chansons, et parmi lesquels il y avoit des Improvisateurs, comme on en trouve en Italie; des Chanteurs ou Chanteres qui executoient ou chantoient ces compositions; des Conteurs qui faisoient en vers ou en prose les contes, les recits, les histoires; des Jongleurs ou Menestrelles qui accompagnoient de leurs instruments.—L'art de ces Chanteurs ou Chansonniers, estoit nommé la Science Gaye, Gay Saber."

(Prof. Anthology Franc. 1765, Bvo. p. 17.)—See also the curious Fruchet, (Del Orig. de la Lang. Fr. p. 72, &c.) "Bien tost apres la division de ce grand empire Francois en tant de petits royaumes, duchez, et comtes, au lieu des Poetes commencerent a se faire cognostire les Trouveres, et Chanteres, Conteurs, et Jugleurs: qui sont Trouvères, Chanteurs, Conteurs, Jongleurs, ou Jugleurs, c'est à dire, Menestriers chantans avec la viue.

We see then that Jongleur, Jugleur, (Lat. Joculator Jugulator) was a peculiar name appropriated to the Minstrels. "Les Jongleurs ne faisoient que chanter les poesies sur leurs instrumentes. On les appelloit aussi Menestrels :" says Fontenelle, in his Hist. du Theat. Franc. prefixed to his Life of Cornelle.

(C) "Successors of the ancient Bards." That the Minstrels in many respects bore a strong resemblance both to the British Bards and to the Danish Skalds, appears from this, that the old Monkish writers express them all without distinction by the same names in Latin. Thus Geoffrey of Monmouth, himself a Vulgar Monk, speaking of an old pagan British king, who excelled in singing and music so far as to be esteemed by his countrymen the Patron Deity of the Bards, uses the phrase Deus Joculatorum; which is the peculiar name given to the English and French Minstrels*. In like manner, William Mahsmbury, speaking of a Danish king's assuming the profession of a Skald, expresses it by Professa Minum; which was another name given to the Minstrels in Middle Latinity. Indeed Du Cange, in his Glossary, quotes a writer, who positively asserts that the Minstrels of the middle ages were the same with the ancient Bards. I shall give a large extract from this learned glossographer, as he relates many curious particulars concerning the profession and arts of the Minstrels; whom, after the Monks, he stigmatizes by the name of Scourve; though he acknowledges their songs often tended to inspire virtue.

"Ministelli, dictator praesertim Scourve, Mimi, Joculatores": "Ejusmodi Scourvurus manus et principes non sua dixuntat ludicris oblectare, sed eorum nures variis, avorum, adeoque ipsorum principum laudibus, non sine Assensusione, cum cantilenis et musicis instrumentis demulciere...."

"Interdum etiam virorum insignium et heroum gesta, aut explicata et jocunda narratione commenrabant, aut suavi vocis inflexione, fidibusque descanlabant, quo sic dominorum, celeberrum qui his intererant ludicris, nobilium animos ad virtutem capessendas, et summorem virorum imitatione recenderent: quod fuit olim apud Callos Barderum ministerium, ut auctor est Tacitus. Neque enim alios a Ministellis, veterum Gallorum Bardos suisse pluribus probat Henricus Valesius ad 15 Ammianii.... Chronicon Bertrandi Guesclini.

"Qui vent averum des bonorum et de vaullum do illet series a la pluee et a champ
Et estre en la bataille, ainsi que fu Rollins,
Les Quatre Flis Hainon, et Charlon li plus grans,

* Vid. infra, Not. (A. a.)
† Vid. note (B) (K) (Q.)
Li dus Lions de Bourges, et Guius de Connans, Perceval li Galois, Lancelot, et Tristan, Alexandre, Artus, Godfriol li Sachans, De quo eis Menestriers font les nobles Romans.

"Nicolaus de Brui describenc solenne convivium, quo post inaugurazione aecum proceres excepit Lud. VIII. rex Francorum, ait inter ipsius convivii apparnatur, in medium prussitca Minium, qui regia laudes ad cytuarum decantavit."—

Our author then gives the lines at length, which begin thus,

"Dumque fovent genium geniali munere Bacchi, Nectare comitxito curas renovaente Lyneo Principis a facie, cithare celeberrimas arte Assurgit Minus, ars musica quem decoravit. Hic ergo chorda resonante subintuit ista: Inclyte rex regum, probatias stemmate vernan, Quem vigor et virtus extolit in aethra fana, &c."

The rest may be seen in Du Cange, who thus proceeds, "Mitto religia similia, quibus omnis patet ejusmodi Minorum et Minestrellorum cantilenas ad virtutem principum exciscates..." Id present in pagan cum incipit, dominis suis occinbant, ut martum arderum in eorum anima concipierunt: curiosodum cantum Castilem Hollandi appellat Will. Malmesb. lib. 3.—Aminimus, lib. 4, de Mira, S. Bened. c. 37. "Tanta vero illis securitas..." ut Scurram so precedere facerent, qui musicum instrumentum res fertis gestas et primor bella priscineret, quatenus his acrius incertaturn, &c."

As the writer was a monk, we shall not wonder at his calling the Minstrel, Scurrum.

This word Scurrum, or some one similar, is represented in the Glossaries as the proper meaning of Lector (Fr. Lecteur) the ancient term by which the Minstrel appears to be expressed in the Grant to Dutton, quoted above in page xxxvii. On this head I shall produce a very curious passage, which is twice quoted in Du Cange's Glossary, (sc. ad verb. Menestellus et ad verb. Lectar.)—"Philippus Mouskes in Philip. Aug. fingit Carolum M. Provinciam cimiterum Scurris et Minis suis olim donasse, indeque postea tantum in hac regione posteam numerum exercisse.

"Quar quant il buens Rois Karlemaine Ott toute mise a son demaine Provence, qui mult ert plentive De vias, de bois, d'aigue, de rive, As Lecceur as Menestrous Qui sont auques luxurieux Le donna toute et departir." (D) "The Post and the Minstrel early with us became two persons.

The word Scall comprehended both characters among the Danes, nor do I know that they had any peculiar name for either of them separate. But it was not so with the Anglo-Saxons. They called a poet Secon, and Leðþyhta: the last of these comes from Leox, a song; and the former answers to our old word Maker (Gr. Μακαρής) being derived from Seckan or Escopan, forman, faceti, fingere, creare (Ang. to shape). As for the Minstrel, they distinguished him by the peculiar appellation of Escopan, and perhaps by the more simple title of Heaspeepe, Harper: [See below, Notes (H), (I)] This last title, at least, is often given to a Minstrel by our most ancient English rhymists. See in this work series i. p. 18, &c. series ii. v. &c.

(F) "Minstrels... at the houses of the great, &c.] Du Cange affirms, that in the middle ages the courts of princes swarmed so much with this kind of men, and such large sums were expended in maintaining and rewarding them, that they often drained the royal treasuries: especially, he adds, of such as were delighted with their flattery ("præsertim qui ejusmodi Ministellorum assentationibus detractabant.") He then confirms his assertion by several passages out of monastic writers, who sharply inveigh against this extravagance. Of these I shall here select only one or two, which show what kind of rewards were bestowed on these old Songsters.

The curious reader may find a similar, though at the same time a more candid account, in that most excellent writer, Presid. Fauchet: (Recueil de la Lang. Fr. p. 73.) who says that, like the ancient Greek Aedóç, "Nos Trouveres, ainsi que ceux la, firent ces res de leurs sociétés. Poëtes (ce qu'ils appelloient Geste, venant de Gesta Latin) alloyer... par lours cours rejoyr les Princes... Remportans des grandes recompenses des seigneurs, qui bien souvent leur donnoyen jusques aux robes qu'ils avoyent vestues... et lesquelles ces Jugleours ne faisoient de porter aux autres cours, à fin d'intuer les seigneurs a pareille liberalité. Ce qui a duré si longueuent, qu'il me souvient avoir vue Marien Bardon (ja viel Menestrier d'Orleans) lequel aux festes et nocces batoit un tabouarin d'argent, semee des plaques aussi d'argent, gravees des armoiries de ceux a qui il appof a donner."—Here we see that a Minstrell sometimes performed the function of a Dancing-master.

Fontenelle even gives us to understand, that these men were often rewarded with favours of a still higher kind. "Les princesses et les plus grandes dames y joignoient souvent leurs favours. Elles estoient fort foyables contre les beaux esprits." (Hist. du Thét.) We are not to wonder then that this profession should be followed by men of the first quality, particularly the younger sons and brothers of great houses. "Tel qui par les partsage de sa famille n'avoit que la moitie ou le quart d'une des chateaux bien seigneuriales, alloit quelque temps courir le monde en rimant, et revenoit acquierir le reste de..."

* The Minstrels in France were received with great magnificence in the fourteenth century. Froissart, describing a Christmas entertainment given by the Comte de Foix, tells us, that "there were many Mynstrels, as well of Iys own as of strangers, and each of them dyed their devours in their faculties. The same day the Earl of Poix gave to Haurada and Ministrellc the som of fye hundred francs: and gave to the Duke of Tonays Mynstreles gowmes of clothe of golde turred with urnyne vashe at two hundred francs." B. iii. c. 31. Eng. Trans. Lond. 1526. (Mr. C.)
NOTES ON THE FOREGOING ESSAY.

Chateau." (Fontenelle Hist. du Théât.) We see then, that there was no improbable fiction in those ancient songs and romances, which are founded on the story of Minstrels being beloved by kings daughters, &c. and discovering themselves to be the sons of some foreign prince, &c.

(F) The honours and rewards lavished upon the Minstrels were not confined to the continent. Our own countryman Johannes Sarisburiensis (in the time of Henry II.) declaims no less than the Mons approach, against the extravagant favour shewn to these men. "Non enim more nugatorum jecur seculi in Histriones et Mimoses, et iujusmodi monstra hominum, ob famam redemptionem et distationem nominis eunfuditas opes vestras," &c. [Epist. 242*].

The Monks seem to grudge every act of munificence that was not applied to the benefit of themselves, and their convents. They therefore bestow great applause upon the Emperor Henry, who at his marriage with Agnes of Poictou, in 1014, dispossessed the poor minstrels, and sent them away empty. "Infinium Histriorum et Joculatorum multitudinem sine ebo et monebamus vacuum et momentum abhinc permiserit." (Chron. Viroziburg.) For which I doubt not but he was sufficiently stigmatized in the Songs and Ballads of those times. Vid. Du Cange, Gloss. tom. iv. p. 771, &c.

(G) "The annals of the Anglo-Saxons are scanty and defective." Of the few histories now remaining that were written before the Norman Conquest, almost all are such short and naked sketches and abridgements, giving only a concise and general relation of the more remarkable events, that scarce any of the minute circumstantial particulars are to be found in them: nor do they hardly ever descend to a description of the customs, manners, or domestic economy of their countrymen. The Saxon Chronicle, for instance, which is the best of them, and upon some accounts extremely valuable, is almost such an epitome as Lucius Florus and Eutropius have left us of the Roman history. As for Ethelward, his book is judged to be an imperfect translation of the Saxon Chronice; and the Pseudo-Asser, or Chronicle of St. Neot, is a poor defective performance. How absurd would it be then to argue against the existence of customs or facts, from the silence of such scanty records as these! Whoever would carry his researches deep into that period of history, might safely plead the excuse of a learned writer, who had particularly studied the Auto-Norman historians, "Conjecturis (licit uquam verisimili fundamentis) aliquoques indulgentius... utpote ab Historicos jeune nimir et indiligenter nos nostras tractantibus coacti... Nostri... nuda factorum memoriam demonstratio pleumque contenti, reliqua omnia, sive ob ipsarum rerum, sive meliorum literarum, sive Historiorum officii ignorantiam, fere intacta pretiuntur." Vide plura in Priorat. ad Aelf. Vitam à Spelman. Ox. 1678, fol.

But the fact itself is positively proved by the express testimony of Bede, who tells us that it was usual at festival meetings for this instrument to be handed round, and each of the company to sing to it in his turn. See his Hist. Eccles, Anglor, Lib. 4. c. 24. where speaking of their sacred poet Ceddmon, who lived in the times of the Heptarchy (ob. circ. 680) he says:—

"Nihil unquam frivoli et supervacui poemaetis facere potuit; sed ea tanummodo, quod ad religionem pertinent, religiosum ejus linguam decebat. Siquidem in habitu seculari, usque ad tempore proctoratrix ecclesiasticae constitutus, nil Cornimium aliqua vidisset. Unde nonnullum in convivio, cum esset latitium causa decreatum ut omnes per ordine cantare deberent, ille ubi appropriisque sibi citharam cernebat, surgetum ad media caenam, et egressus, ad suam dominum repedebat."

I shall now subjoin King Alfred's own Anglo-Saxon translation of this passage, with a literal interlinear English version.

1) "Nepe ne hortescant uraga, ne meler loade... He... nee... no leastings, nor idle song... of harspe... ne mayte, ac... 2) ne an... se to compose no might; but lo... only those things which... aerepsiter... beluunon... hyr... se... 3) se... se... of... religion [piety]... bel, and his then pian tongue... geaspence... r直营... Wier... he... man... in... people... became to sing... He... was the... a man... in... worldly har... se... ed he... of [secular] state set to the time in which he... of... gelspe... yo... he... nepe... many... lof... advanced age; and he... never... song... gelespopne... he... rop... in... gelespopne... learned. And... he... therefore... in... entertainment... omne... rod... blir... mingga... gesenon... when there was for merriment-sake adjudged [or decreed... he... ealle... reccolan... sun... cumbenbroenner... creed... that they all should through their turns by be heaupan... omone... he... gereah... heaupan... to the... harp... sing...;... when... he... 4) the... harp... him... he... kepe... the... to him... approach; then... he... for... shame... from... 5) he... come... to... hir... harpe... the... supper... and... home... went... to... his house. Bed. Hist. Eccle. a Smith, Cantab. 1722. fol. p. 597.

In this version of Alfred's it is observable, (1) that he has expressed the Latin word cantare, by the Anglo-Saxon words "be heaupan... sing," to the harp: as if they were synonymous, or as if this countryman had an idea of singing unaccompanied with the Harp; (2) That when Bede simply says, surgetabat a mediæ caenæ; he assigns a motive, "spar... pop... recome... arose... for... shame... that... is, either from an austerity of manners, or from his being deficient in an accomplishment, which so generally prevailed among his countrymen.

(1) "The word Glee, which peculiarly denoted their art, &c. This word Glee is derived from the
NOTES ON THE FOREGOING ESSAY.

Anglo-Saxon Elypp, [Glepp] Musica, Music, Minstrely (Somm). This is the common radix, whence arises such a variety of terms and phrases relating to the Minstrel Art, as affords the strongest internal proof, that this profession was extremely common and popular here before the Norman Conquest. Thus we have

I.

Eligman, Eligmon, Eligman, [Gleeman*] Histrio Minus, Pantomimus; all common names in Middle Latinity for a Minstrel; and Somner accordingly renders the original by a Minstrel; a Player on a Timbrel or Tabor. He adds, a Fiddler; but although the Fydbell or Fiddle was an ancient instrument, by which the Jogelar or Minstrel sometimes accompanied his song, (see Warton, i. 17) it is probable that Somner annexes here only a modern sense to the word, not having at all investigated the subject.

Hence Eligmanne ype. Orchestra vel Pulpitus. The place where the Minstrels exhibited their performances.

(2) But their most proper and expressive name was Eliphleopmen. Musicians a Minstrel; and Eliphleopmenia. Musica, Musical.

These two words include the full idea of the Minstrel character, expressing at once their music and singing, being compounded of Eliup, Musicus, Minus, a Musician, Minstrel, and Leo&, Carmen, a Song.

(3) From the above word Elipp, the profession itself was called Eligchraper, [Glig or Gleecraft.] Musica, Historia, Mimica, Cesticaliato: which Somner rightly gives in English, Minstrelsy, Mimical Cesticalation, Mummery. He also adds, Stage-playing; but here again I think he substitutes an idea too modern, induced by the word Historiana, which in Middle Latinity only signifies the Minstrel Art.

However, it should seem that both mimical gesticulation and a kind of rude exhibition of characters were sometimes attempted by the old Minstrels: But

(4) As Musical Performances was the leading idea, so

Eligopan, Cantis musicos edere; and Eligbeam, glebapeam, [Glig- or Gleo-beam].

Timpanum; a Timbrel or Tabor. (So Somm.)

Eligpan. Timpanum pulsare; and

* Gleeman continued to be the name given to a Minstrel both in England and Scotland almost as long as this order of men continued.

In De Brune's metrical version of Bishop Grossethead's Manuel de Pechete, A.D. 1303. (See Warton, i. 61) we have this,

"-----Gode men, ye shall here
When ye any Gleeman here,"

Dunbar, who lived in the same century, describing, in one of his poems, intituled, "The Daunce," what passed in the "astral region" amongst the Fyndils, says,

"Na Menstrels playit to thame, but dawt, For Gle-men thaire we haldin, out, Be day and eke by night,"

Elipp-men; Eligpindem-mon; [Glee-maiden] Tympanistria: which Somner renders a She-Minstrel; for it should seem that they had Females of this profession; one name for which was also Eligby'ne-

(5) Of congenial derivation to the foregoing, is Elipc. [Glywc]. Tibia, a Pipe or Flute.

Both this and the common radix Elypp, are with great appearance of truth derived from Junes the Icelandic Gligger, Flatus: as supposing the first attempts at music among our Gothic ancestors were from wind-instruments. Vid. Jun. Etym. Ang. V. Glee.

II.

But the Minstrels, as is hinted above, did not confine themselves to the mere exercise of their primary arts of Music and Song; and occasionally used many other modes of diverting. Hence, from the above root was derived, in a secondary sense,

(1) Eleo, and pinsum chi. Facetiae.

Elenopan, jocari; to jest, or be merry; (Somm.) and

Elopena, jocans; jesting, speaking merrily; (Somm.)

Eligman also signified Joicista, a Jester.

Eliph-ammen. [Glee-games.] joci. Which Somner renders Merriments, or merry Jests, or trick, or Sports; Camboles.

(2) Hence, again, by a common metonymy of the cause for the effect.

Elie, gaulium, alacritas, latitio, facetiae; Joy, Mirth, Gladness, Cheerfulness, Glee. [Somm.] Which last application of the word still continues, though rather in a low debasing sense.

III.

But however agreeable and delightful the various arts of the Minstrels might be to the Anglo-Saxon laity, there is reason to believe that before the Norman Conquest at least, they were not much favoured by the clergy particularly by those of monastic profession. For, not to mention that the sportive talents of these men would be considered by those austere ecclesiastics as tending to levity and licentiousness, the Pagan origin of their art would excite in the Monks an inapppropriate prejudice against it. The Anglo-Saxon Harpers and Gleemen were the immediate successors and imitators of the Scandinavian Scalds; who were the great promoters of Pagan superstition, and fomented that spirit of cruelty and outrage in their countrymen the Danes which fell with such peculiar severity on the religious and their convents.—Hence arose a third application of words derived from Elypp, Minstrelsy, in a very unfavourable sense, and this chiefly prevails in books of religion and ecclesiastic discipline. Thus

(1) Elir is Ludibrium, laughing to scorn* So in S. Basil. Regul. 11. Hr hapron him to xhipo bal-\pantë maqynge. Ludvivio habebant salutarem ejus administrationem. (10) This sense of the word was perhaps not ill-founded; for the sport of rude uncultivated minds often arises from ridicule, it is not improbable but the old Minstrels often indulged a vein of this sort, and that of no very delicate kind. So again,

* To gleeck, is used in Shakespeare, for "to make sport, to jesty" &c.
Llug-man was also used to signify Scurna, a "Saucy Jester." (Sonn.)

(2) Again, as the various attempts to please, practised by an order of men who owed their support to the public favour, might be considered by those grave censors as mean and debasing: Hence came from the same root, Llipep. Parasitus, Assentator; a Fawner, a Togger, a Parasite, a Flatterer. (Sonn.)

IV.

To return to the Anglo-Saxon word Llug; notwithstanding the various secondary senses in which this word (as we have seen above) was so early applied; yet the derivative Glees (though now chiefly used to express Merriment and Joy) long retained its first simple meaning, and is even applied by Chaucer to signify Music and Minstrelsye. (Vid. Jrn. Eym.) E. g.

"For though that the best harper upon live Would on the beste sound jolly harpe That evir was, with all his fingers five Touch nie o string, or aie o warble harpe, Were his maies pointed neir so sharpe It should melke every wight to dill To hare is gle, and of his strokes ful." Troyl. lib. ii, 1030.

Junius interprets Glees by Musica Instrumenta, in the following passages of Chaucer’s Third Boke of Fame.

"... Studen... the castell all aboutin Of all manner of Mynstrales And Jestours that tellen tales Both of wepyng and of game And of all that longeth unto fame; There heire I play on a harpe That sownded both well and sharpe Hym Orpheus full canti, And on this syde fast by Sate the harper Orion; And Eaccius; Chiron; And other harpers many one, And the Briton Glaskyrion.

After mentioning these, the greatest masters of the art, he proceeds;

"And small Harpers with her Glees Sat under them in divers seases.

* * * *

Again, a little below, the poet having enumerated the performers on all the different sorts of instruments, adds,

"There sawe I syth in other seases Playing upon other sundry Glees, Which that I cannot neven* More than starres ben in heven, &c."

Upon the above lines I shall only make a few observations:

(1) That by Jestours, I suppose we are to understand Gestours; scil. the relaters of Gests, (Lat. Gene) or stories of adventures both comic and tragical; whether true or feigned; I am inclined to add, whether in prose or verse. (Compare the record below, in marginal note subjoined to (V) 2. Of the stories in prose, I conceive we have specimens in that singular book the Gesta Romanorum, and this will account for its seemingly improper title. These were evidently what the French called Contours, or Story-tellers, and to them we are probably indebted for the first Prose Romances of chivalry: which may be considered as specimens of their manner.

(2) That the "Briton Glaskyrion," whoever he was, is apparently the same person with our famous Harper Glasserion, of whom the reader will find a tragical ballad, at page 206.—In that song may be seen an instance of what was advanced above in note (E), of the dignity of the minstrel profession, or at least of the artifice with which the Minstrels endeavoured to set off its importance.

Thus "a king’s son is represented as appearing in the character of a Harper or Minstrel in the court of another king. He wears a collar (or gold chain) as a person of illustrious rank; rides on horse-bank, and is admitted to the embraces of a king’s daughter."

The Minstrels lost no opportunity of doing honour to their art.

(3) As for the word Glees, it is to this day used in a musical sense, and applied to a peculiar piece of composition. Who has not seen the advertisements proposing a reward to him who should produce the best Catch, Canon, or Glees?

(K) "Comes from the pen of Geoffrey of Monmouth." Geoffrey’s own words are "Cum ergo alterius modi aditus [Holduphus] non haberet, rasit capillos suos et barbam &c, cultumque Joculatoris cum Cythara excit. Deinde intra castra deambularum, modulis quos in Lyra componebat, sese Cytharistan exhibebat." Galf. Monum. Hist. 40, 1308, lib. vii. c. 1.—That Joculator signifies precisely a Minstrel appears not only from this passage, where it is used as a word of like import

* Neven, i.e. name.

* Geoffrey of Monmouth is probably here describing the appearance of the Joculatorum or Minstrels, as it was in his own time. For they apparently derived this part of their dress, &c. from the Minii of the ancient Romans, who had their heads and beards shaven: (see above, p. xvi. note *) as they likewise did the minstrels, and other acts of diverting, which they superadded to the composing and singing to the harp heroic songs, &c. which they inherited from their own forefathers the bards and seers of the ancient Celtic and Gothic nations. The Longobardi had, like other northern people, brought these with them into Italy. For in the year 774, when Charlemagne entered Italy and found his passage impeded, he was met by a Minstrel of Lombardy, whose song promised him success and victory. "Contigit Joculatorum ex Longobardorum genti ad Carolum venire, et det Gemmae, et rodam in complectati somnum cantare." Tom ii. p. 2. Chron. Monast. Noval. libr. liii. cap. xx. p. 717. (T. Warton’s Hist. vol. ii. Emend. of vol. i. p. 115.)
to Citharista or Harper, (which was the old English word for Minstrel,) but also from another passage of the same is applied as equivalent to Cantor. See lib. i. cap. 22, where, speaking of an ancient (perhaps fabulous) British King, he says, “Hic omnes Cantores quoos precedens atas hauerat et in modulis et in omnibus musicis instrumentis excedebat: ut ut Deus Joculatorum veterum.”——Whatever credit is due to Geoffrey as a relater of Facts, is certainly as good authority as any for the signification of Words.

(1) “Two remarkable facts.” Both of these facts are recorded by William of Malmesbury; and the first of them, relating to Alfred, by Ingulphus also. Now Ingulphus (afterwards abbot of Croyland) was near forty years of age at the time of the Conquest *; and consequently was as proper a judge of the Saxon manners, as if he had actually written his history before that event; he is therefore to be considered as an Anti-Norman writer: so that whether the fact concerning Alfred be true or not, we are assured from his testimony, that the Joculator or Minstrel was a common character among the Anglo-Saxons. The same also may be inferred from the relation of William of Malmesbury, who outlined Ingulphus but thirty-three years †. Both these writers had doubtless recourse to innumerable records and authentic memorials of the Anglo-Saxon times which never descended down to us; their testimony therefore is too positive and full to be overthrown by the mere silence of the two or three slight Anglo-Saxon epitomes that are now remaining. Vid. note (G).

As for Asser Menevensis, who has given a somewhat more particular detail of Alfred’s actions, and yet takes no notice of the following story, it will not be difficult to account for his silence, if we consider that he was a rigid Monk, and that the Minstrels, however acceptable to the laity, were never much respected by men of the more strict monastic profession, especially before the Norman Conquest, when they would be considered as brethren of the Pagan Sæds ‡. Asser therefore might not regard Alfred’s skill in Minstrelsy in a very favourable light; and might be induced to drop the circumstance related below, as reflecting in his opinion no great honour on his patron.

The learned Editor of Alfred’s Life, in Latin, after having examined the scene of action in person, and weighed all the circumstances of the event, determines, from the whole collective evidence, that Alfred could never have gained the victory he did if he had not with his own eyes previously seen the disposition of the enemy by such a strangem as is here described. Vid. Annot. in Ælfr. Mag. Vitam, p. 33. Oxon. 1678, fol.

(M) “Alfred . . . assumed the dress and character of a “Minstrel,” “Fingerfe of Jocitatis,” assumed, &c. &c. Ingulph Hist. p. 869.—“Sub specie mini . . . ut Joculatorum professor artista.” Gul. Malmesl. i. ii. c. 4. p. 3. That both Joculator and Minus signify literally, a Minstrel, see proved in notes (B) (K) (N) (Q) &c. See also Note (G g).

Malmesbury adds, “Unius tantum fidelissimae fidebatur conscientia.” As this confidant does not appear to have assumed the disguise of a Minstrel himself, I conclude that he only appeared as the Minstrel’s attendant. Now that the Minstrel had sometimes his servant or attendant to carry his harp, and even to sing to his music, we have many instances in the old Metrical Romances, and even somberly in Monastic collection: See Sera the First, Song vi.; Series the third, Song vii. &c. Among the French and Provençal Bards, the Trouverre, or Inventor, was generally attended with his singer, who sometimes also played on the harp, or other musical instrument. “Quelque fois durant le repas d’un prince on voyoit arriver un Trouverre inconnu avec ses Menestrels ou Joulgeours, et il leur faisit chanter sur leurs harpes ou vielles les vers qu’il avoit composées. Ceux qui faisaient les Sons aussi bien que les Motets de plus les estimé.” Fontenelle Hist. du Theate.

That Alfred excelled in Music is positively asserted by Bale, who doubtless had it from some ancient MS. many of which subsisted in his time that are now lost: as also by Sir J. Spelman, who, we may conclude, had good authority for this anecdote, as he is known to have compiled his life of Alfred from authentic materials collected by his learned father: this writer informs us that Alfred “provided himself of musicians, neither common, or such as know but the practick part, but men skilful in the art itself, whose skill and service he yet further improved with his own instruction.” p 199. This proves Alfred at least to have understood the theory of music; and how could this have been acquired without practising on some instrument? we which we have seen above, note (H), was so extremely common with the Anglo-Saxons, even in much ruder times, that Alfred himself plainly tells us, it was shamefull to be ignorant of it. And this commonness might be one reason, why Asser did not think it of consequence enough to be particularly mentioned in his short life of that great monarch. This rigid Monk may also have esteemed it a slight and frivolous accomplishment savouring only of worldly vanity. He has however particularly recorded Alfred’s fondness for the oral Anglo-Saxon poems and songs (“Saxonica poemata die nocteque . . . audios . . . memoria retinebat.” p. 16. “Carmina Saxonica memoriae discere,” &c. p. 43, et ib.) Now the poems learnt by rote, among all ancient unpolished nations, are ever songs chanted by the reciter, and accompanied with instrumental melody *.

(N) “With his harp in his hand, and dressed like a Minstrel.”" Assumptam manu etthara . . . professus Minimus, qui hujusmodi arte stipem quotidiam mercatur. . . Jussus abire pretium Cantus accepit.” Malmesl. i. ii. c. 6. We see here that which was rewarded was (not any mimicry or tricks, but) his singing (Cantus); this proves, beyond dispute, what was the nature of the entertainment Aulair afforded them. Perhaps it is needless by this time to prove to the reader, that Minimus in Middle Latinity signifies a Minstrel, and Minima, Ministers.

* Thus Leop, the Saxon word for a Poem, is properly a song, and its derivative Lied signifies a ballad to this day in the German tongue: and Cantate, we have seen above, is by Alfred himself rendered Be hejman pingen.

* Natus 1030, scripta 1091, obit 1160. Tanner.
* Obbit anno 1142. Tanner.
* (See above, p. xxvii) Both Ingulph, and Will of Mal-mehs, had been very conversant among the Normans, who appear not to have had such prejudices against the Minstrels as the Anglo-Saxons had stresly, or the Minstrel-art. Should he doubt it, let him cast his eye over the two following extracts from Du Cange.

 NOTES ON THE FOREGOING ESSAY.

"Mimus: Musicus, qui instrumentia musicis canit. Leges Palatinae Jacobi II. Reg.-Majoric. in dominus principum, ut tradit antiquitas, Mimi seu Joculatores licite possunt esse. Nam illorum officium tribuit lectioni... Qua refreshentur... ordinantur, quod in nostra curia Mimi debant esse quincunque, quoniam duo sint tabicinatores, et tertius sit tabelerius: [i.e. a player on the tabor *]. Lit. remiss. ann. 1374. Ad Mimos comiciantum, seus buccinantes accesserunt.

Mimia, Ludus Mimicum, Instrumentum. [potius, Ars Joculatoria.] Ann. 1492... " mimia et cantu victum acquiri."

(O) "To have been a Dane." The northern historians produce such instances of the great respect shown to the Danish Scalds in the courts of our Anglo-Saxon kings, on account of their musical and poetic talents, (notwithstanding they were of so hateful a nation) that if a similar order of men had not existed here before, we cannot doubt but the profession would have been taken up by such of the artisans as had a genius for poetry and music.

"Extant Rhythms hoc ips0 [Isl]dico idiomata Anglica, Hibernicae Regibus oblati et liberaliter compensati, &c. Itaque hinc collegit potissim lingua Danicae in aulis vicinorum regum, principumque familiarium suae, non se ac hodie in aulis principum peregrina idiomata in deliciae haberi cerminus. Imprimis Vita Egillii Skalgrimensi invito, instrumento adstratn. Quippe qui interrogatus ab Adalsteino, Anglico rege, quomodo manus Erec Hlo- doxii, Northumbiae regis, postquam in ejus petestate venerat, evasisset, ejus filium propinquuosque occiderat... rei statum ordinem, nunc sati absque obscurum, exposuit nequaquam ita narraturum non intelligenter." [Vid. plura apud Torfei Prefat. ad Orcad. Hist. fol.]

This same Egill was no less distinguished for his valour and skill as a soldier, than for his poetic and singing talents as a Scald; and he was such a favorite with our king Athelstan, that he at one time presented him with "duobus annulis et seriqua, duobus bene magnis argento refitiis. Quem tum hoc addidit, ut Egillus quidlibet praetera se petens, obinerner; bona mobilia, sive immobilia, prae- bendam vel prefecturas. Egillus porro regiam manuscriptum gratiam exiicepsi, Carmen Encomiasticum, a se lingua Norvegic (que tum his reginis communis) composuit, regis dicat; ac pro eo, duae marcas suri puri (pondu marces... 8 uncias equabat) hono- rarii loco retulit." [Armogr. Mon. Rec. Islandic, lib. ii. p. 129.]

See more of Egill, in the "Five Pieces of Runice Poetry" p. 43, whose poem, there translated, is the most ancient piece all in rhyme, that is, I conceive, now to be found in any European language, except Latin. See Egil's Islandic original, printed at the end of the English Version in the said Five Pieces, &c.

(P) "If the Saxons had not been accustomed to have Minstrels of their own... and to show favour and respect to the Danish Scalds," [which] if this had not been the case, we may be assured, at least, that the stories given in the text could never have been recorded by writers who lived so near the Anglo-Saxon times as Malmesbury and Ingulphus, who, though they might be deceived as to particular facts, could not be so as to the general manners and customs which prevailed so near their own times among their ancestors.

Gloucecestre.]

That Joculator is properly a Minstrel, might be inferred from the two foregoing passages of Geoffrey of Monmouth, (v. note K) where the word is used as equivalent to Citharista in one place, and to Can- tor in the other: this union forms the precise idea of the character.

As the Minstrel was termed in French Jongleur and Juglar; so he was called in Spanish Juglar and Juglar. "Tenemos canciones y versos para recitar muy antiguos y memorias ciertas de los Juglars, que asistían en los banquetes, como los que pinto Honorio." Proleg. a las Comed. de Cervantes, 1749, 4to.

"El ano 1328, en las siestas de la Coronacion del Rey, Don Alonso el IV. de Aragon,... el Juglar Ramasct cantó una Villanesca de la Composicion del... infante [Don Pedro: y otro Juglar, llamado Navello, recto y representó en voz y sin cantar mas de 600 versos, que hizo el Infante en el metro que llamaban Rima Vulgar." Ibid.

"Los Trobadors inventaron la Gaya Ciencia... estos Trobadors eran los mas todos de la primera No- bleza.—Es verdad, que ya entonces se havian en- trometida entre las diversiones Cortesanos, los Can- tadores, los Cantores, los Juglars, los Truenez, y los Bufones." Ibid.

In England the King's Juglar continued to have an establishment in the royal household down to the reign of Henry VIII. [vid. Note (C)]. But in

*" ROMANSET JUGULAR canta al ven,- devant le senyor Rey." Chron. d'Arago, apud Du Cange, iv. 771.
what sense the title was there applied does not appear. In Barklay's Egloges written circ. 1514, Juglers and Pipers are mentioned together. Egl. iv. (vid. T. Warton's Hist. ii. 254.)

(R) "A valiant warrior, named Taillefer," &c.] See Du Cange, who produces this as an instance, "Quod Ministellorum munus interdum prestantum milites probatissimi. Le Roman De Vacce, MS.

"Quant il virent Normanz venir Mout veissiez Engleiz fremir.... Taillefer qui mout bien chantoir, Sur un cheval, qui tost aloit, Devant eus aloit chantant De Kalleenaige et de Roullant, Et d'Olivier de Vassaux, Qui moururent en Rainscheuvaux.

"Qui quidem Taillefer a Guielmo obtinuit ut priuatu in bosco irueret, inter quos fortiter dimicando occinuit." Gloss, tom. iv. 769, 770, 771.

"Les anciennes chroniques nous apprennent, qu'en premier rang de l'Armée Normande, un ecuyer nommé Taillefer, monté sur un cheval armé, chanta la Chanson de Roland, qui fut si long tenu dans les bouches des Français, sans qu'il soit resté le moindre fragment, Le Taillefer après avoir en-tonné la chanson que les soldats répétèrent, se jeta le premier parmi les Anglos, et fut tué." [Voltaire Add. Hist. Univ.

The reader will see an attempt to restore the Chanson de Roland, with musical notes, in Dr. Burney's Hist. ii. p. 276.—See more concerning the Song of Roland, Series the Third, p. 189. Note (m.)

(S) "An eminent French writer," &c.] "M. l'Eveque de la Ravillière, qui avoit fait beaucoup de recherches sur nos anciennes Chansons, prétend que c'est à la Normandie que nous devons nos premiers Chansonniers, non à la Provence, et qu'il y avoit parmi nous des Chansonniers d'une langue vulgaire avant celles de Provences, mais postérieurement au Regne Philippe I, ou à l'an 1100." [v. Révolutions de la Langue Francoise, à la suite des Poésies du Roi de Navarre.] "Ce seroit une antériorité de plus d'une demi siècle à l'époque des premiers Troubadours, que leur historien Jean de Nostredame fixe à l'an 1165," &c. Pref. à l'Anthologie Franz. 8vo. 1765.

This subject hath since been taken up and prosecuted at length by the Prefaces, &c. to M. Le Grand's, "Fabliaux ou Contes du xme et du xve Siecle, Paris, 1786;" 5 tom. 12mo. who seems pretty clearly to have established the priority and superior excellence of the old Rimours of the North of France over the Troubadours of Provence, &c.

(S 2) "Their own native Gleemen or Minstrels must be allowed to exist." Of this we have proof positive in the old metrical Romance of Horn-Child (Series the Third, No. 1, 192) which although from the mention of Saracens, &c. it must have been written at least after the first crusade in 1096, yet, from its Anglo-Saxon language or idiom, can scarce be dated later than within a century after the Conquest. This, as appears from its very exordium, was intended to be sung to a popular audience, whether it was composed by, or for, a Gleeman, or Minstrel. But it carries all the internal marks of being the production of such a composer. It appears of genuine English growth; for, after a careful examination, I cannot discover any allusion to French or Norman customs, manners, composition, or philosophy: no quotation "As the Romance sayth," not a name or local reference, which was likely to occur to a French Rimeur. The proper names are all of Northern extraction: Child Horn is the son of Allof (i.e. Olaf or Olave) king of Sudene (I suppose Sweden) by his Queen Godlyde or Godyt. Athulf and Fykenyld are the names of subjects. Eglyer or Alymere is king of Westneuse, (a part of Ireland), Rymennyl is his daughter; as Ermingyl is of another king Thiriour, whose sons are Athyljyd and Berlyd. Athellwyr is steward of K. Alymer, &c. &c. All these savour only of a Northern origin, and the whole piece is exactly such a performance as one would expect from a Gleeman or Minstrel of the North of England, who had derived his art and his ideas from his Scaldic predecessors there. So that this probably is the original from which was translated the old French fragment of Dan Horn, in the Harleyan MS. 527, mentioned by Tyrwhitt, (Chaucer iv. 39) and by T. Warton (Hist. i. 30), whose extract from Horn-Child is extremely incorrect.

Compare the style of Child-Horn with the Anglo-Saxon specimens in short verses and rime, which are assigned to the century succeeding the Conquest, in Hickes's Thesaurus, tom. i. cap. 24, p. 224 and 231.

(T) "The different production of the sedentary composer and the rambling Minstrel." Among the old metrical romances, a very few are addressed to readers, or mention reading: these appear to have been composed by writers at their desk, and exhibit marks of more elaborate structure and invention. Such is Eglynour of Artes (Series the third, No. 20, p. 194,) of which I find in a MS. copy in the Cotton Library, A 2, folio 3, the II Fitzie thus concludes,

...thus ferre have I red.

Such is Iomonyn (Series the third, No. 23, p. 193,) of which one of the divisions (Sign. E ii. b. in pr. copy) ends thus,

Let hym go, God him sped.

Tyll eftë-soone we of him reed [i. e. read.]

So in Amys and Amylon* (Series the third, No. 31, p. 193), in sta.3d we have

In Geste as we rede.

and similar phrases occur in stanzas 34, 125, 130, 196, &c.

These are all studied compositions, in which the story is invented with more skill and ingenuity, and the style and colouring are of superior cast to such as can with sufficient probability be attributed to the minstrels themselves.

Of this class, I conceive the romance of Horn Child (mentioned in the last note (S 2) and in Series

* It ought to have been observed in its proper place in Series the third, No. 31, p. 105, that Amys and Amylon were no otherwise "Brothers" than as being fast friends: as was suggested by the learned Dr. Samuel Pegge, who was so obliging as to favor the Essayist formerly with accurate transcripts of this poem accompanied with valuable illustrations, &c.; and that it was his opinion that both the fragment of the "Ladie Bracton" mentions, in the same No. 31, and also the manuscript No. 37, (p. 615) contain not copies of the above romance of "Amys und Amyliaun," which contains the two lines quoted in No. 3.
NOTES ON THE FOREGOING ESSAY.

the Third, No. 192, p. 2,) which, from the naked unadorned simplicity of the story, I would attribute to such an origin.

But more evidently is such the Squire of Low Degree, (Series the third, No. 24, p. 193.) in which is no reference to any French original, nothing like the phrase, which so frequently occurs in others, "As the romance saith,*" or the like. And it is just such a rambling performance as one would expect from an initerent Bard. And

Such also is A lyrall Geste of Rhyn Hode, &c, in 8 Fytes, of which are extant two editions, 4to, in black-letter, described more fully in page 21 of this work. This is not only of undoubted English growth, but, from the constant satire aimed at abbots and their convents, &c. could not possibly have been composed by any monk in his cell.

Other instances might be produced; but especially of the former kind is Sir Launfal, Series the third, No. 2, p. 192), the 121st. of which has

In romances as we rede.

This is one of the best invented stories of that kind, and I believe the only one in which is inserted the name of the author.

(T 2) "Rover or Raherus the King's Minstrel."] He is recorded by Leland under both these names, in his Collectanea, scil. vol. 1, p. 61.

"Hospitale S. Bartholomaei in West Smithfeld in London.

That Minus is properly a Minstrel in the sense affixed to the word in this essay, one extract from the accounts [Lat. Computis] of the Priory of Maxtock, near Coventry, in 1411, will sufficiently show.

"Scl. Dat. Sex. Minus Dun. Clynton cantu-ibus, citharascibus, lutersibus, &c. his. (T. Warton, ii. 106; note.) The same year, the prior gave to a doctor praedicus, for a sermon preached to them, only 6d.

In the Monasticon, tom. ii. p. 160, 167, is a curious history of the founder of this priory, and the cause of its erection; which seems exactly such a composition as one of those which were manufactured by Dr. Stone, the famous legend-maker, in 1380; (see T. Warton's curious account of him, in vol. ii. p. 190; note.) who required no materials to assist him in composing his Narratives, &c. for in this legend are no particulars given of the founder, but a recital of miraculous visions exciting him to this pious work, of its having been before revealed

* Whenever the word romance occurs in these metrical narratives, it hath been thought to afford decisive proof of a translation from the romance or French Language. Accordingly it is so urged by T. Warton, (I. 146, note) from two passages in the pr. copy of "Sir Eglamour," viz. Sign. E. i, in romance as we rede.

Again in fol. iii.

In romance this cronycle is.

But in the Cotton MS. of the original the first passage is

As I heard a Clerk reade.

And the other there.

In Rome this Gest cronycle ys.

So that I believe references to "the Romance," or the like, we often more expressive phrases inserted by the oral reciters; one of whom I conceive had altered or corrupted the old "Sir Eglamour" in the manner that the copy was printed.

to King Edward the Confessor, and predicted by three Grecians, &c. Even his minstrel profession is not mentioned, whether from ignorance or design, as the profession was, perhaps, falling into discredit when this legend was written. There is only a general indistinct account that he frequented royal and noble houses, where he ingratiated himself sauritie joculari. (This last is the only word that seems to have any appropriated meeting.) This will account for the indistinct incoherent account given by Stow. "Rabere, a pleasant wised gentleman, and therefore, in his time, called the King's Minstrel."—Survey of Lond. Ed. 1596, p. 308.

(U) "In the early times, every harper was expected to sing," See on this subject King Alfred's version of Cedmon, above in note (H) page xxvi.

So in Horn-Child, King Allof orders his steward Athelbrus to--teche him of harpe and of song.

In the Squire of Lowe Degree, the king offers to his daughter.

Ye shall have harpe, saunter,* and song.

And Chaucer, in his description of the Limitor or Mendicant Friar, speaks of harping as inseparable from singing (1, ii. vii. 268.):

in his harping, when that he hadde songe.

(U 2) "As the most accomplished," &c. See Hoveden, p. 103, in the following passage, which had erroneously been applied to King Richard himself, till Mr. Tyrwhitt (Chaucer, v. p. 62,) showed it to belong to his Chancelor. "He ad augmentum et famam sui nominis, emendicata carnina, et rhythmos adulatorios comparabat; et de regno Francorum Cantores et Juculatorum numeribus allexerat, ut de illo canerent in plateis et jam dicebatur ubi, quod non erat talis in orbe." For other particulars relating to this Chancelor, see T. Warton's Hist. vol. ii. Addit. to p. 113 ofvol. i.

(U 3) "Both the Norman, and English languages would be heard at the houses of the great."] A remarkable proof of this is, that the most diligent inquirers after ancient English rhymes find the earliest they can discover in the mouths of the Norman nobles. Such as that of Robert, Earl of Leicester, and his Flemings in 1173, temp. Hen. II. (little more than a century after the Conquest) recorded by Lambarde in his dictionary of England, p. 36.

Hoppe Wyliken, hoppe Wyliken Inglend is thine and myne, &c.

And that noted boast of Hugh Bigot, Earl of Norfolk, in the same reign of King Henry II. vid. Candeni Britannia, (art, Sufolk) 1607, folio.

Wore I in my castle of Bungey

Upon the riner of Wauenerne

I would ye care for the king of Cockney.

Indeed, many of our old metrical romances, whether originally English, or translated from the French to be sung to an English audience, are ad dressed to persons of high rank, as appears from

* The Harp (Lat. Cithara) differed from the Sanky, or Psaltery (Lat. Psalterium) in that the former was a stringed instrument, and the latter was mounted with wire: there was also some difference in the construction of the bellies, &c. See "Bartholomaeus de proprietatibus rerum," as Englished by Trevvisa and Ratomas, ed. 1684, in Sir J. Haw their beginning thus—"Listen, lordings," and the like—These were prior to the time of Chaucer, as appears from vol. iii. p. 190, et seqq. And yet to his time our Norman nobles are supposed to have adhered to their French language.

(V) "That intercommunity, &c. between the French and English minstrels," &c. This might perhaps, in a great measure, be referred even to the Norman Conquest, when the victors brought with them all their original opinions and fables; which could not fail to be adopted by the English minstrels and others, who solicited their favour. This interchange, &c. between the minstrels of the two nations would be afterwards promoted by the great intercourse produced among all the nations of Christendom in the general crusades, and by that spirit of chivalry which led knights and their attendants, the heralds, and minstrels, &c. to ramble about continually from one court to another, in order to be present at solemn tournaments, and other feats of arms.

(V 2) "Is not the only instance," &c. The constant admission granted to minstrels was so established a privilege, that it became a ready expedient to writers of fiction. Thus, in the old romance of Horn-Child, the Princess Rymenylld being confined in an inaccessible castle, the prince, her lover, and some associate knights, with concealed arms, assume the minstrel character, and approaching the castle with their "Gleyinge" or Minstresly, are heard by the lord of it, who being informed they were "harpeirs, jogelers, and fytihlers," has them admitted, when

Horn sethe him abenche [i. e. on a bench.] Is [i. e. his] harpe he gan clenche He made Rymenild a lay.

This sets the princess a weeping, and leads to the catastrophe; for he immediately advances to "the horde," or table, kills the ravisher, and releases the lady.

(V 3) "assumed the dress and character of a harper, &c." We have this curious historiette in the records of Lacoock Nunney, in Wilts, which had been founded by this Countess of Salisbury. See Vincent's Discovery of Errors in Brooke's Catalogue of Nobility, &c. folio, page 445-6, &c. Take the following extract (and see Dugdale's Baron. i. p. 173.)

"Ela uxor Guielmi Longespee primi, nata fuit apud Ambresbriam, patre et mater Normannis.

(W) For the preceding account, Dugdale refers to Monast. Angl. i. [r. ii. p. 183, but gives it as enlarged by D. Powel, in his Hist of Cambria, p. 196, who is known to have followed ancient Welsh MSS. The words in the Monasticion are— "Qui noccus taboribus Cestrini et Histrionibus, festinante cum exercitu suum venit domino suo facere succurrasum. Walenses vero videntes multitudinem magnum venientem, reliicta obsidione fugerunt. ..... Et propter hoc dedit comes antedicus ..... Constabulario dominationem Sutorum et Histrionum. Constabularius vero retinuit sibi et hæresibus suis dominationem Sutorum: et histrionium dedit vero Seneschallo."

(So the passage should apparently be pointed; but either et or vero seems redundant.)

We shall see below in note (Z) the proper import of the word Histrionum, but it is very remarkable that this is not the word used in the grant of the Constable De Lacy to Dutton, but "Magistriognium Lessoratum et Meretricium totius Cestrithem, sicut liberii illum [sic] Magistriognium teneo de Comite." (vid. Blount's Ancient Tenures, p. 156.)

Now, as under this grant the heirs of Dutton confessedly held for many ages a magisterial jurisdiction over all the Minstrels and Musicians of that County, and as it could not be conveyed by the word Meretricis, the natural inference is that the Minstrels were expressed by the term Lectorata. It is true, Du Cange, compiling his Glossary, could only find in the writers he consulted this word used in the abusive sense, often applied to every synonyme of the sporting and dissolute Minstrel, viz. Scurrâ, vanioquos, parasitus, upitero, &c. (This I conceive to be the proper arrangement of these explanations, which only express the character given to the Minstrel elsewhere: see Du Cange passim and notes, (C) (E) (F) (I) (L) but he quotes an ancient MS. in French metre, wherein the Lecourr (Lat. Lec- tor) and the Minstrel are joined together, as receiving from Charlemagne a grant of the territory of Provence, and from whom the Provençal Troubadours were derived, &c. See the passage above in note (C) pag. xxx.)

The exception in favour of the family of Dutton is thus expressed in the Statute, Anno 39 Eliz. chap. iv. entitled, "An Act for punishment of Rogues, vagabonds, and Sturdy Beggars."
ever in little more than a century after, in consequence, I suppose, of the licentiousness that crept in during the civil wars of York and Lancaster. This appears from the Charter 9 E. IV, referred to in p. xlv. "Ex querulosis insinuaciones. Ministrallorum nostrorum acceperunt quallier nonnulli ruderis agricole et artifices diversarum miste- riorum regni nostri Anglie, inxerunt se fore Ministrallorum, quorum aliqui Libertatem nostram his minime datam portarent, seipsos etiam fingentes esse Ministrallos nostros propios, cujus quidem Liberatam ac dictae artis sive occupationis Ministrallorum colore, in diversis partibus regni nostri predicti grandes pecuniarum exactiones de liges nostris de- ceptive colligit, &c."

Abuses of this kind prevailed much later in Wales, as appears from the famous Commission issued out in 9 Eliz. (1567), for bestowing the Silver Harp on the best Ministrel, Rhymer, or Bard, in the principal- pality of North Wales; of which a fuller account will be given below in note (B b 3).

It may be observed here that Minstrels and others often rode on horseback up to the royal table, when the Kings were feasting in their great halls. See in this work, page 19.

The answer of the Porters (when they were afterward- blamed for admitting her) also deserves attention. "Non esse moris dominus regia Historiiones ab ingressu quomodolibet prohibiere," &c. Walsingham.

That Stow rightiy translated the Latin word His- trio here by Minstrel, meaning a musician that sung, whose subjects were stories of chivalry, admits of easy proof: for in the Gesta Romanorum, chap. cxi. "Mercury is represented as coming to Argus in the character of a Minstrel; when he incipit, more His- tironico, fabulae e celebri mundi que ab viribus."

T. Warton, iii. p. b.) And Maturari citi a passage in an old Italian chronicle, wherein mention is made of a stage erected at Milan---"Super quo Historiones cantabant, sicut modo cantatur de Rolando et Oliverio." Antich. Ital. ii. p. 6. (Observ. on the Statutes, 4th. edit. p. 562.)

See also (E) pag. xxv. &c. (F) pag. xxxiv. &c.

(A B) "There should seem to have been women of this profession." This may be inferred from the variety of nanes appropriated to them in the middle ages, viz: Anglo-Sax. Elfræmæn, [Glee-maiden] &c. ȝlyþegæmæn, ȝlyþegæmpægæn. vid. supra p. xxvi.) Fr. Jengleresse, Med. Lat. Joculatrix, Mi- nistrallis, Femina Ministerialis, &c. (vid. Du Cange Gloss. and Suppl.)

See what is said in page xlv. concerning the "sisters of the fraternity of Minstrels," see also a passage quoted by Dr. Burney (ii. 313), from Mu- ratori, of the Chorus of women singing through the streets accompanied with musical instruments in 1268.
Had the female described by Walsingham been a Tombester, or dancing-woman (see Tyrwhitt's Chaucer, iv. 307, and v. Gloss.), that historian would probably have used the word Saltatrix. (See T.
Warton, i. 240, note m.)
These Saltatrixes were prohibited from exhibiting in churches and church-yards along with Joculatrices, Histriones, with whom they were sometimes classed,
especially by the rigid ecclesiasties, who censured,
in the strictest terms, all these sportive characters.
(See T. Warton, in loco citato, et vide supra not.
E) (F) &c.)
And here I would observe, that although Fauchet and other subsequent writers affect to arrange the several members of the minstrel profession, under the different classes of Troverres (or Troubadours) Chanteres, Contours, and Jugleurs, &c. (vid. page &c.), as if they were distinct and separate orders of men, clearly distinguished from each other by these appropriate terms, we find no sufficient grounds for this in the oldest writers; but the general names in Latin, Historio, Joculator, Ministrallus, &c.; in French, Menestrier, Menestrel, Jongleur, Jugleur, &c.; and in English, Joguleur, Jugler, Minstrel, and the like, seem to be given them indiscriminately.
And one or other of these names seems to have been sometimes applied to every species of men whose business it was to entertain or divert (joculare) whether with poesy, singing, music, or gesticulation, singly, or with a mixture of all these. Yet as all men of this sort were considered as belonging to one class, order, or community (many of the above arts being sometimes exercised by the same person), they had all of them doubtless the same privileges,
and it equally throws light upon the general history of the profession, to show what favour or encouragement was given, at any particular period of time, and to any branch of it. I have not therefore thought needful to inquire, whether, in the various passages quoted in these pages, the word Minstrel, &c.
is always to be understood in its exact and proper meaning of a singer to the harp, &c.
That men of very different arts and talents were included under the common name of Minstrels, &c. appears from a variety of authorities. Thus we have Menestres de Trompes, and Menestres de Bouche, in the Suppl. to Du Cange, c. 1227, and it appears still more evident from an old French Rhymen, whom I shall quote at large:
"Le Quemus" manda les Menestres; "Le Compte.
Et si a fet crier entre el,
† fait.
Qui la meilleur trouve † sauront † Sornette, [a gibe,
Dirc, no faire, qu'il auroit † a jest, orouting.]
Sa robe d'esclarente neuve.
L'un Menestrel l'autre reuue
Fere son mestier, tel qu'il sot,
Li uns fet lyvre, l'autre sot;
Li uns chaunte, li autre note;
Et li autres dit la ricta;
Et li autres la jenglerie †; † Janglerie, habillage,
Cil qui sevent de jonglerie
Violent par devant le Conte;
Acens ja qui fabalis conte
Il i ot dit maine risca," &c.
Fabiaux et Contes, 12mo, tom. ii. p. 161.
And what species of entertainment was afforded by the ancient Jugleurs, we learn from the following citation from an old romance, written in 1230,
"Quand les tables oostes furent
C'il jugleurs en plis esturent
S'ont vielles, et harpes prisees
Chansons, sons, vers, et reprisass
Et gestes, chanté nos ont."
Sir J. Hawkins, ii. 44, from Andr. Du Chene.
See also Tyrwhitt's Chaucer, iv. p. 299.
All the before mentioned sports went by the general name of Ministracia, Ministorum Ludicia,
"Feracto autem prandio, ascendedat D. Rex in came-ram susum cum Praetatis, Magnatibus, et Proceribus praddirat: et deinceps Magnates Milites, et Domini, alique Generosi diem illum, usque ad tempus eam, in Tripedis coreis et solemnibus Ministraculis, pra gaudio solemnisitatis illius continuarat." (Du Cange, Gloss, 773.) [This was at the Coronation of King Richard II.]
It was common for the minstrels to dance, as well as to harp and sing (see above, note (E) p. ixiv.)
Thus, in the old romance of Tirante el Blanco;
Val. 1511, the 14th cap. lib. ii. begins thus, "Despes que las mesas fueron alredes vinieron los minis-triles; y delante del Rey, y de la Reyna dancaron un rito: y desues truexeron colacion."
They also probably, among their other feats, played tricks of sleight of hand, hence the word
Jugler came to signify a performer of legerdemain:
and it was sometimes used in this sense (to which it is now appropriated) even so early as the time of Chaucer, who in his Squire's Tale (ii. 108) speaks of the horse of brass, as like

An apparence ymade by som magike,
As Jugelours plaien at thse festes grete.
See also the Frere's Tale, p. 279. v. 7049.

(A a 2) " Females playing on the Harp."] Thus in the old Romance of " Syr Degore (or Degree), Series the third, No. 22, p. 194.) we have [Sign. D. i.]
The lady, that was so faire and bright,
Upon her bed she sate down ryght;
She harped notes sweete and fine.
[Her mayds filled a piece of wine.]
And Syr Degore sate him downe,
For to hear the harpes sowne.
The 4th line being omitted in the pr. copy is supplied from the folio MS.
In the "Squyr oflowe Degree" (Series the third, No.
24, p. 193.) the king says to his daughter [Sign. D. i.]
Ye were wont to harpe and synge,
And be the merest in chamber conyng.
In the "Carle of Carlsle," (Series the third, No.
193, p. 29.) we have the following passage. [Folio
MS. p. 431, v. 217.]
Downe came a lady faire and free,
And sett her on the Carles knee:
One whiles shee harped another whiles songs,
Both of paramours and louinge amone.
And in the Romance of "Eger and Grime"
(Series the third, No. 12, p. 192.) we have [Ibid.
p. 127. col. 2.] in Part I. v. 263.
The ladye fayre of hew and hyde
Shee sate downe by the bed side
Shee laid a souter [palfrey] upon her knee
Theron shee plaid full lovesomeley.
... And her 2 maydens sweetye sange.
A similar passage occurs in Part IV. v. 129. (page 136.)—But these instances are sufficient.
(B b) "A charter ..., to appoint a king of the Minstrels." Intitled Carta Le Roy de Ministrantz, or Latin Historiam, vid. Plott, p. 457. A copy of this charter is printed in Monast. Anglic. I. 353, and in Blount's Law. Dict. 1717. (art. King.)

This that was a most respectable officer, both here and on the Continent, will appear from the passages quoted below, and therefore it could only have been in modern times, when the proper meaning of the original terms Ministrantz, and Historiam, was forgot, that he was called King of the Fidlers; on which subject see below. Note đn e.2.

Concerning the King of the Minstrels we have the following curious passages collected by Du Cange, Gloss. iv. 773.

There is a very curious passage in Pasquier's "Recherches de la France," Paris, 1633, folio, liv. 7. ch. 5. p. 611, wherein he appears to be at a loss how to account for the title of Le Roy assumed by the old composers of metrical Romances; in one of which the author expressly declares himself to have been a Minstrel. The solution of the difficulty, that he had been Le Roy des Meneestrels, will be esteemed more probable than what Pasquier here advances; for I have never seen the title of Prince given to a Minstrel, &c. seil. — A nos vieux Poètes ... comme ... just qu'ils eussent certain jeux de prix en leurs Poesies, ils ... honoroire du nom, tantot de Roy, tantot de Prince, celui qui ait le mieux fait comme nous voyons entre les Archers, Arbaléstriers, et Harquebusiers estre fait le semblable. Ainsi l'Author du Roman d'Oger le Danois s'appelle Roy.

"Icy enrootz est cile Livre finiz
Qui des enfanz Oger est appellez
Or vuesiez Diez qu'il soit parachevez
En tel maniere kestre n'en puiz blanze
Le Roy Adams [r. Adenez] ki il est rimez.

Et en celyu de Cleomades,
"Ce Livre de Cleomades
Rime je le Roy Adenez
Menestre au bon Duy Henry.

"Mot de Roy, qui seroit tres-mal approprié à un Menestrel, si d'ailleurs on se le rapportoit à un jeu du prix: Et de fait il semble que de nostre temps, il y en est encore quelque remarques, en ce que le mot de Jouingeur s'estant par succession de temps tourné en batache, nous avons veu en nostre jeunesse les Jouingeurs se trouver à certain jour qui au bout de leur l'île de Chauny en Picardie, pour faire monstre de leur mestre en nostre monde, a qui mieux. Et ce que j'en dis icy n'est pas pour vilipender ces anciens Rimeurs, ainsi pour monstre qu'il n'y a chose si belle qui ne s'anentiasse avec le temps."

We see here that in the time of Pasquier the poor Minstrel was sunk into as low estimation in France, as he was then or afterwards in England: but by his apology for comparing the Jouingeurs, who assembled to exercise their faculties, in his youth, to the ancient Rimeurs, it is plain they exerted their skill in rhyme.

As for King Adenez, or Adenez, (whose name in the first passage above is corruptly printed Adams,) he is included in the "Bibliotheques des Romans Amst. 1734," 12mo. vol. i. p. 232, to have composed the two Romances in verses above mentioned, and a third entitled Le Roman de Bertin: all three being preserved in a MS. written about 1700. His Bon Due Henry I conceive to have been Henry Duke of Brabant.

(B b 3) The Statute 4 Hen. IV. (1492) c. 27, runs in these terms, "Item, par eschuir plusieurs diseases et mischies qunt aduenent davent ces heurres en la terre de Gales par plusieurs Westours, Rymours, Ministrallx et autres Vacabondes, ordeignez est et estabiliz qne nul Westour, Rynouer, Minstral ne Vacabond soit aucuement sustenuz en la terre de Gales par faire kymorthus ou coillage sur la commune poeple illoque." This is among the severe laws against the Welsh, passed during the resentment occasioned by the outrages committed under Owen Glendour; and as the Welsh Bards had excited their countrymen to rebellion against the English Government, it is not to be wondered, that the Act is conceived in terms of the utmost indignation and contempt against this class of men, who are described as Rymours, Ministrallx, which are apparently here used as only synonymous terms to express the Welsh Bards with the usual exuberance of our Acts of Parliament: for if their Ministrall had been mere musicians, they would not have required the vigilance of the English legislatute to suppress them. It was their songs exciting their countrymen to insurrection which produced "les disputes et mischien en la Terre de Gales."

It is also submitted to the reader, whether the same application of the terms does not still more clearly appear in the Commission issued in 1567, and printed in Evan Evans's Specimens of Welsh Poetry, 1764, 4to. p. v. for bestowing the Silver Harp on "the chief of that faculty." For after setting forth "that vagrant and idle persons, naming themselves Minstrels, Rythmers, and Bard's, had lately grown into such intolerable multitude within the Principality in North Wales, that not only gentlemen and others by their shameless disorders are oftentimes disquieted in their habitations, but also expert Minstrels and Musicians in touge and cunynge thereby much discouraged, &c." and "hinder'd [of] livings and preferment," &c. it appoints a time and place, wherein all "persons that intend to maintain their living by name or colour of Minstrels, Rythmers, or Bard's," within five shires of North Wales, "shall appear to show their learnings accordingly, &c."

And the Commissioners are required to admit such as shall be found worthy; into and under the degrees herefore in use, so that they may "use, exercise, and follow the sciences and faculties of their professions in such decent order as shall appertain to each of their degrees." And the rest are to return to some honest labour, &c. upon pain to be taken as sturdy and idle vagabonds, &c.

(B b 4) Holingshed translated this passage from Tho. de Elandham's "Vita et Gesta Henrici V." scil. "Soli Omaipotenti Deo se velle victoriam imputari .... in tantum, quod cantus de suo triumpho fieri, seu per Cibharistas et alios quoquecanari cantari penitus prohibebat." [Ed. Hearni, 1727, p. 72.] As in his version Holingshed attributes the making as well as singing dites to Minstrels, it is plain he knew that men of this profession had been accustomed to do both.

(C c) "The Household Book," &c.] See Section V.

"Of the Number of all my lords Servaunts."

"Item, Mynstrals in Household iii. viz. A Taberet, a Luyte, and a Rebecce." [The Rebeck was a kind of Fiddle with three strings.]

Sect. XLIV. 3.

"Rewarde to his lordship's Servaunts, &c."

"Item, My lord usith and accentomysth to gyf yerly, when his lordship is at home, to his Minstrals that be daily in his household, as his Tabret, Lute, ande Rebeke, upon New Yerseyday in the mornynge when they do play at my lordis' chamber dour for his Lordship and my Lady, xx. s. Viz. xiii. s. iii. d. for my Lord; and vi. s. viii. d. for my Lady, if shee be at my lords fyndynge, and not at hir owen; and for playing at my lorde Sone and Heire's chamber dour, the lord Percy, ii. s. And for playinge at the chamber dourres of my lords Yoner Sonnes, my yonge masters, after viii. d. the pace for every of them —xxiii. s. iii. d."

Sect. XLIV. 2.

"Rewards to be geven to strangers, as Players, Mynstralls, or any other, &c.

"First, my lorde usith and accentomysth to gyf to the Kings Jugler: .... when they custome to come unto him yerly, vi. s. viii. d.

"Item, my lorde usith and accentomysth to gyf yerly to the kings or queenes Bearwardes, if they have one, when they custom to come unto him yerly, —vi. s. viii. d.

"Item, my lorde usith and accentomysth to gyf yerly to every Elres Mynstrrels, when they custome to come to hym yerly, iii. s. iii. d. And if they come to my lorde seldome, ones in ii or iii yeres, than vi. s. viii. d.

"Item, my lorde usith and accentomysth to gyf yerly to an Elris Mynstrals, if he be his speciall lorde, friende, or kynman, if they come yerely to his lordship.... And, if they come to my 'lord' seldome, ones in ii or iii yeres...."

I cannot conclude this note without observing, that in this enumeration the family Minstrels seem to have been Musicians only, and yet both the Earl's Trumpets and the King's Shawmes are evidently distinguished from the Earl's Minstrels, and the King's Jugler: Now we find Jugglers still coupled with Piper's in Barklay's Egloges, circ. 1514. (War- ton, ii. 254.)

(C c 2) The honours and rewards conferred on Minstrels, &c. in the middle ages were excessive, as will be seen by many instances in these volumes; v. notes (E) (F) &c. But more particularly with regard to English Minstrels, &c. see T. War- ton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. p. 89—92, 116, &c. ii. 105, 106, 254, &c. Dr. Burney's Hist of Music, ii. p. 316—317, 627, 427, 429.

On this head, it may be sufficient to add the following passage from the Fleta, lib. ii. c. 23. "Officiwm Eleemosinarii est... Equos relietos, Robas, Pecuniam, et alia ad Eleemosinam largierc recipere et distribuere; debet etiam Regem super Ele- mosina largitione crebris summationibus stimulare et preceptu diebus Sanctorum, et rogare ne Robas suas quot magni sunt precij Histhonibus, Blinditori- bus, Adulatoribus, Accusitoribus, vel Menestral- lis, sed ad Eleemosinum incrementum jubet largiri." Et in c. 72. "Ministralli, vel Adulatoris."

(D d) "A species of men who did not sing, &c.] It appears from the passage of Erasmus here referred to, that there still existed in England of that species of Jongleurs or Minstrels, whom the French called by the peculiar name of Conteours, or Reciters in prose. It is in his Ecclesiastes, where he is speaking of such preachers as imitated the tone of Juggars or Mountebanks: —"Apud Anglos est simile genus hominum, quales apud Italos sunt Circulatores [Montebanks] de quibus modo dictum est; qui triumphant in convivis Magnatuum, sumpsit in Cauponas Vincentias; et argumentum aliquod, quod ediderentur, recitant; puta mortem omnibus dominari, aut audacem matrimonii. Sed quoniam ea lingua monosyllabis.
This will also account why John of Gaunt's "King of the Minstrels" at length came to be called, like Le Roy des Violons in France, v. note (B B 2), "King of the Fiddlers." See the common ballad entitled "The Pedigree, Education, and Marriage of Robinhood with Clorinda, Queen of Tutbury Feast," which, though prefixed to the modern collection on that subject, seems of much later date than most of the others; for the writer appears to be totally ignorant of all the old traditions concerning this celebrated outlaw, and has given him a very elegant bride instead of his old noted Leman "Maid Marian," who together with his chaplain "Frier Tuck" were his favourite companions, and probably on that account figured in the old Morice Dance, as may be seen by the engraving in Mr. Steevens's and Mr. Malone's Editions of Shakespeare: by whom she is mentioned, 1 Hen. IV, act iii., sc. 3. (See also Warton, i. 245, ii. 257.) Whereas, from this ballad's concluding with an exhortation to "pray for the King," and "that he may get children," &c. it is evidently posterior to the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and can scarce be older than the reign of King Charles I; for King James I had no issue after his accession to the throne of England. It may even have been written since the Restoration, and only express the wishes of the nation for issue on the marriage of their favourite King Charles II, on his marriage with the Infanta of Portugal. I think it is not found in the Pepys collection.

(F f) "Historical Song, or Ballad." The English word Ballad is evidently from the French Ballade, as the latter is from the Italian Ballata; which the Cruscan Dictionary defines, Caunone, che si canta Ballando, "A Song, which is sung during a Dance." So Dr. Burney, [iii. 342] who refers to a collection of Ballate published by Gastoldi and printed at Antwerp in 1596, [iii. 226.] But the word appears to have had an earlier origin for in the decline of the Roman Empire these tria voces were called Bullata and Saltatimula, Ballistium, Salmsas says, is properly Ballistium. Gr. Hλαξίς. "ἐξ' χρύος Βόλακας .... Βαλλαςις Saltatio .... Ballistium igitur est quod vulgo vocamus Bullet; nam inde deducta vox nostrae." Salmas, Not. in Hist. Ang. Scriptores VI. p. 319.

In the Life of the Emperor Aurelian by Fl. Vopiscus may be seen two of these Ballistae, as sung by the boys skipping and dancing, on account of a great slaugther made by the Emperor with his own hand in the Sarmatic War. The first is,

"Mille, mille, mille decollavimus, Usus homo mille decollavimus, Mille vivat, qui mille occidit. Tantum vini labet nemo Quantum fudit sanguinis."

* Of the twenty-four songs in what is now called "Robin Hood's Garland," many are so modern as not to be found in Pepys' original manuscript only in 1708. In the folio MS. (described in p. aii.), are ancient fragments of the following, viz. Robin Hood and the Beggar,—Robin Hood and the Butcher,—Robin Hood and Fryer Tuck,—Robin Hood and the Pinder,—Robin Hood and Queen Catherine, in two parts,—Little John and the four Biggers, and "Robine Hoode his death." This last, which is very curious, has no resemblance to any that have been published; and the others are extremely different from the printed copies; but they unfortunately are in the beginning of the MS. where half of every leaf hath been torn away.
The other was "Mille Sarmatas, mille Francos
Semel et semel oechedinus.
Mille Persas parvisimus."

Salmassius (in loc.) shows that the trivial Poets of that time were wont to form their metre of Trochaic Tetrameter Catalectic, divided into Distichs. [This p. 550.] This becoming the Metre of the Hymns in the Church Service, to which the Monks at length superadded riming terminations, was the origin of the common Trochaic Metre in the modern languages. This observation I owe to the learned author of Irish Antiquities, 4to.

(Æ f 9) "Little Miscellanies named Garland," &c.

In the Pepysian and other libraries are preserved a great number of these in black letter, 12mo, under the following quaint and affected titles, viz.

This sort of petty publications had anciently the name of "Penny-Merriments": as little religious tracts of the same size were called "Penny Godlinesses." In the Pepysian Library, are multitudes of both kinds.

(Æ g) "The term Minstrel was not confined to a mere Musician in this country any more than on the Continent." The question then is, Whether the term Minstrel was applied in England to Singers and Composers of Songs, &c. or confined to the performers on musical instruments, was properly reserved for this place, because much light hath already been thrown upon the subject in the preceding Notes, to which it will be sufficient to refer the Reader.

That on the Continent the Minstrel was understood not to be a mere Musician, but a Singer of Verses, hath been shown in Notes (B) (C) (d) (A Æ). &c. And that he was also a maker of them is evident from the passage in (C) p. xxiv. where the most noted Romances are said to be of the composition of these men. And in (B b) p. xxxvi. we have the Titles of some of which a Minstrel was the author, who has himself left his name upon record.

The old English names for one of this profession were Gleemen*, Jogelers; and laterly Minstrel; not to mention Harper, &c. In French he was called Jongleur or Jugler, Menestrel or Menestrier. The writers of the middle ages expressed the character in Latin by the words Joculator, Minus, Histrio, Ministrellas, &c. These terms, however modern critics may endeavour to distinguish, and apply them to different classes, and although they may be sometimes mentioned as if they were distinct, I cannot find after a very strict research to have had any settled appropriate difference, but they appear to have been used indiscriminately by the oldest writers, especially in England; where the most general and comprehensive name was latterly Minstrel, Lat. Ministrella, &c.

Thus Joculator (Eng. Jogeler, or Juglar) is used as synonymous to Citharista Note (K p. xxviii.) and to Cantor (p. xxix.) and to Minstrel (vid. infra p. xl.) We have also positive proof that the subjects of his songs were Gestes and Romantic Tales. (V 2) note.

So Minus is used as synonymous to Joculator, (M) p. xxix. He was rewarded for his singing, (N) p. xxx. and he sang, harped, and dealt in that sport (T 2) which is elsewhere called Ars Joculatoria, (M) ubi supra.

Again, Histrio is also proved to have been a singer (Z) p. xxxiv. and to have gained rewards by his Verba Joculatoria, (E) p. xxiv. And Histriones is the term by which the French word Ministradus is most frequently rendered into Latin, (W) p. xxxii. (b) p. xxxvi. &c. &c.

The fact therefore is sufficiently established that this order of men were in England, as well as on the Continent, Singers; so that it only becomes a dispute about words, whether here, under the more general name of Minstrels, they are described as having sung.

But in proof of this we have only to turn to so common a book as T. Warton's History of English Poetry; where we shall find extracted from Records the following instances.

Ex Registr. Priorat. S. Swithin Winton. [sub anno 1374.] "In festo Alwine Epi. . . . Et durante pietancia in Aula conventus sex Ministrall, cum quatuor Citharistoribus, faciebant Ministraciones suas. Et post cenam, in magna camera arcuata Dom. Prioris cantabat idem Gestum in qua Camera suspenderetub, ut moris est, magnum dorsile Prioria habens picturas trium Regum Colein. Veniben autem dicti Joculatori a Castello Domini Regis et ex familia Epi." (vol. ii. p. 174.) Here the Minstrels and Harpers are expressly called Joculatori; and as the Harpers had Musical Instruments, the Singing must have been by the Minstrels, or by both conjointly.

For that Minstrel's song we have undeniable proof in the following entry in the Accomp Roll of the Priory of Bicester, in Oxfordshire (under the year 1432). "Dat Sex Ministrallis de Bokyngham cantantibus in refectorio Martyrium Septem Dormientium in Fasto Epiphanie, iv. s." (Vol. ii. p. 173.)

In like manner our old English writers abound with passages wherein the Minstrel is represented as singing. To mention only a few:

* See page xxvii.
* See page xxxii.
* See page xxxiii. Note.
In the old Romance of Emare (Series the third, No. 13. p. 194) which from the obstinacy of the style, the nakedness of the story, the barrenness of incidents, and some other particulars, I should judge to be next in point of time to Hornchild, we have

"I have herd Menstrelles synge yn sawe."

Stanza 27.

In a poem of Adam Davie (who flourished about 1312) we have this Distich,

"Merry it is in halle to here the harpe,
The Minstrelles synge, the Jogelours carpe."

T. Warton, i. p. 325.

So William of Nassunton (circa 1400) as quoted by Mr. Tyrwhitt, (Chauver. iv. 319.)

"I will make no vain carping
Of dedes of armes ne of amours
As das Minstrelles and Jestours [Gestours]
That makys carping in many a place
Of Octaviane and Isembraze,
And of manyther Jestes [Gestes]
And namely whan they come to foster."

See also the Description of the Minstrel in note (E e) from Morte Arthure, which appears to have been compiled about the time of this last writer. (See T. Warton, ii. 335.)

By proving that Minstrels were Singers of the old Romantic Songs and Gestes, &c. we have in effect proved them to have been the makers at least of some of them. For the names of their Authors being not preserved, to whom can we so properly ascribe the composition of many of these old popular rhymes, as to the men who devoted all their time and talents to the recitation of them, especially as in the rhymes themselves Minstrels are often represented as the makers or composers?

Thus in the oldest of all, Horn-Child, having assumed the character of a Harper or Jogeler, is in consequence said (fo. 92.) to have "made Ryemenild [his mistress] a lay."

In the old Romance of Emare, we have this extoration to Minstrels, as composers, otherwise they could not have been at liberty to choose their subjects. (st. 2.)

"Menstrelles that walken fer and wyde
Her and ther in every a syde
Mon in a dyevye londe
Sholde ut her bygynnyng
Speke of that rightwes kyng
That madde both see and londe." &c.

And in the old Song or Gest of Guy and Colbronde (Series the third, No. 4. p. 193.) the Minstrel thus speaks of himself in the first person:

"When meete and drinke is great plente
Then lords and ladies stil wil be
And sitt and solace lythe
Then itt is time for me to speake
Of keene knights and keemes great
Such carping for to kythe."

We have seen already that the Welsh Bardis, who were undoubtedly composers of the songs they chanted to the Harp, could not be distinguished by our legislators from our own Rimer, Minstrels. Vid. (B b 3) p. xiii.

And that the Provençal Troubadeur of our King Richard, who is called by M. Favine Jongleur, and by M. Panchet Menstrel, is by the old English Translators termed a Rimer or Minstrel when he is mentioning the fact of his composing some verses, (p. xxxiii.)

And lastly, that Holinshed, translating the prohibition of King Henry V. forbidding any songs to be composed on his Victory, or to be sung by Harpers or others, roundly gives it, he would not permit "any ditties to be made and sung by Minstrels on his glorious Victory," &c. Vid. p. xiv. and note (B b 4).

Now that this order of men, at first called Gleemen, then Jugglers, and afterwards more generally Minstrels, existed here from the Conquest, who entertained their hearers with chanting to the harp or other instruments, songs and tales of chivalry, or as they were called Gestes* and Romances in verse in the English Language, is proved by the existence of the very compositions they so chanted, which are still preserved in great abundance; and exhibit a regular series from the time our language was almost Saxem, till after its improvements in the age of Chauver, who enumerates many of them. And as the Norman French was in the time of this Bard still the courtly language, it shows that the English was not thereby excluded from afternoon entertainment to our nobility, who are so often addressed therein by the title of Lords: and sometimes more positively "Lords and Ladies."

And though many of these were translated from the French, others are evidently of English origin, which appear in their turns to have afforded versions into that language; a sufficient proof of that intercommunity between the French and English Minstrels, which hath been mentioned in a preceding page. Even the abundance of such translations into English, being all adapted for popular recitation, sufficiently establishes the fact, that the English Minstrels had a great demand for such compositions, which they were glad to supply whether from their own hands or from other languages.

We have seen above that the Joculator, Minimus, Histro, whether these characters were the same, or had any real difference, were all called Minstrels; as was also the Harper, when the term implied a singer, if not a composer, of songs, &c. By degrees the name of Minstrel was extended to vocal and instrumental musicians of every kind: and as in the establishment of royal and noble houses, the latter would necessarily be most numerous, so we are not to wonder that the band of music (entered under the

*Gest at length came to signify adventures or incidents in general. So in a narrative of the journey into Scotland, of Queen Margaret and her attendants, on her marriage with King James IV. in 1563 [in Appendix to Leland, Collect. iv. p. 962.] we are promised an account "of their Gestys and manners during the said voyage."

† The romance of "Richard Coeur de Lion," (No. 25.) I should judge to be of English origin from the names Wor-\(\text{\textregistered}\)\(\text{-}\)* dreade and Eldrond, &c. vol. iii. p. 141, 145. As is also Eger and Grime (No. 12., wherein a knight is named Sir Gray Steel, and a lady who excels in surgery is called Loopsaine or Loos-pain: these names are not derived from France.

‡ See the romance of "Sir Isembras" (vol. iii. No. 14, p. 194) sign. a.

Harpers loved him in Hall
With other Minstrels all.

---

* The fondness of the English (even the most illiterate) to hear tales and rhymes, is much dwelt on by Rob. de Brunne, in 1386. (Warton, i. p. 59, 65, 75.) All rhymes were then sung to the harp; even Troilus and Creswilde, though always as long as the Emare, was to be "rede"... etc. songs.

† Iv. (Warton i. 388.)
general name of Minstrels) should consist of instrumental performers chiefly, if not altogether: for, as the composer or singer of heroic tales to the harp would necessarily be a solitary performer, we must not expect to find him in the band along with the trumpeters, flutes, &c.

However, as we sometimes find mention of “Minstrels of Music”: so at other times we hear of “expert Minstrels and Musicians of Tongue and Cunning,” (B b 3) p. xxxvii, meaning doubtless by the former, singers, and probably by the latter phrase, composers, of songs. Even “Minstrels Music” seems to be applied to the species of verse used by Minstrels in the passage quoted below.

But, although, from the predominancy of instrumental Music, Minstralsy was at length chiefly to be understood in this sense, yet it was still applied to the Poetry of Minstrels so late as the time of Queen Elizabeth, as appears in the following extract from Puttenham’s “Arte of Eng. Poesie,” p. 9, who, speaking of the first composers of Latin verses in ryme, says, “all that they wrote to the favor or prayse of Princes, they did it in such manner of Minstralsie; and thought themselves no small ffoles, when they could make their verses go all in ryme.”

I shall conclude this subject with the following description of Minstrelsy given by John Lidgate at the beginning of the 15th century, as it shows what a variety of entertainments were then comprehended under this term, together with every kind of instrumental Music then in use:

—“Al maner Mynstraleye, That any man kan speycifie, For there were Rotys of Almaine, And eke of Arragon, and Spayne: Songes, Stampes, and eke Daunces; Divers plente of plesaunces: And many unkouth notyes new: Of swiche folke as lovid treue. And instrumentys that did excelle, Many moo than I kan telle, Harpsys, Pythales, and eke Rotys: Well according to her [i.e. their] notys, Lutys, Ribibles, and Geternes, More for estatys, than tavernes: Orgay [n] s, Cytolis, Monacorodys.—There were Trumpes, and Trumpettes, Lovde Shall [m] ys, and Douettes.”

T. Warton, ii. 225, note (*).

* By this phrase I understand, New Tales or Narrative Rhymes composed by the Minstrels on the subject of true and faithful Lovers, &c.

 The foregoing Essay on the Ancient Minstrels has been very much enlarged and improved since the first edition, with respect to the Anglo-Saxon Minstrels, in consequence of some objections proposed by the reverend and learned Mr. Pegge, which the reader may find in the second volume of the Archologia, printed by the Antiquarian Society; but which that gentleman has since retracted in the most liberal and candid manner in the third volume of the Archologia, No. xxxiv. p. 510.

And in consequence of similar objections respecting the English Minstrels after the Conquest, the subsequent part hath been much enlarged, and additional light thrown upon the subject; which, to prevent cavil, hath been extended to Minstrelsy in all its branches, as it was established in England, whether by natives or foreigners.
RELIQUES
OF ANCIENT POETRY, &c.

"I never heard the old song of Perciv and Douglas, that I found not my heart moved more than with a trumpet; and yet 'tis sung by some blinde crowder, with no rougher voice, than rude style: which beeing so evill appareled in the dust cobweb of that uncivill age, what would it work, trimmed in the gorgeous eloquence of Pindare!"

SIR PHILIP SYDNEY'S DEFENCE OF POETRY.

SERIES THE FIRST.

BOOK I.

I
THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF CHEVY-CHASE.

The fine heroic song of Chevy-Chase has ever been admired by competent judges. Those genuine strokes of nature and artless passion, which have endeared it to the most simple readers, have recommended it to the most refined; and it has equally been the amusement of our childhood, and the favorite of our riper years.

Mr. Addison has given an excellent critique* on this very popular ballad, but is mistaken with regard to the antiquity of the common-received copy; for this, if one may judge from the style, cannot be older than the time of Elizabeth, and was probably written after the eulogium of Sir Philip Sydney: perhaps in consequence of it. I flatter myself, I have here recovered the genuine antique poem; the true original song, which appeared rude even in the time of Sir Philip, and caused him to lament that it was so evil appareled in the rugged garb of antiquity.

This curiosity is printed, from an old manuscript, at the end of Hearne's preface to Guli. Newbrigien's Hist. 1719, 8vo. vol i. To the MS. copy is subjoined the name of the author, Rychard Shealer; whom Hearne had so little judgement as to suppose to be the same with a R. Sheale, who was living in 1568. But whoever examines the gradation of language and idiom in the following volumes, will be convinced that this is the production of an earlier poet. It is indeed expressly mentioned among some very ancient songs in an old book intituled, The Complaint of Scotland, (fol. 42), under the title of the Huntis of Chevet, where the two following lines are also quoted:

The Persse and the Mongumrie mette*,
That day, that day, that gentil day t:

which, though not quite the same as they stand in the ballad, yet differ not more than might be owing to the author's quoting from memory. Indeed, whoever considers the style and orthography of this old poem will not be inclined to place it lower than the time of Henry VI.: as on the other hand the mention of James the Scottish King,†, with one or two anachronisms, forbids us to assign it an earlier date. King James I, who was prisoner in this kingdom at the death of his father, did not wear the crown of Scotland till the second year of our Henry VI., but before the end of that long reign a third James had mounted the throne.‡ A succession of two or three Jameses, and the long detention of one of them in England, would render the name familiar to the English, and dispose a poet in those rude times to give it to any Scottish king he happened to mention.

So much for the date of this old ballad: with regard to its subject, although it has no countenance from history, there is room to think it had originally some foundation in fact. It was one of the Laws of the Marches frequently renewed between the two nations, that neither party should hunt in the other's borders, without leave from the proprietors or their

---

* Spectator, No. 70, 74.
† Subscribed, after the usual manner of our old poets, explicit [explicit] quoht Rychad Sheals.
‡ One of the earliest productions of the Scotti-pres, now to be found. The title page was wanting in the copy here quoted; but it is supposed to have been printed in 1540. See Ames.

* See Pt. 2 v. 25. † See Pt. 1 v. 104. ‡ Pt. 2 v. 36, 130. § Who died Aug. 5, 1406, in the 7th. year of our Hen. IV. ¶ James I. was crowned May 29, 1424; murdered Feb. 21. 1466-7. ¶ In 1439.—Hen. VI. was deposed 1561: restored and slain, 1471.
deputies*. There had long been a rivalry between the two martial families of Percy and Douglas, which, heightened by the national quarrel, must have produced frequent challenges and struggles for superiority, petty invasions of their respective domains, and sharp contests for the point of honour; which would not always be recorded in history. Something of this kind, we may suppose, gave rise to the ancient ballad of the Hunting a' the Cheviats. Percy Earl of Northumberland had vowed to hunt for three days in the Scottish border, without condescending to ask leave from Earl Douglas, who was either lord of the soil, or lord warden of the marches. Dougalls would not fail to resent the insult, and endeavour to repel the intruders by force: this would naturally produce a sharp conflict between the two parties; something of which, it is probable, did really happen, though not attended with the tragical circumstances recorded in the ballad. For these are evidently borrowed from the Battle of Otterburn, a very different event, but which afterwards would easily confound with it. That battle might be owing to some such previous affront as this of Chevy-Chase, though it has escaped the notice of historians. Our poet has evidently jumbled the two subjects together: if indeed the lines, in which this mistake is made, are not rather spurious, and the after-insertion of some person, who did not distinguish between the two stories.

Hearne has printed this ballad without any division of stanzas, in long lines, as he found it in the old written copy: but it is usual to find the distinction of stanzas neglected in ancient MSS; where, to save room, two or three verses are frequently given in one line undivided. See flagrant instances in the Harleian Catalog. No. 2233. s. 29, 34, 61, 70, et passim.

THE FIRST FIT[1].

The Persê owt of Northomberlande, And a vowe to God mayd he, That he wolde hunte in the mountayns Off Chevyat within dayes thre, In the mauger of doughetie Dogles, And all that ever with him be. The fatteste hantes in all Cheviat He sayd he wolde kill, and carie them away: Be my feth, sayd the dougheti Douglas agrayn, I wyll let that hantynge yt that I may. Then the Persê owt of Banborowe can, With him a myghtye meany; With fifteen honurith arches bold; The wear chosyn out of shayres thre*.
THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF CHEVY CHASE.

The first man that ever him an answeare mayd,
Yt was the good lord Persé:
We wyll not tell the 'what men we ar, he says, 65
Nor whos men that we be;
But we wyll hount hear in this chays
In the sypte of thyme, and of the.
The fattiste hares in all Chvyiat
We have kyld, and cast to carry them a-way, 70
Be my troth, sayd the doughté Dogglas uyny,
Ther-for the ton of us shall de this day.

Then sayd the doughté Doglas
Unto the lord Persé:
To kyll all thes gildeless men, 75
A-vas! it wear great pitté
But, Persé, thowe art a lord of lande,
I am a yerle callyd within my contre;
Let all our men upone a parti stonde;
And do the battell off the end of me.

Now Cristes cors on his crowne, sayd the lord Persé,
Who-soever ther-to says nay.
Be my troth, doughté Doglas, he says,
Thow shalt never se that day;
Nethar in Ynglond, Skottlond, nor France, 85
Nor for no man of a woman born,
But and fortune be my chance,
I dar met him on man for on.

Then besype a squaray off Northombarlond,
Ric. Wytharynton* was him nam;
It shall never be told in Sothe-Ynglond, he says,
To kyng Herry the fourth for sham.

I wat youe byn great lordes twaw,
I am a poor squary of lande;
I will never se my captayne fyght on a fyld, 95
And stonde my-selfe, and looke on;
But whyll I may my weppone welde,
I wyll not 'sayl' both harte and hande.

That day, that day, that drefull day:
The first fit across I fynde.
And youe wyll here any mor at the bountye athe
Yet ys ther mor behynde.

The second fit.
The Yngglishe men hade ther bowys yebent,
Ther harteles were good yeneough;
The first of arros that the shote off,
Seven skore speare-men the slouche.

Yet bydys the yerle Doglas uppon the bent, 5
A captayne good yeneough,
And that was vne verment,
For he wrought horn both woo and wonche.

The Dogglas pertyl his ost in thre,
Lyk a chaffe cheffe off prydye,
With surr speeres off myghttë tre
The cum in on every syde.

Throughe our Yngglishe archevy
Gave many a wounde full wyde;
Many a doughtete the garde to dy,
Which ganye them no prydye.

The Yngglishe men let thear bowys be,
And pulde owt brandes that wer bright;
It was a hevy sygt to se
Bryght swords on basnetes lyght.

Thorowe ryche male, and myne-ye-ple
Many ater the stroke downe straight:
Many a frekyte, that was full free,
That undar foot dyd lyght.

At last the Douglass and the Persé met, 25
Lyk to captayns of myght and mayne;
The swapte together tyll the both swat
With swords, that wear of vyn myllan.

Thes worthé freckys for to fyght
Ther-to the wear fullayne,
Tyll the bloode owte off their basnetes sprente,
As ever dyd heall or rayne.

Holdo the, Persé, sayd the Doglass,
And I feth I shall the bryngue
Wher thowe shalt have a yerle wagis
Of Jamy our Scottish kyngue.

Thowe shalt have thy ransom fre,
I hight the hear this thinge,
For the manfullyste man yet art thoue,
That ever I conqueryd in fylde fightyng.

Nay 'then' sayd the lord Persé,
I tolde it the beforne,
That I wolde never yeldyde be
To no man of a woman born.

With that ther cum an arrowe hastely
Forthe off a mightie wane*,
Hit hathe strekene the yerle Duglas
In at the brest bane.

Thorone lyvar and longs bathe
The sharp arrowe ys gane,
That never after in all his lyffe days,
He spayke no wordes but ane,
That was, Fyghte ye, my merry men, whyllys ye may,
For my lyff days ben gan.

The Persé leanyde on his brande,
And save the Duglass de;
He tooke the dede man be the hande,
And sayd, Wo ys me for the!

V. 17, boys, P. C. V. 18, briggt, P. C. V. 21, thorowwe, P. C. V. 22, done, P. C. V. 26, ts, i. e. two. 1bid, and of, P. C. V. 32, ran, P. C. V. 33, helde, P. C. V. 49, thorowwe, P. C.

* Wane, i. e. ane, one, sc. man, as arrow came from a mighty one: from a mighty man.
† This seems to have been a Gloss added.
‡ Fit, vid Gloss.
THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF CHEVY CHASE.

To have sayved thy lyffe I wold have pertyd with 60
My landes for years the,
For a better man of hart, mare of hande 65
Was not in all the north countrey.

Off all that se a Skottishe kynght, 80
Was callyd Sir Hewe the Mongon-byrrey, 85
He sawe the Duglas to the deth was dyght; 90
He spendyd a speare a trusty tre:

He rood upon a corsiare 70
Throughbe a hondrith archery ;
He never stynytde, nar never blane,
Tyll he cam to the good lord Persé.

He set uppon the lord Persé 75
A dynte that was full soare;
With a sunr spear of a myghte tre
Clean thorow the body he the Persé bore,

Athe tother syde, that a man myght se,
A large cloth yard and mare:
These better captayns wear nat in Christiante,
Thea that day slain wear ther.

An archer off Northomberlond 80
Say shold was the lord Persé, 85
He bar a bende-bow in his hande,
Was made off trusty tre:

An arowe, that a cloth yarda was lang, 83
To th' hard stele haylde he;
A dynte, that was both sad and sore.
He sat on Sir Hewe the Mongon-byrrey.

The dynt yt was both sad and sar, 85
That he of Mongon-byrrey sete ;
The swane-fethers, that his arrowe bar,
With his hart blood the wear wete*.

Ther was never a freake vnfoote wolde fle, 90
But still in stour dyd stand, 95
Heavyng on yke other, whyll the myght drey,
With many a bal-fal brande.

This battell begane in Chvyiat 95
An owar before the none,
And when even song bell was rang
The battell was nat half done.

The tooke ' on ' on ethar hand
Be the lyght off the mone ;
Many hade no strught for to stande
In Chvyiat the blyllys aboune.

Of fifteen hondrith archers of Ynglond
Went away but fitti and thre ;
Of twenty hondrith speare-men of Skotlond, 100
But even five and fitti :

But all wear slayne Chvyiat with:
The hade no strughte to stande on hie ;
The chylde may rue that ys un-bornes,
It was the mer pitte.

THEAR was slayne with the lord Persé 110
Sir John of Agerstone,
Sir Roke the hinde Hartly,
Sir Wylyam the bulde Henrone.

Sir Jorg the worthë Lovel 115
A knyght of great renounen,
Sir Raff the ryche Rugge
With dyntes wear beaten downe.

For Wetharrynyngton my harte was wo,
That ever he slayne shuldke be;
For when both his leggis wore hewyne in to,
Yet he knyled and fought on hya kne.

Ther was slayne with the doughetti Douglas
Sir Iwee the Mongon-byrrey,
Sir Davye Lwdale, that worthë was,
His sisters son was he:
Sir Charles a Murré, in that place,
That never a foot wolde fle ;
Sir Iwee Maxwell, a lorde he was,
With the Duglas dyd he dey.

So on the morowe the mayde them byeares
Off hyrch, and hasell so ' grey ');
Many wedous with wepyng tears*
Cam to fach ther makys a-way.

Tivydale maye carpe off care, 130
Northomberlond mayyk grat mone,
For towne both captayns, as slayne wear thear,
On the march perti shall never be none.

Word ys commen to Edden burrowe,
To Jamy the Skottishe kyng,
That doughetti Duglas, lyff-tenant of the Merches,
He lay slayn Chiyviot with-in.

His hunddes did he weal and wryng,
He sayd, Alas, and woe ys miel
Suche mother captayn Skotalnd within,
He sayd, y-theth ahdul never be.

Wordes vs commyn to lovly Londone
Till the fourth Harry our kyng,
That lord Persé, leyff-tenantne of the Merches,
He lay slayne Chiyviot within.

God have merci on his soll, sayd kyng Harry,
Good lord, yf thy will it be!
I have a hondrith captayns in Ynglond, he sayd,
As good as ever was hee:
But Persé, and I brook my lyffe,
Thy deth well quyte shall be.

V. 115, Iteule, PC. V. 121, in to, i. e. in two. V. 122, kas, PC. V. 123, guy, PC. V. 136, mon, PC. V. 138, moor, PC. V. 146, ye sach, PC. V. 149, chyf tennante, PC.
For the names in this page, see the Remarks at the end of the next Ballad.

* A common pleonasm, see the next poem, Fit 2d. v. 155. So Harding, in his Chronicle, chap. 140, fol. 148, describing the death of Richard I. says,
He shrowe him then unto Abbots thre
With his gilly shobbing . . . . and weyng teare.

So likewise Cavendish in his Life of Cardinal Wolsey, chap. 12, p. 31, 4to. "When the duke heard this, he repiled with weeping teares," &c.
THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF THE BATTLE OF OTTERBOURNE.

As our noble kyng made his a-vowe,
Lyke a noble prince of renounen,
For the deth of the lord Perse,
He dyd the battel of Hombyll-down: 160

Wher syx and thritte Scottish knyghtes
On a day wear beaten down:
Glendale galaxydde on their armor byght,
Over castill, tower, and town.

This was the bontyngge off the Cheviet; 165
That tear begane this spurn:
Old men that knowen the grownde well yenough,
Call it the Battell of Otterburn.

At Otterburn began this spurne
Uppon a monny day:
Ther was the doughtte Doglas slean,
The Perse never went away.

Ther was never a tym on the march partes
Sen the Doglas and the Perse met,
But yt was marvele, and the redde blude ronne not,
As the reane doys in the strett. 176

II.

THE BATTLE OF OTTERBOURNE.

The only battle, wherein an Earl of Douglas was slain fighting with a Percy, was that of Otterburn, which is the subject of this ballad. It is here related with the allowable partiality of an English poet, and much in the same manner as it is recorded in the English Chronicles. The Scottish writers have, with a partiality at least as excusable, related it no less in their own favour. Luckily we have a very circumstantial narrative of the whole affair from Froissart, a French historian, who appears to be unbiased. Froissart's relation is prolix; I shall therefore give it, with a few corrections, as abridged by Carte, who has however had recourse to other authorities, and differs from Froissart in some things, which I shall note in the margin.

In the twelfth year of Richard II., 1388, "The Scots taking advantage of the confusions of this nation, and falling with a party into the West-marches, ravaged the country about Carlisle, and carried off three hundred prisoners. It was with a much greater force, headed by some of the principal nobility, that, in the beginning of August, they invaded Northumberland; and, having wasted part of the county of Durham, advanced to the gates of Newcastle; where, in a skirmish, they took a 'penon' or colours; according to Henry Lord Percy, sur-named Hotspur, son to the Earl of Northumberland. In their retreat home, they attacked a castle near Otterburn; and, in the evening of Aug. 9, (as the English writers say; or rather, according to Froissart, Aug. 13,) after an unsuccessful assault, were surprised in their camp, which was very strong, by Henry, who at the first onset put them into a good deal of confusion. But James, Earl of Douglas, rallying his men, there ensued one of the best-fought actions that happened in that age; both armies showing the utmost bravery*; the Earl Douglas himself being slain on the spot; the Earl of Murrey mortally wounded; and Hotspur, with his brother Ralph Percy, taken prisoners. These disasters on both sides have given occasion to the event of the engagement's being disputed; Froissart (who derives his relation from a Scotch knight, two gentlemen of the same country, and as many of Foix) affirming that the Scots remained masters of the field: and the English writers insinuating the contrary. These last maintain that the English had the better of the day: but night coming on, some of the northern lords, coming with the Bishop of Durham to their assistance, killed many of them by mistake, supposing them to be Scots; and the Earl of Dunbar, at the same time falling on another side upon Hotspur, took him and his brother prisoners, and carried them off. Now both parties were fighting. It is at least certain, that immediately after this battle the Scots engaged in it made the best of their way home:

* Froissart speaks of both parties (consisting in all of more than 40,000 men) as entering England at the same time; but the greater part by way of Carlisle.
† And, according to the ballad, that part of Northumberland called Bamboroughshire; a large tract of land so named from the town and castle of Bamborough, formerly the residence of the Northumbrian Kings.
‡ This circumstance is omitted in the ballad. Hotspur and Douglas were two young warriors much of the same age.

Jhesus Christ our balys bete,
And to the byls we brungye!
Thus was the bontyngge of the Chevyyt:
God sende us all good ending! 180

... The style of this and the following ballad is uncommonly rugged and uncouth, owing to their being writ in the very coarsest and broadest northern dialect.

The battle of Hombyll-down, or Humbledon, was fought Sept. 14, 1402 (anno 3 Hen. IV.), wherein the English, under the command of the E. of Northumberland, and his son Hotspur, gained a complete victory over the Scots. The village of Humbledon is one mile north-west from Wooler, in Northumberland. The battle was fought in the field below the village, near the present turnpike road, in a spot called ever since Red-Riggs. Humbledon is in Glen-dale Ward, a district so named in this county, and mentioned above in ver. 163.

...
and the same party was taken by the other corps about Carlisle."

Such is the account collected by Carte, in which he seems not to be free from partiality: for prejudice must own that Froissart's circumstantial account carries a great appearance of truth, and he gives the victory to the Scots. He however does justice to the courage of both parties; and represents their mutual generosity in such a light, that the present age might edify by the example. "The Englyssmen on the one partie, and Scottes on the other party, are good men of warre, for when they mete, there is a hard fighte without sparrynge. There is no hoo betweene them as long as speares, swords, axes, or dagger wyll endure; but lay an ene upon other: and when they be well beaten, and that the one party hath obtayned the victory, they than glorifie se in their dedes of armes, and are so joyfull, that suche as be taken, they shall be ransomd or they go out of the feld; so that shortly echo of them is so conteinte with other, that at their departuyng curteously they will saye, God thanke you. But in fughtuyng one with another there is no playe, nor sparrynge." Froissart's Cronyve (as translated by Sir John Bourchier Lord Berners) cap. cxii.

The following Ballad is (in this present edition) printed from an old MS. in the Cotton Library (Cleopatra, c. iv.) and contains many stanzas more than were in the former copy, which was transcribed from a MS. in the Harleian Collection [No. 293. fol. 52.] In the Cotton MS. this poem has no title, but in the Harleian copy it is thus inscribed, "A song made in R. 12, his tyne of the battale of Otterburne, betweene Lord Henry Percy, Earle of Northumberland, and the Earle Douglas of Scotland, Anno 1388."—But this title is erroneous, and added by some ignorant transcriber of after-times: for, 1. The battle was not fought by the Earl of Northumberland, who was absent, but by his son Sir Henry Percy, Knt. sumumbed Hotspur, (in those times they did not usually give the title of lord to an earl's eldest son.) 2. Although the battle was fought in Richard II's time, the song is evidently of later date, as appears from the poet's quoting the chronicled in Pt. II. ver. 26; and speaking of Percy in the last stanza as dead. It was however written in all likelihood as early as the foregoing song, if not earlier. This perhaps may be inferred from the minute circumstances with which the story is related, many of which are recorded in no chronicle, and were probably preserved in the memory of old people. It will be observed that the authors of these two poems have some lines in common; but which of them was the original proprietor must depend upon their priority; and this the sagacity of the reader must determine.

Yr selle abowght the Lamasse tyde,
When husbonds wynn ther have,
The dowghtye Dowglass bowyn hym to ryde,
In England to take a praye:

V. 2, winn their heayn, Harl. MS. This is the Northumberland phrase to this verb: by which they always express "getting in their hay."

So in Langham's letter concerning Q. Elizabeth's entertainment at Pembroke Castle, 1553, 12mo. p. 61. "Heer was no no in devon dryskeving."

† I. 6. They seem to take the advantage, or to keep them lingering in long captivity.

‡ The notice of this MS. I must acknowledge with many other obligations, owch to the friendship of Thomas Tyrwhitt, Esq. late Clerk of the House of Commons.

The yealle of Fryfe*, withowghten stryffe,
He bowyn hym over Sulwayt:
The grete woldre ever together ryde;
That race they may rye for anye.

Over 'Ottercap' hyll they came in,
And so down by Rodelyfscarregge,
Upon Grene 'Leyton' they lighted down,
Stryande many a stadge;
And boldly brente Northumberlande,
And haryed many a towyn;
They dyld over Ynglysh men grete wrangle,
To battel that were not bowyn.

Than spake a berne upon the bent,
Of comforte that was not colde,
And sayd, We have brent Northornberlond,
We have all welth in holde.

Now we have haryed all Bamboroweshyre,
All the welth in the worlde have wee,
I rese we ryde to Newe Castell,
So still and stalwyrtly.

Uppon the morowe, when it was daye,
The standards schone fulle bryght;
To the Newe Castelle the toke the waye,
And thether they cum fulle ryght.

Sir Henry Percy laye at the Newe Castelle,
I telle you withowtten drede;
He had byn a marche-mans shys dayes,
And kepte Barwye upon Twede.

To the Newe Castell when they cam,
The Skottes they cryde on hyght,
Syr Harye Percy, and thow bysthe within,
Com to the fyldy, and fyght:

For we have brente Northornberlond,
Thy eritage good and ryght;
And sene my logeyng I have take,
With my brande dulydly many a nyght.

Sir Harry Percy cum to the wall(es),
The Skottyssh ost for to se;
"And thow hast brente Northornberlond, Fulle sere it rewyn me."

V. 12 This line is corrupt in both the MSS. viz. * Many a strynde stage.*—Stags have been killed within the present century on some of the large wastes in Northumberland. V. 30, synge seems here to mean since.

* Robert Stewart, second son of King Robert II.
† I. e. * over Sulway trith.* This evidently refers to the other division of the Scottish army, which came in by way of Carlisle. — Broutyd, or Bouteide him: i. e. lied him. Vid. Gloss.
‡ They : se. the Earl of Douglas and his party.—The several stations here mentioned are well-known places in Northumberland. Ottercap-hill is in the parish of Kirk-Wheelpungton, in Tynedale-ward. Rodelyfe, or Ros is more usually pronounced Rodley, and is a navel cliff near Rodley, a small village in the parish of Hartburn, in Morpeth ward: it lies south-east of Ottercap, and has, within these few years, been distinguished by a small tower erected by Sir Walter Blackett, Bart., which, in Armstrong's map of Northumberland, is pompously called Rodley-castle. Green Leyton is another small village in the same parish of Hartburn, and is south-east of Rodley:—Both the original MSS. read here corruptly, Hopperott and Lynnon.
§ Marche-man. I. e. a scowre of the marches.
THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF THE BATTLE OF OTTERBOURNE.

Yf thou hast haryed all Bambarowe shyre, 45
Thow hast done me grete envy;
For the trespass thow hast me done, 50
The tone of us schall dye." 55

Where schall I byde the? sayd the Dowglas, 60
Or where wylo thow com to me? 65
"At Otterborne in the hygh way*,
Ther maist thow well logeed be.

The roo full rekeles ther sche rinnes, 70
To make the game and glee:
The fawkon and the fesant both, 75
Amonge on the holtes on 'hee,'

Ther maist thow hawe thy welth at ywll, 80
Well loged ther maist be.
Yt schall not be long, or I com the tyll," 85
Sayd Syr Harry Percyea.

Ther schall I byde the, sayd the Dowglas, 90
By the fayth of my bodye.
The ther schall I com, sayd Syr Harry Percy; 95
My trotch I plyght to thow.

A pryve of wyne he gave them over the walles, 100
For soth, as I yow saye:
There he sayd the Douglasdryne, 105
And all hys oste that daye.

The Dowglas turnd hym homewarde agayne, 110
For soth withowghten naye.
He tooke his logeyng at Otterborne 115
Upyn a Wedyus-day:

And there he pyght hys staidered downyn, 120
Hys gettyng more and lesse, 125
And syne he warned hys men to goo 130
To chose ther geldys grese.

A Skottyshe knyght hoved upon the bent, 135
A wache I dare well saye:
So was he ware on the noble Percy 140
In the dawnynge of the daye.

He prycked to his payyleon dore, 145
As faste as he myght romne, 150
Awaken, Dowglas, cryed the knyght,
For hys love, that syttes yn trone.

Awaken, Dowglas, cryed the knyght, 155
For thow maist waken wyth wynne:
Yender have I spyyd the prowde Percy, 160
And seven standers wyth hym.

Nay by my trotch, the Douglas sayed, 165
It ys but a fayned taylle: 170
He dyrste not lyke on my bred banner, 175
For all Ynglelo so hylle.

Was I not yestredaye at the Newe Castell, 180
That stonds so fayre on Tyne?
For all the men the Percy hade, 185
He cowdo not garre me ones to dyne.

He stepped owt at hys pavelyon dore, 190
To lyke and it were lesse;
Araye yow, lordyns, one and all, 195
For here bygynnes no peyss.

The yerle of Mentayne*, thow arte my eme, 200
The forarde I gyve to the:
The yerle of Huntlay cawte and kene, 205
He schall wyth the be.

The lorde of Bowghant in armure byght, 210
On the other hand he schall be;
Lord Johnstone and lorde Maxwell, 215
They to schall be with me.

Swynton fayre fyld on your pryde 220
To batell make you bowen:
Syr Davy Scotte, Syr Walter Stewarde, 225
Syr Jion of Agurstone.

A FYTTE.

The Persy came byforre hys oste, 230
Wych was ever a gentyll knyght,
Upon the Dowglas lowde can he crye, 235
I wyll holde that I have hyght:

For thow haste brente Northumberlond, 240
And done me grete envy;
For thys trespass thow hast me done, 245
The tone of us schall dye.

The Dowglas answere hym agayne 250
With grete wurdys up on 'hee,'
And sayd, I have twenty against 'thy' one:
Byholde and thou maistel see.

Wyth that the Percy was grevyd sore, 255
For sothe as I yow saye:
[§ He lyghted downyn upon his fote, 260
And schoote his horsse clene away.

Every man sawe that he dyd soo, 265
That ryll was ever in rowght;
Every man schoote his horsse him froo, 270
And lyght hym rowynde abowght.

Thus Syr Hary Percy toke the fyldye, 275
For soth, as I yow saye:
Jesu Cryste in heven on hyght 280
Dyd helpe hym well that daye.

But nyne thoowsand, ther was no moo 285
The cronkycke wyll not layne:
Forte thoowsande Skottes and fowre 290
That day fowght them agayne.

But when the batell bygame to joyne, 295
In hast ther came a kyght, 300
Then' letters fayre furth hath he tayne,
And thus he sayd full ryght:

My lorde, your father he gretes yow well, 305
Wyth many a noble kyght;
He desyres yow to byde 310
That he may see thys fyght.

V. 13, Roe-bucks were to be found upon the wastes not far from Hexham in the reign of Geo. I. — Whitfeld, Esq., of Whitfield, is said to have destroyed the last of them. 315
V. 56, hys, MSS.  V. 57, upon the best bent, MS.
* Otterborne is near the old Watling-street road, in the parish of Elsdon. The Scots were encamped in a grassy plain near the river Rea. The place where the Scots and English fought is still called Battle Rigg.

V. 1, 13, Percy. al. MS. V. 4. I will hold to what I have promised. V. 10, hys, MSS.  V. 11, the one. MS.
* The Earl of Menteith.  § The Lord Buchan.
† He probably magnifies his strength to induce him to surrender.
§ All that follows, included in brackets, was not in the first edition.
The Baron of Grasteke ys com owt of the west,
With him a noble companye;
All they loge at your fathers thys nyght,
And the battelayne wold they see.

For Jesu’s love, sayd Syr Harye Percy,
That dyed for you and me,
Wende to my lorde my father agayne,
And saye thou sawe me not with yee:

My trowth ys plight to yonne skotts ynyght,
It nedes me not to layne,
That I schulde hyde hym upon thys bent,
And I have hyes trowth agayne:

And if that I wende off thys grounde
For soth unfoughten awaye,
He wolde me call but a kowarde knyght
In hye honde another daye.

Yet had I lever to be rynde and rente;
By Mary that mykel maye;
Then ever my manhood schulde be reprovd
Wyth a skotte another daye.

Wherefore schote, archars, for my sake,
And let scharpe arowes fesse:
Mynstrels, play up for your waryson,
And well quyte it schall be.

Every man thynke on hyes trewe love,
And marque hym to the Trenite:
For to God I make myne arowe
Thys day wyl I not fete.

The blyde yarte in the Dowglas armes,
Hys standerde stode on hye;
That every man myght full well knowe:
By syde stode starres thre:

The whyte Lyon on the Unglysh parte,
For sooth as I yow saye;
The Lucettes and the Cressawnts both;
The skotts faught them agayne.[*]

Uppon sent Andrewe bowde cane they crye,
And thrasyse they schoppe on hyght,
And sanye marked themone our Unglysshe men,
As I have told yow ryght.

Sent George the blyght owt ladies knyght,
To name theyt were fullayne,
Owr Unglysshe men they cryde on hyght,
And thrasyse the schowtte agayne.

Wyth that scharpe arowes bygan to fée,
I tell yow in sertayne;
Men of armes byganne to joyne;
Many a dowghty man was ther slyne.

The Percy and the Dowglas mette
85
That ether of others was fayne;
They schapped together, whyll that the swette,
With swords of fyne Collayne;

* The ancient Arms of Douglas are pretty accurately embazoned in the former stanza, and if the readings were, The crowned barte, and Above: stode starres thre, it would be minutely exact at this day. — As for the Percy family, one of their ancient Badges or Cognizances was a white Lyon Statant, and the Silver Crescent continues to be used by them to this day; they also give Three Lucys Argent for one of their quarters.
+ i. e. The English.

Tyll the bloode from ther bassonnetts ranne,
As the roke doth in the rayne.
Yold the to me, sayd the Dowglas;
Or els thow schall be slyne:

For I see, by thy bryght bassonet,
Thow arte sum man of myght,
And so I do thy burnysshed brande,
Thow art an yerle, or ells a knyght.*

By my good farythe, sayd the noble Percy,
Now haste thou rede full ryght,
Yet wyl I never yeld me to the,
Whyll I may stonde and fyght.

They swamped together, whyll that they swette,
Wyth swords scharpe and long;
Ych on other so faste they beette,
Tyll thir helmes cam in peses dowyn.

The Percy was a man of strenghth,
I tell yow in thys stounde,
He smote the Dowglas at the swordes length,
That he felle to the growynde,

The sworde was scharpe and sore can byte,
I tell yow in sertayne;
To the harte, he cowde hym Smyte,
Thus was the Dowglas slyne.

The stonderds stode styll on eke syde,
With many a grevous grone;
Ther the fayght the day, and all the night,
And many a dowghty man was 'slone.'

Ther was no freke, that ther wolde fye,
But styffly in stowre can stond,
Ychone hewing on other whyll they myght drye,
Wyth many a baillefulle bronde.

Ther was slyne upon the Skottes syde,
For sooth and servetyn;
Syr James a Dowglas ther was slyne,
That daye that he cowde dye.

The yele Mentyne of he was slyne,
Grissly Groned upon the growynde;
Syr Davy Scotte, Syr Walter Steward,
Syr 'John' of Agurstonnere.

Syr Charles Morrey in that place,
That never a fote wold fye;
Sir Hugh Maxwelle, a lord he was,
With the Dowglas dyd he dye.

Ther was slyne upon the Skottes syde,
For soth as I yow saye;
Of lowre and forty thowsande Scotts
Went but eyghtene awaye.

Ther was slyne upon the Unglysshe syde,
For sooth and servenle,
A gentell kynght, Sir John Fitz-hughe,
Yt was the more petey.

V. 116, slyne, MSS. V. 194, i. e. He died that day.
V. 143, Covelle, M.S.—For the names in this page see the Remarks at the end of this ballad.
* Being all in armour he could not know him.
† Our old minstrel repeats these names, as Homer and Virgil do those of their heroes:
"—fortemque Gysam, fortemque Claugothem, &c. &c.
Both the MSS. read here, "Sir James," but see above, pt. I. ver. 112."
Syr James Harebottell ther was slayne,
For hym ther hartes were sore,
Ther was slayne uppon the Ynglyssh perte, 145
For soth as I yow saye:
Of nyne thousand Ynglyssh men
Fyve hondert cam awaye:
The other were slayne in the fyld, 150
Cryste kepe their sowles from wo,
Seyng ther was so few fyndes
Agaynst so many a foo.

Then one the morne they mayd them beeres
Of byrch, and hayselfs grey:
Many a wydowe with wepyng teyres
Ther makes they fette awaye.

Thys fraye bygan at Otterborne,
Bytwene the nyghte and the day:
Ther the Dowgloss lost hya lyfe, 160
And the Percy was lede awaye*.

Then was ther a Scottyshe prisoner tayne,
Syr Hughie Montgomery was hya name,
For soth as I yow saye,
He borrowed the Percy home agayne.

Now let us all for the Percy praye
To Jesu most of myght,
To bryng his sowle to the blysses of heven,
For he was a gentyll knight.

Most of the names in the two preceding ballads, are found to have belonged to families of distinction in the North, as may be made appear from authentic records. Thus in

THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF CHEVY-CHASE.

Ver. 112, Agerstone.] The family of Haggerston of Haggerston, near Berwick, has been seated there for many centuries, and still remains. Thomas Haggerston was among the commissioners returned for Northumberland in 12 Hen. VI., 1433. (Fuller's Worthies, p. 310.) The head of this family, at present is, Sir Thomas Haggerston, Bart. of Haggerston above mention.

N.B. The name is spelt Agerstone, as in the text, in Leland's Itinerary, vol. vii. p. 54.

Ver. 113, Hartley.] Hartley is a village near the sea in the barony of Tynemouth, about 7 miles from North Shields. It probably gave name to a family of note at that time.

Ver. 114, Hearone.] This family, one of the most ancient, was long of great consideration, in Northumberland. Haddeston, the Caput Baronie of Heron, was their ancient residence. It descended, 25 Edw. 1. to the heir general Emilone Heron, afterwards Baroness Darcy.—Ford, &c. and Bockenfield (in. com. eccidum) went at the same time to Roger Heron, the heir male; whose descendants were summoned to Parliament: Sir William Heron, of Ford Castle being summoned 44 Edw. III. Ford Castle hath descended by heirs general to the family of Delaval (mentioned in the next article.)—Robert Heron, Esq., who died at Newark, in 1733, (father of the Right Hon. Sir Richard Heron, Bart.) was heir male of the Herons of Bockefield, a younger branch of this family,—Sir Thomas Heron Middleton, Bart. is heir male of the Herons of Chip-Chase, another branch of the Herons of Ford Castle.

Ver. 115, Lovel.] Joh. de Lavale, miles, was sheriff of Northumberland, 34 Hen. VII. Joh. de Lavale, mil. in the 1 Edw. VI. and afterwards. (Fuller, 313.) In Nicholson this name is spelt Da Lovel, p. 304. This seems to be the ancient family of Delaval, of Seaton Delaval, in Northumberland, whose ancestor was one of the twenty-five barons appointed to be guardians of Magna Charta.

Ver. 117, Rugbe.] The ancient family of Rokeybe, in Yorkshire, seems to be here intended. In Thoresby's Ducat. I eod. p. 253, fol. is a genealogy of this house, by which it appears that the head of the family, about the time when this ballad was written, was Sir Ralph Rokeybe, Knt. Ralph being a common name of the Rokeybes.

Ver. 119, Welbarmington.] Rog. de Widrington was sheriff of Northumberland in 36 of Edw. III. (Fuller, p. 311.) Joh. de Widrington in 11 of Hen. IV., and many others of the same name afterwards. See also Nicholson, p. 331. Of this family was the late Lord Witherington.

Ver. 124, Mongon-burry.] Sir Hugh Montgomery was son of John Lord Montgomery, the lineal ancestor of the present Earl of Eglinton.

Ver. 125, Lwdale.] The ancient family of the Liddles was originally from Scotland, where they were Lords of Liddel Castle, and of the barony of Buff. (Vid. Collins's Peerage. The head of this family is the present Lord Ravensworth, of Ravensworth Castle, in the county of Durham.

THE ANCIENT BALLAD OF THE BATTLE OF OTTERBOURNE.

Ver. 101, Menteay.] At the time of this battle, the Earldom of Menteith was possessed by Robert Stewart, Earl of Fife, third son of King Robert II., who, according to Buchanan, commanded the Scots that entered at Carlisle. But our minstrel had probably an eye to the family of Graham, who had this earldom when the ballad was written. See Douglas's Peerage of Scotland, 1764, fol.

Ver. 103, Huntleye.] This shows this ballad was not composed before 1449; for in that year Alexander Lord of Gordon and Huntley was created Earl of Huntley by King James II.

Ver. 105, Bowgham.] The Earl of Buchan at that time was Alexander Stewart, fourth son of King Robert II.

Ver. 107, Jhonstone—Maxwell.] These two families of Johnstone, Lord of Johnston, and Maxwell, Lord of Maxwell, were always very powerful on the borders. Of the former family was Johnstone Marquis of Annandale: of the latter was Maxwell Earl of Nithsdale. I cannot find that any chief of this family was named Sir Hugh; but Sir Herbert Maxwell was about this time much distinguished. (See Doug.) This might have been originally written Sir H. Maxwell, and by transcribers converted into Sir Hugh. So above, in No I. v. 90, Richard is contracted into Ric.

Ver. 109, Swynston, [i. e. The Laird of Swintone; a small village within the Scottish border, 3 miles from Norham. This family still subsists, and is very extinct.

Ver. 111, Scottes.] The illustrious family of Scot, ancestors of the Duke of Buccleugh, always made a great figure on the borders. Sir Walter Scot was at the head of this family when the battle was fought; but his great-grandson, Sir David Scot, was the hero of that house when the ballad was written.

Ibid, Stewarde.] The person here designed was probably Sir Walter Stewart, Lord of Dalswinton and Gairlies, who was eminent at that time. (See Doug.) From him is descended the present Earl of Galloway.

Ver. 112, Agurstone.] The seat of this family was sometimes subject to the Kings of Scotland. Thus Richardus Hagerstown, miles, is one of the Scottish knights who signed a treaty with the English in 1249, temp. Hen. III. (Nicholson, p. 2, note.) It was the fate of many parts of Northumberland often to change their masters, according as the Scottish or English arms prevailed.

Ver. 129, Morrey.] The person here meant was probably Sir Charles Murray of Cockpooe, who flourished at that time, and was ancestor of the Murrays some time Earls of Annandale. See Doug. Peerage.

Ver. 139, Fitz-hughes.] Dugdole (in his Baron, vol. i. p. 103) informs us that John, son of Henry Lord Fitzugh, was killed at the battle of Otterburne. This was a Northumberland family. Vid. Dugd. p. 403, col. 1, and Nicholson, pp. 35, 60.

Ver. 141, Harebotell.] Harbottle is a village upon the river Coquet, about 10 miles west of Rothbury. The family of Harbottle was once considerable in Northumberland. (See Fuller, pp. 312, 313.) A daughter of Guisichard Harbottle, Esq., married Sir Thomas Percy, knt. son of Henry, the fifth, and father of Thomas, the seventh, Earls of Northumberland.

III.

THE JEW'S DAUGHTER,

A SCOTTISH BALLAD

Is founded upon the supposed practice of the Jews in crucifying or otherwise murthering Christian children, out of hatred to the religion of their parents: a practice which hath been always alleged in excuse for the cruelties exercised upon that wretched people, but which probably never happened in a single instance. For, if we consider, on the one hand, the ignorance and superstition of the times when such stories took their rise, the virulent prejudices of the monks who record them, and the eagerness with which they would be catched up by the barbarous populace as a pretence for plunder; on the other hand, the great danger incurred by the perpetrators, and the inadequate motives they could have to excite them to a crime of so much horror; we may reasonably conclude the whole charge to be groundless and malicious.

The following ballad is probably built upon some Italian Legend, and bears a great resemblance to the Prioresse's Tale in Chaucer: the poet seems also to have had an eye to the known story of Hugh of Lincoln, a child said to have been there murthered by the Jews in the reign of Henry III. The conclusion of this ballad appears to be wanting: what it probably contained may be seen in Chaucer. As for Mirryland Toum, it is probably a corruption of Milau (called by the Dutch Meylandt) Town: the Pa is evidently the river Po, although the Adige, not the Po, runs through Milan.

Printed from a MS. copy sent from Scotland.

The rain rins down through Mirry-land toune, 5
Sae dois it doune the Pa:
Sae dois the lads of Mirry-land 'souna, 10
Quhan they play at the ba'.

Than out and cam the Jewis dochter, 15
Said, Will ye cum in and dine?
"I winne cum in, I canne cum in,
Without my play-feres nine."

Scho powd an apple reid and white 20
To intice the zong thing in:
Scho powd an apple white and reid,
And that the sweit bairne did win.

And scho has tain out a little pen-knife, 25
And low down by her gair,
Scho has twin’d the zong thing and his life;
A word he nevair spak mair.

And out and cam the thick bluid, 30
And out and cam the thin;
And out and cam the bonny herts bluid:
Thair was nae life left in.

Scho laid him on a dressing borde, 35
And drest him like a swine,
And laughing said, Gae nou and pley
With zour sweit play-feres nine.

Scho rowd him in a cake of lead, 40
Bade him lie still and sloip,
Scho cast him in a deip draw-well,
Was fifty fa doom deip.

Quhan bells wer rung, and mass was sung, 45
And every lady went lume:
Than ilka lady had her zong sonne,
Bot Lady Helen had none.

Scho rowd hir muntill hir about, 50
And sair sair gan she weip:
And she ran into the Jewis castel,
Quhan they wer all aseip.
SIR CAULINE.

My bonny Sir Hew, my pretty Sir Hew,
I pray thee to me speik.
“O lady, rinn to the deip draw-well,
Gin ze zour somme wad seik.”

Lady Helen ran to the deip draw-well,
And knelt upon her kne:
My bonny Sir Hew, an se be here,
I pray thee speik to me.

“The lead is wondrous heavy, mither,
The well is wondrous deip,
A keen pen-knife sticks in my hert,
A word I dounae speik.

Gae hame, gae hame, my mither deir,
Fetch me my windling sheet,
And at the back o’ Mirry-land tour
Its thair we twa sall meet.”

IV.

SIR CAULINE.

This old romantic tale was preserved in the Editor’s folio MS. but in so very defective and mutilated a condition (not from any chasm in the MS. but from great omission in the transcript, probably copied from the faulty recitation of some illiterate minstrel), and the whole appeared so far short of the perfection it seemed to deserve, that the Editor was tempted to add several stanzas in the first part, and still more in the second, to connect and complete the story in the manner which appeared to him most interesting and affecting.

There is something peculiar in the metre of this old ballad; it is not unusual to meet with redundant stanzas of six lines; but the occasional insertion of a double third or fourth line, as ver. 31, &c. is an irregularity I do not remember to have seen elsewhere.

It may be proper to inform the reader before he comes to Pt. 2, v. 110, 111, that the Round Table was not peculiar to the reign of K. Arthur, but was common in all the ages of Chivalry. The proclaiming a great tournament (probably with some peculiar solemnities) was called “holding a Round Table.” Dugdale tells us that the great baron Roger de Mortimer “having the honour of knighthood to be conferred on his three sons” by K. Edw. I., he, at his own costs, caused a tournament to be held at Kenilworth; where he sumptuously entertained an hundred knights, and as many ladies, for three days; the like whereof was never before in England; and there began the Round Table, (so called by reason that the place wherein they practised those feats was environed with a strong wall made in a round form:) And upon the fourth day, the golden lion, in sign of triumph, being yielded to him; he carried it (with all the company) to Warwick.—It may further be added, that Matthew Paris frequently calls jousts and tournaments Hastiludia Mensae Rotundae.

As to what will be observed in this ballad of the art of healing being practised by a young princess; it is no more what is usual in all the old romances, and was conformable to real manners: it being a practice derived from the earliest times among all the Gothic and Celtic nations, for women even of the highest rank, to exercise the art of surgery. In the Northern Chronicles we always find the young damsels stanching the wounds of their lovers, and the wives those of their husbands* And even so late as the time of Q. Elizabeth, it is mentioned among the accomplishments of the ladies of her court, that the “eldest of them are skilful in surgery.” See Harrison’s Description of England, prefixed to Hollingshead’s Chronicle, &c.

THE FIRST PART.

Is Ireland, ferr over the sea,
There dwelleth a bonny kinge;
And with him a yong and comlye knighe,
Men call him Syr Cauline.

The kinge had a ladye to his daughter
In fashyon she bath no peerce;
And princely wightes that ladye woode
To be theri wedded feere.

Syr Cauline loveth her best of all,
But nothing durst he saye;
Ne descrewe his counsyl to no man,
But deereyle he lovde this may.

Till on a daye it so beffell,
Great dill to him was dight;
The maydens love removde his mynd,
To care-bed went the knighe.

One while he spred his armes him fro,
One while he spred them nye:
And sye! but I winne that ladyes love,
For done now I mun dye.

And when our parish-masse was done,
Our kinge was bowne to dyne:
He sayes, Where is Syr Cauline,
That is wont to serve the wyne?

Then aunswerde him a couentsous knighe,
And fast his handes gan wringye:
Syr Cauline is sicke, and like to dye
Without a good leechinge.

Fetch me downe my daughter deere,
She is a leech full fine:
Goe take him douche, and the baken brede,
And serve him with the wyne soe red;
Lothe I were him to tine.

Fair Christabelle to his chaumber goes,
   Her maydens following nye:
O well, she sayth, how doth my lord?
   O sice, thou sayr ladye.

Nowe ryse up wightlye, man for shame,
   Never lye soe cowardlee:
For it is told in my fathers halle,
   You dye for love of mee.

Fayre ladye, it is for your love
   That all this dill I dye:
For if you wold comfort me with a kisse,
   Then were I brought from bale to blisse,
   No lenger wold I lye.

Sir knyhte, my father is a kinge,
   I am his onlye heire;
Alas! and well you knowe, syr knyhte,
   I never can be youre fere.

O ladye, thou art a kinges daughter,
   And I am not thy peere,
But let me doe some deedes of armes
   To be your bachelee.

Some deedes of armes if thou wilt doe,
   My bachelee to bee,
But ever and aye my heart wold rue,
   Giff harm shold happe to thee,

Upon Eldridge hill there groweth a thorne,
   Upon the mores brodige;
And dare ye, syr knyhte, wake there all nighte,
   Untill the fayre mornings?

For the Eldridge knyhte, so mickle of mighte,
   Will examine you bofore;
And never man bare life awaye,
   But he did him seath and sorne
   That knyhte he is a fond paynyn,
   And large of limb and bone;
And but if heaven may be thy speede,
   Thy life it is but gone.

Nowe on the Eldridge hilles Ie walke*,
   For thy sake, faire ladye;
And Ie either bring you a ready tokyn,
   Or Ie never more you see.

The lady is gone to her own chambère,
   Her maydens following bright:
Syr Cauline lopye from care-bed soone,
   And to the Eldridge hills is gone,
   For to wake there all night.

Unto midnight, that the moone did rise,
   He walked up and downe:
Then a lightsome bugle heard he blowe
   Over the bents sene browne;
Quoth hee, If cryance come till my heart,
   I am far from any good towne.
And soone he spvyde on the mores so broad,
   A furyous wight and fell;
A ladye bright his pyrde led,
   Clad in a fayre kyrrich;

And soe fast he called on Syr Cauline,
   O man, I rede thee dye,
For 'but' if cryance comes till my heart,
   I weene but thou mun dye.

He sayth, 'No' cryance comes till my heart,
   Nor in faith, I wyll not flee;
For, cause thou minged not Christ before,
   The less me dredeth thee.

The Eldridge knyhte, he pricked his steed;
   Syr Cauline bold abode:
   Then either shooke his trustye speare
   And the timber these two children* bare
   Soe soone in sunder slode.

Then tooke they out theyr two good swordes,
   And layden on full faste,
   Till helme and hawberke, mail and sheeld,e.
   They all were well-nye brast.

The Eldridge knyhte was mickle of mighte,
   And stiffe in stower did stande,
But Syr Cauline with a 'backward' stroke
   He smote off his right hand;
   That soone he with paine and lacke of bloud
   Fell downe on that lay-land.

Then up Syr Cauline lift his brande
   All over his head soe hye:
   And here I sweare by the holy roode,
   Nowe caytiffe, thou shalt dye.

Then up and came that ladye brighte,
   Fast wringing of her hande:
   For the maydens love, that most you love,
   Withold that deadlye brande:

For the maydens love, that most you love,
   Now smyte no more I praye;
   And aye whatever thou wilt, my lord,
   He shall thy hests obaye.

Now sweare to mee, thou Eldridge knyhte,
   And here on this lay-land,
   That thou wilt believe on Christ his laye,*
   And thereto plight thy hand:

And that thou never on Eldridge come.
To sporte, gamon, or playe:
   And that thou here give up thy armes
   Untill thy dying daye.

The Eldridge knyhte gave up his armes
   With many a sorrowfulle sighe;
   And averse to obey Syr Caulines hest,
   Till the tymne that he shold dye.

And he then up and the Eldridge knyhte
   Sett him in his saddle amone,
   A d the Eldridge knyhte and his ladye
   To their castle are they gone.

* i.e. Knights. See the Preface to Child Waters.
V. 109, awkeward, M.S.
Then he tooke up the bloody hand,
That was so large of bone,
And on it he founde five rings of gold
Of knyghtes that had be alone.

Then he tooke up the Eldridge swords
As hard as any flint:
And he tooke of those ringes five
As bright as fyre and brent.

Home then pricked Syr Cauline
As light as leafe on tree:
I-wys he neither s'int ne blanne,
Till he his lady see.

Then downe he knelt upon his knee
Before that lady gay:
O ladye, I have bin on the Eldridge hills:
These tokens I bring away.

Now welcome, welcome, Syr Cauline,
Thrice welcome unto me,
For now I perceive thou art a true knyghte,
Of valour bolde and free.

O ladye, I am thy own true knyghte,
Thy bests for to obaye:
And mought I hope to winne thy love!
— Ne more his tonge colde say.

The ladye blushed scarlette redde,
And fette a gentill sighe:
Alas! syr knyghte, how may this bee,
For my degree's soe highe?

But sith thou hast hight, thou comely youth,
To be my batchilere,
Ile promise if thee I may not wedde
I will have none other fere.

Then shee held forthe her lilly-white hand
Towards that knyghte so free;
He gave to it one gentill kisse,
His heart was brought from bale to blisse,
The teares sterete from his ee.

But keep my consayl, Syr Cauline,
Ne let no man it knowe;
For and ever my father sholde it ken,
I wot he wolde us sloe.

From that day forthe that ladye fayre
Loved Syr Cauline, the knyghte:
From that day forthe he only joyde
When shee was in his sight.

Yea, and oftentimes they mette
Within a fayre arboure,
Where they in love and sweet dalianse
Past manye a pleasant houre.

"But as extremes are short of ill and good,
And tides at highest mark regorze their flood;
So fate, that could no more improve their joye,
Took a malicious pleasure to destroy."
Tancred, who fondly loved, &c.

PART THE SECOND.
Everye white will have its blacke,
And everye sweete its sowe:
This founde the Ladye Christabelle
In an untimely howre.

For so it befelle, as Syr Cauline
Was with that ladye faire,
The kynge, her father, walked forthe
To take the evening aire:

And into the arbourne as he went
To rest his weareye feet,
He found his daughter and Syr Cauline
There sette in dalianse sweet.

The kynge bee sterted forthe, i-wys,
And an angrye man was bee:
Nowe, traytoure, thou shalt hange or drawe,
And rewe shall thy ladie.

Then forthe Syr Cauline he was ledde,
And throwne in dungeon deepe:
And the ladye into a towre so hye
There left to wayle and weep.

The queene she was Syr Caulines friend,
And to the kynge sayd shee:
I praye you save Syr Caulines life,
And let him banisht bee.

Now, dame, that traitor shall be sent
Across the salt sea fome:
But here I will make thee a band,
If ever he come within this land,
A foule death is his doone.

All woe-begone was that gentil knyght
To parte from his ladye:
And many a time he sighed sore,
And cast a wistfulle eye:
Faire Christabelle, from thee to parte,
Farre lever had I dye.

Faire Christabelle, that ladye bright,
Was had forthe of the towre;
But ever shee droopeth in her minde,
As nipt by an ungentle wind:
Doth some faire lillye flowre.

And ever shee doth lament and weep
To tinte her lover seye:
Syr Cauline, thou little think'st on mee,
But I will still be true.

Many a kinge, and manye a duke,
And lorde of high degree,
Did sue to that fayre ladye of love;
But never shee wolde them nee.

When manye a daye was past and gone,
No comforte shee colda finde,
The kynge proclaimed a tournament,
To cheere his daughters minde:
And there came lords, and there came knights,
Fro manye a faire countrye,
To break a spere for theyr ladyes love
Before that faire ladye.

And many a ladye there was sette
In purple and in palle:
But faire Christabelle soe woe-begone
Was the fairest of them all.

Then manye a knight was mickle of might
Before his ladye gave;
But a stranger wight, whom no man knewe,
He wan the prize eche daye.

His acton it was all of blacke,
His hewberke, as his sheilde,
Ne noe man wist whence he did come,
Ne noe man knewe where he did gone,
When they came from the feeld.

And now three days were prestlye past
In feste of chivalrye,
When lo upon the fourth morninge
A sorrowfule sight they see.

A bugye giant stiffe and starke,
All foule of limbe and leer;
Two goggling eyen like fire farden,
A mouthe from ear to eare.

Before him came a dwarfe full lowe,
That waited on his knee,
And at his backe five heads he bare,
All wan and pale of blace.

Sir, quoth the dwarfe, and louted lowe,
Behold that heed Solldain!
Behold these heads I bear with me!
They are kings which he hath shain.

The Eldridge knight is his own cousin,
Whom a knight of thine lust shent:
And hee is come to avenge his wrong,
And to thee, all thy knyghtes among,
Defiance here hath sent.

But yette he will appease his wrath
Thy daughters love to winne;
And but thou woeede him that fayre mayd,
Thy hails and towers must brende.

Thy head, eyre king, must goe with mee;
Or else thy daughter deere;
Or else within these lists doe broad
Thou must finde him a peer.

The king he turned him round aboute,
And in his heart was woe;
Is there never a knyghte of my round tabele,
This mater will undergo?

Is there never a knyghte amongst yee all
Will fight for my daughter and mee?
Whoever will fight you grimme soldan,
Right fair his meede shall bee.

For hee shall have my broad lay-lands,
And of my crowne be heyre;
And he shall winne fayre Christabelle
To be his wedded fere.

But every knyghte of his round tabele
Did stand both still and pale:
For whenever they lookt on the grim soldan,
It made their hearts to quail.

All woe-begone was that fayre ladye,
When she sawe no helpe was nye:
She cast her thought on her owne true-love,
And the teares gusht from her eye.

Up then sterte the stranger knyghte,
Sayed, ladye, be not affrayd:
He fight for thee with his grimme soldan,
Though he be unmaclye made.

And if thou wilt land me the Eldridge sworde,
That lyeth within thy bowre,
I trust in Christe for to sly this fiende
Though he be stiffe in stowre.

Goe fetch him downe the Eldridge sworde,
The king he cryde, with speede;
Nowe heaven assist thee, courteous knyghte;
My daughter is thy meede.

The gynte he stepped into the lists,
And sayd, Awaye, awaye:
I sware, as I am the heed soldan,
Thou lettest me here all daye.

Then forthe the stranger knyghte he came
In his blace armoure dight:
The ladye sighed a gentle sighe,
" That this were my true knyghte!"

And nowe the gynte and knyghte be mett
Within the lists soe broad;
And now with swordes soe sharpe of steelle,
They gan to lay on load.

The soldan strucke the knyghte a stroke,
That made him reele asyde;
Then woe-begone was that fayre ladye
And thrice she deeplye sighde.

The soldan strucke a second stroke,
And made the bloute to lowe:
All pale and wan was that ladye fayre,
And thrice she wept for woo.

The soldan strucke a third fell stroke,
Which brought the knyghte on his knee:
Sad sorrow pierceth that ladies heart,
And she shrieketh loud shriekings three.

The knyghte he leapt upon his feete,
All recklesse of the paine:
Quoth hee, But heaven be now my speede,
Or else I shall be shaine.

He grasped his swords with mayne and mighte,
And spying a secret part,
He drave it into the soldans syde,
And pierceth him to the heart.

Then all the people gave a shoute,
When they sawe the soldan faile:
The ladye wept, and thanked Christ,
That had reskeweth her from thrall.
And nowe the kinge with all his barons
Rose uppe from offe his seate,
And downe he steppèd into the listes,
That curteous knighthe to greeete. 170

But he for payne and lack of bloude
Was fallen into a swounde,
And there all walteringe in his gore,
Lay lifelesse on the grounde.

Come downe, come downe, my daughter deare, 175
Thou art a leukie of skille;
Farre lever had I lose halfe my landes,
Than this good knighte sholdes spille.

Downe then steppeh that fayre ladye
To helpe him if she maye; 180
But when she did his beavere raise,
It is my life, my lord, she sayes,
And shriekte and swounde awaye.

Sir Caunile juste lifte up his eyes
When he heard his ladye crye,
O ladye, I am thine owne true love;
For thee I wishte to dye.

Then giving her one paringe looke,
He closed his eyes in death,
Ere Christabelle, that ladye milde,
Begane to drawe her breathe.

But when she found her comelye knighte
Indeed was dead and gone,
She layde her pale cold cheekes to his,
And thus she made her moane:

O staye, my deare and onely lord,
For mee thy faithfullfe feere;
'Tis meet that I should followe thee,
Who hast bought my love soe deare.

Then fayntinge in a deadlye swounde,
And with a deepe-fette sighge,
That burst her gentle hearete in twayne
Fayre Christabelle did dye.

**

V.

EDWARD, EDWARD,

A SCOTTISH BALLAD.

From a MS. copy transmitted from Scotland.

Quy quy dois zour brand sae drop wi' bluid,
Edward, Edward?
Quy quy dois zour brand sae drop wi' bluid?
And quy quy sae sad gang zee, O? 5
O, I haie killed my haunke sae guid,
Mither, mither:
O, I haie killed my haunke sae guid:
And I had nae mair bot hee, O.

Zour haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
Edward, Edward. 10
Zour haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
My deir son I tell thee, O,
O, I haie killed my reid-ron steid,
Mither, mither:
O, I haie killed my reid-ron steid,
That erst was sae fair and free, O.

Zour steid was auld, and ze haie gat mair,
Edward, Edward:
Zour steid was auld, and ze haie gat mair,
Sum other dule ze drie, O. 20
O, I haie killed my fadir deir,
Mither, mither:
O, I haie killed my fadir deir,
Alas! and wae is mee, O!

And quhitten penance wul ze drie for that, 25
Edward, Edward?
And quhitten penance will ze drie for that?
My deir son, now tell me, O.
Ile set my feit in zonder boat,
Mither, mither: 30
Ile set my feit in zonder boat,
And Ile faire ovir the sea, O.

And quhat wul ze doe wi' zour towirs and zour ha', 35
Edward, Edward?
And quhat wul ze doe wi' zour towirs and zour ha',
That ware sae fair to see, O?
Ile let thame stand til they doun fa',
Mither, mither:
Ile let thame stand til they doun fa',
For here nevir mair maun I bee, O. 40

And quhat wul ze leive to zour bairns and zour wife,
Edward, Edward?
And quhat wul ze leive to zour bairns and zour wife,
Quhan ze gang ovir the sea, O?
The worldis room, let thame beg throw life,
Mither, mither:
The worldis room, let thame beg throw life,
For thame nevir mair wul I see, O.

And quhat wul ze leive to zour ain mither deir, 50
Edward, Edward?
And quhat wul ze leive to zour ain mither deir?
My deir son, now tell me, O.
The curse of hell fre me sail ze beir,
Mither, mither:
The curse of hell fre me sail ze beir,
Sic counsells ze gave to me, O.

This curious Song was transmitted to the Editor
by Sir David Dalrymple, Bart. late Lord Hailes.
VI.

KING ESTMERE.

This old Romantic Legend (which is given from two copies, one of them in the Editor's folio MS, but which contained very great variations,) bears marks of considerable antiquity, and perhaps ought to have taken place of any in this volume. It should seem to have been written while part of Spain was in the hands of the Saracens or Moors; whose em- pire there was not fully extinguished before the year 1491. The Mahometans are spoken of in ver. 49, &c. just in the same terms as in all other old Romances. The author of the ancient Legend of Sir Bevis represents his hero, upon all occasions, breathing out defiance against

"Mahound and Termagantae," and so full of zeal for his religion, as to return the following polite message to a Parnian king's fair daughter, who had fallen in love with him, and sent two Saracen knights to invite him to her bower:

"I will not ones stirre off this grounde, To speake with an heathen hounde. Unchristen houndes, I rede you fele, Or I your harte bloud shall set.

Indeed they return the compliment by calling him elsewhere "A Christen houndet."

This was conformable to the real manners of the barbarous ages: perhaps the same excuse will hardly serve our bard; for that the Adlund should be found lolling or leaning at his gate (ver. 35.) may be thought perchance a little out of character. And yet the great painter of manners, Homer, did not think it inconsistent with decorum to represent a king of the Tophians leaning at the gate of Ulysses to inquire for that monarch, when he touched at Ithaca as he was taking a voyage with a ship's cargo of iron to dispose in traffic. So little ought we to judge of ancient manners by our own.

Before I conclude this article, I cannot help ob- serving that the reader will see, in this ballad, the character of the old Minstrels (those successors of the Bards) placed in a very respectable light; here he will see one of them represented mounted on a fine horse, accompanied with an attendant to bear his harp after him, and to sing the poems of his composing. Here he will see him mixing in the com- pany of kings without ceremony: no mean proof of the great antiquity of this poem. The further we carry our inquiries back, the greater respect we find paid to the professors of poetry and music among all the Celtic and Gothic nations. Their character was deemed so sacred, that under its sanction our famous King Alfred (as we have already seen) made no scruple to enter the Danish camp, and was at once admitted to the king's head-quarters. Our poet has suggested the same expedient to the heroes of this ballad. All the histories of the North are full of the great reverence paid to this order of men. Harold Harargé, a celebrated king of Norway, was wont to seat them at his table above all the officers of his court; and we find another Norwegian king placing five of them by his side in a day of battle, that they might be eye-witnesses of the great exploits they were to celebrate. As to Estmere's riding into the hall while the kings were at table, this was usual in the ages of chivalry; and even to this day we see a relic of this custom still kept up, in the champion's riding into Westminster-hall during the coronation dinner.

Some liberties have been taken with this tale by the Editor, but none without notice to the reader, in that part which relates to the subject of the Harper and his attendant.

Hearken to me, gentlemen, Come and you shall heare; Hee tell you of two of the boldest brethren That ever borne y-were.

The tone of them was Adler younge, The tother was Kyng Estmere; The were as bolde men in their deeds, As any were farre and neare.

As they were drinking ale and wine Within Kyng Estmeres halle: When will ye marry a wife, brother, A wyfe to glad us all?

Then bespeak him Kyng Estmere, And answered him hastilee: I know not that ladye in any land That's able to marrye with mee.

Kyng Adlund hath a daughter, brother, Men call her bright and sheene; If I were kyng here in your stead, That ladye shold be my queene.

Saies, Reade me, reade me, deare brother, Throughout merry England, Where we might find a messenger Betwixt us towe to sende.

Saies, You shall ryde yourselfe, brother, Il heare you companye; Many through thee fals messengers are deceived, And I feare lest soe siohde wee.

Thus the resliueth them to ryde Of twoe good resliueth steeds, And when the came to King Adlans halle, Of redd golde shone their weeds.
And when the came to Kyng Adlands hall
Before the goodbye gate,
There they found good Kyng Adland
Rearing himselfe therat. 35

Now Christ thee save, good Kyng Adland
Now Christ thee save and see,
Sav'd, You be welcome, King Estmere,
Right hartilye to mee. 40

You have a daughter, said Adler younge,
Men call her bright and sheene,
My brother wold marrye her to his wiffe,
Of Englande to be queene.

Yesterday was att my deere daughter
Sir Bremor the Kyng of Spayne;
And then she nicked him of maye,
And I doubt sheele do you the same.

The Kyng of Spayne is a foule paynim,
And 'leeveth on Mahound;
And pitye it were that payre ladye
Shold marrye a heathen hound.

But grant to me, says Kyng Estmere,
For my love I you praye;
That I may see your daughter deere
Before I goe hence awaye.

Although itt is seven yeers and more
Since my daughter was in halle,
She shall come once downe for your sake
To glad my guestes alle. 60

Downe then came that mayden payre,
With ladies laced in pall,
And halfe a hundred of bold knightes,
To bring her from bowre to hall;
And as many gentle squiers,
To tend upon them all. 65

The talents of golde were on her head sette,
Hanged lowe downe to her knee;
And everye ring on her small finger
Shone of the chrystall free. 70

Saies, God you save, my deere madam ;
Saies, God you save and see.
Said, You be welcome, Kyng Estmere,
Right welcome unto mee. 75

And if you love me, as you saye,
Soe well and hartilée,
All that ever you are comen about
Soone sped now i'th shal bee.

Then bespake her father deare:
My daughter, I saye naye;
Remember well the Kyng of Spayne
What he sayd yesterdye. 80

He wold pull downe my halles and castles,
And reave me of my lyfe,
I cannot blame him if he doe,
If I reave him of his wyfe. 85

Your castles and your towres, father,
Are strongelye built aboute;
And therefore of the King of Spaine
Wee neede not stande in doubt. 90

Plight me your troth, nowe, Kyng Estmère,
By heaven and your righte hand,
That you will marrye me to your wyfe,
And make me queene of your land.

Then King Estmere he plight his troth
By heaven and his righte hand,
That he wold marrye her to his wyfe,
And make her queene of his land.

And he tooke leave of that ladye payre,
To goe to his owne countree, 100
To fetche him dukes and lordes and knightes,
That married the might bee.

They had not ridden scant a myle,
A myle forthe of the towne,
But in did come the Kyng of Spayne,
With kempes many one. 105

But in did come the Kyng of Spayne,
With manye a bold barone,
Tone day to marrye Kyng Adlands daughter,
Tother daye to carrye her home. 110

Shee sent one after Kyng Estmère
In all the spede might bee,
That he must either turne againe and fighte,
Or goe home and loose his ladye. 115

One whyle then the page he went,
Another while he ranne;
Till he had orestaken King Estmere,
I wis, he never blanne.

Tydings, tydings, Kyng Estmere !
What tydinges nowe, my boye ?
O tydinges I can tell to you,
That will you sore annoye. 120

You had not ridden scant a mile,
A mile out of the towne,
But in did come the Kyng of Spayne
With kempes many a one ;

But in did come the Kyng of Spayne
With manye a bold barone,
Tone daye to marrye King Adlands daughter,
Tother daye to carrye her home. 125

My ladye payre she greetes you well,
And ever-more well by mee:
You must either turne againe and fighte,
Or goe home and loose your ladye.

Saies, Reade me, reade me, deere brother, 135
My reade shall ryde* at thee,
Whether it is better to turne and fighte,
Or goe home and loose my ladye.

V. 89, of the king his sonne of Spaine, fol. MS.
* Sic MS. It should probably be ryde, i.e. my counsel shall arise from thee. See ver. 140.
Now hearken to me sayses Adler yonge,
And your reade must rise* at me,
I quickelye will devise a waye
To sette thy ladye free.

My mother was a western woman,
And learned in gramarye,
And when I learned at the school,
Something shee taught itt mee.

There growes an hearebe within this field,
And if it were but knowne,
His color, which is whyte and redd,
It will make blacke and brown:

His color, which is browne and blacke,
It will make redd and whyte;
That sworde is not in all Englande,
Upon his coate will byte.

And you shall be a harper, brother
Out of the north countrey;
And Ile be your boy, soe faine of fighte,
And bear your harpe by your knee.

And you shall be the best harper,
That ever tooke harpe in hand;
And I will be the best singe er that ever sung in this lande.

Itt shall be written in our forheads
All and in gramarye,
That we towre are the boldest men,
That are in all Christeny.

And thus they renish them to ryde,
On tow good renish steedes;
And when they came to King Adlands hall,
Of redd gold shone their weedes.

And when the came to Kyng Adlands hall,
Untill the fyare hall yate,
There they found a proud portier
Rearing himselfe thereat.

Sayes, Christ thee save, thou proud portier;
Sayes, Christ thee save and see.
Nowe you be welcome, sayd the portier,
Of what land soever ye bee.

Wee beene harpers, sayd Adler yonge,
Come out of the northe countrey;
Wee beene come hither untill this place,
This proud wedinge for to see.

Sayd, And your color were white and redd,
As it is blacke and browne,
I wold sayse King Estmere and his brother
Were commen untill this towne.

Then they pulled out a ryng of gold,
Layd itt on the porters armes:
And ever we will thee, proud portier,
Thow wilt sayse us no harme.

Sore he looked on Kyng Estmere,
And sore he handled the ryng,
Then opened to them the fyare hall yates,
He lett for no kind of thyng.

Knyg Estmere he stabled his steede
Soo fayre att the hall bord;
The froth, that came from his byrdle bitte,
Light in King Brems beard.

Saiies, Stable thy steed, thou proud harpër,
Saiies, stable him in the stalle:
It doth not beseeme a proud harpër
To stable 'him' in a kyngs halle.

My ladde he is so lither, he said,
He will doe nought that's meete;
And is there any man in this hall
Were able him to beate?

Thou speakest proud words, sayes the King of Thou harper, here to mee;
There is a man within this halle
Will beate thy ladd and thee.

O let that man come downe, he said,
A sight of him wold I see;
And when hee bath beaten well my ladd,
Then he shall beate of mee.

Downe then came the kempeyre man
And looked him in the eare;
For all the gold, that was under heaven,
He durst not neig him neare.

And how nowe, kempe, sayd the Kyng of Spaine,
And how what sileth thee?
He saies, It is writt in his forhead
All and in gramarye,
That for all the gold that is under heaven
I dare not neig him nye.

Then Kyng Estmere pulld forth his harpe,
And plaid a pretty thinge:
The ladde upstart from the borde,
And wold have gone from the king.

Stay thy harpe, thou proud harpër,
For Gods love I pray thee,
For and thou playes as thou begins,
Thou'lt till* my bryde from mee.

He stroake upon his harpe againe,
And playd a pretty thinge;
The ladde louge a loud laughter,
As shee sate by the king.

Saiies, Sell me thy harpe, thou proud harper,
And thy stringes all,
For as many gold nobles 'thou shalt have'
As heere bee ringes in the hali.

What wold ye doe with my harpe, 'he sayd',
If I did sell it yee?
"To playe my wife and me a Fitt*;
When abed together wee bee."

Now sell me, quoth bee, thy bryde soe gay
As shee sitts by thy knee,
And as many gold nobles I will give,
As leaes been on a tree.

V. 299; To stable his steede, fol. MS.
+ i. e. entice. Vid. Gloss.
† i. e. a tune, or strain of musit. See Gloss.
And what wold ye doe with my bryde son guy,
If I did sell her thee? 250
More seemelye it is for her fayre bodye
To lye by mee then thee.

Hee played agayne both loud and shrille,
And Adler he did syng,
"O ladye, this is thy owne true love;
Nee harper, but a kyng.

"O ladye, this is thy owne true love,
As playnythe thou mayest see;
And lye rid thee of that foule paynim,
Who partes thy love and thee." 260

The ladye looked, the ladye blushte,
And blushte and looke agayne,
While Adler he hath drawne his brande,
And hath the sowdian slayne.

Up then rose the kempery men, 265
And loud they gan to crye:
Ah! traytors, yee have slayne our kyng,
And therefore vee shall dye.

Kyang Estmere threwre the harpe asyde,
And swith he drew his brand;
And Estmere he, and Adler yonge
Right stiffe in stour can stand.

And aye their swordsse soe sore can byte,
Throughe help of Gramarye,
That soone they have slayne the kempery men, 275
Or forst them forth to flee.

Kyang Estmere tooke that fayre ladye,
And married her to his wife,
And brought her home to merry England
With her to leade his life. 290

 The word Gramarye, which occurs several times in the foregoing poem, is probably a corruption of the French word Grimoire, which signifies a conjuring book in the old French romances, if not the art of necromancy itself.

†† Termagant (mentioned above), is the name given in the old romances to the god of the Sarracens: in which he is constantly linked with Mahound, or Mahomet. Thus in the legend of Sir Guy, the Soudan (Sultan) swears,

"So helpe me Mahowne of might,
And Termagunt my God be bright." Sign. p. iij. b.

This word is derived by the very learned editor of Junius, from the Anglo-Saxon Tyne, and Magan mighty. As this word had so sublime a derivation, and was so applicable to the true God, how shall we account for its being so degraded? Perhaps Tyne-Magan or Termagant had been a name originally given to some Saxon idol, before our ancestors were converted to Christianity; or had been the peculiar attribute of one of their false deities; and therefore the first Christian missionaries rejected it as profane and improper to be applied to the true

God. Afterwards, when the irruptions of the Saracens into Europe, and the Crusades into the East, had brought them acquainted with a new species of unbelievers, our ignorant ancestors, who thought all that did not receive the Christian law were necessarily pagans and idolaters, supposed the Mahometan creed was, in all respects, the same with that of their pagan forefathers, and therefore made no scruple to give the ancient name of Termagant to the God of the Saracens: just in the same manner as they afterwards used the name of Saracen to express any kind of pagan or idolater. In the ancient romance of Merlin (in the Editor's folio MS.) the Saxons themselves that came over with Hengist, because they were not Christians, are constantly called Sarazens.

"However that be, it is certain that, after the times of the Crusades, both Mahound and Termagant made their frequent appearance in the pageants and religious enterludes of the barbarous ages; in which they were exhibited with gestures so furious and frantic, as to become proverbial. Thus Skelton speaks of Wolsey:

"Like Mahound in a play,
No man dare him withstand." Ed. 1736. p. 158.

In like manner Bale, describing the threats used by some papist magistrates to his wife, speaks of them as "gremynny upon her lyke Termagantas in a playe."—[Actes of Engl. Votaries, pt. 2, fo. 83, ed. 1550, 12mo.]

Accordingly, in a letter of Edward Alleyn, the founder of Dulwich College, to his wife or sister, * who, it seems, with all her fellows (the players), had been "by my Lord Maiors officer [s] mad to rid in a curt," he expresses his concern that she should "fall into the hands of such Termagants." [So the orig. dated May 2, 1593, preserved by the care of the Rev. Thomas Jenyns Smith, Fellow of Dulw. Coll.]—Hence we may conceive the force of Hamlet's expression in Shakspeare, where, condemning a ranting player, he says, "I could have such a fellow whipt for ore-doing Termagant: it out-heros Herod." A. iii. sc. 3.—By degrees, the word came to be applied to an outrageous turbulent person, and especially to a violent brawling woman; to whom alone it is now confined, and this the rather as, I suppose, the character of Termagant was ancienly represented on the stage after the eastern mode, with long robes or petticoats.

Another frequent character in the old pageants or enterludes of our ancestors, was the sowdan, or soldan, representing a grim eastern tyrant: this appears from a curious passage in Stow's Annals [p. 436]. In a stage-play, "the people know right well, that he that plaieth the sowdan is percase a sower [shoemaker]; yet if one should cal him by his owne name, while he standeth in his majESTie, one of his tormentors might hap to break his head.

The sowdain or soldan, was a name given to the Sarazen king (being only a more rude pronunciation of the word sultan), as the soldan of Egypt, the soudan of Persia, the sowdan of Babylon, &c. who were generally represented as accompanied with grim Sarazens, whose business it was to punish and torment Christians. I cannot conclude this short memoir, without observing that the French roman-
SIR PATRICK SPENCE.

A SCOTTISH BALLAD,

--- is given from two MS. copies, transmitted from Scotland. In what age the hero of this ballad lived, or when this fatal expedition happened that proved so destructive to the Scots nobles, I have not been able to discover; yet am of opinion, that their catastrophe is not altogether without foundation in history, though it has escaped my own researches. In the infancy of navigation, such as used the northern seas were very liable to shipwreck in the wintry months: hence a law was enacted in the reign of James III., (a law which was frequently repeated afterwards,) “That there be na schip fraught out of the realm, with any staple guedes, fra the feast of Simons-day and Jude, unto the feast of the purification of our lady called Candlemass.” Jam. III. Parit. 2, ch. 15.

In some modern copies, instead of Patrick Spence hath been substituted the name of Sir Andrew Wood, a famous Scottish admiral who flourished in the time of our Edw. IV., but whose story hath nothing in common with this of the ballad. As Wood was the most noted warrior of Scotland, it is probable that, like the Theban Hercules, he hath engrossed the renown of other heroes.

The king sits in Dumferring town,
Drinking the blue-reid wine:
O quha will I get guid sailor,
To sail this schip of mine?

Up and spak an eldern knight,
Sat at the kings richt knee:
Sir Patrick Spence is the best sailor,
That sails upon the sea.

The king has written a braid letter,
And signit it wi' his hand;
And sent it to Sir Patrick Spence,
Was walking on the sand.

The first line that Sir Patrick red,
A loud lauch lauched he:
The next line that Sir Patrick red,
The teir blinded his ee.

O quha is this has don this deid,
This ill deid don to me;
To send me out this time o' the zeir,
To sail upon the sea?

Mak hast, mak haste, my mirry men all,
Our guid schip sails the morn.
O say na sae, my master dear,
For I feir a deadly storme.

Late late yestreen I saw the new moone
Wi' the auld moone in her arme;
And I feir, I feir, my deir master,
That weill com to harme.

O our Scots nobles wer richt laith
To weet their cork-heild schoone;
Bot lang owre a' the play wer played,
Thair hats they swam aboone.

O lang, lang, may thair ladies sit
Wi' their fans into their hand,
Or eir they se Sir Patrick Spence
Cum sailing to the land.

O lang, lang, may thair ladies stand
Wi' their gold' kems in their hair,
Waiting for thair ain deir lords,
For they'll se thame nae mair.

Have owre, have owre to Aberdour,*
It's fitte fadom deip:
And thair lies guid Sir Patrick Spence,
Wi' the Scots lords at his feit.

The severity of those tyrannical forest-laws, that were introduced by our Norman kings, and the great temptation of breaking them by such as lived near... numbers of outlaws, and especially of such as were the best marksmen. These naturally fled to the woods for shelter; and, forming into troops, endeavoured by their numbers to protect themselves from the dreadful penalties of their delinquency. The ancient punishment for killing the king's deer was loss of eyes and castration, a punishment far worse than death. This will easily account for the troops of banditti which formerly lurked in the royal forests, and, from their superior skill in archery and knowledge of all the recesses of those unfrequented solitudes, found it no difficult matter to resist or elude the civil power.

Among all those, none was ever more famous than the hero of this ballad, whose chief residence was in Shirewood forest, in Nottinghamshire; and the heads of whose story; as collected by Stow, are briefly these:

"In this time [about the year 1190, in the reign of Richard I.] were many robbers and outlaws, among whom Robin Hood and Little John, renowned thieves, continued in woods, despoyling and robbing the goods of the rich. They killed none but such as would invade them, or by resistance for their own defence."

"The said Robert entertained an hundred tall men and good archers with such spoiles and thefts as he got, upon whom four hundred (were they ever so strong) durst not give the onset. He suffered no woman to be oppressed, violated, or otherwise molested: poor mens goods he spared,abantually relieving them with that which by theft he got from abbeys and the houses of rich carles: whom Major (the historian) blameth for his rapine and theft, but of all theves he affirmed him to be the prince, and the most gentle thefe." Annals. p. 159.

The personal courage of this celebrated outlaw, his skill in archery, his humanity, and especially his levelling principle of taking from the rich and giving to the poor, have in all ages rendered him the favourite of the common people, who, not content to celebrate his memory by innumerable songs and stories, have erected him into the dignity of an earl. Indeed, it is not impossible, but our hero, to gain the more respect from his followers, or they to derive the more credit to their profession, may have given rise to such a report themselves: for we find it recorded in an epitaph, which, if genuine, must have been inscribed on his tombstone near the nunnery of Kirklees in Yorkshire; where (as the story goes) he was bled to death by a treacherous nun to whom he applied for phlebotomy:

* Hear underned his laill stean lais robert earl of huntinton whos he rong he at his sar grab an plpl kaund on robun hred sick vllalo as hi an is men bit England nibr st agen. obit 24 kal, decembris, 1247.*

This Epitaph appears to me suspicious: however, a late Antiquary has given a pedigree of Robin Hood, which, if genuine, shows that he had real pretensions to the Earldom of Huntington, and that his true name was Robert Fitz-ooth." Yet the most ancient poems on Robin Hood make no mention of this Earldom. He is expressly asserted to have been a yeo-

The printer's colophon is, "C Explicit Kinges Edwarde and Robin Hode and Lyttel John. Enprinted at London in Fle(t)restrete at the sygne of the sone by Wwynkin de Worde."---In Mr. Garrick's Collection; is a different edition of the same poem. "C Imprinted at London upon the thre Crane wharfe by Wyllym Copland," containing at the end a little dramatic piece on the subject of Robin Hood and the Friar, not found in the former copy, called, "A newe playe for to be played in Maye games very pleasant and full of pastyme. C (-: D)."

I shall conclude these preliminary remarks with observing, that the hero of this ballad was the favourite subject of popular songs so early as the time of K. Edward III. In the Visions of Pierce Plowman, written in that reign, a monk says, I can rimes of Roben Hod and Randal of Chester, But of our Lorde and our Lady, I lerne nothygn at all. Fol. 26, Ed. 1530.

See also in Bp. Latimer's Sermons a very curious and characteristic story, which shows what respect was shown to the memory of our archer in the time of that prelate.

The curious reader will find many other particulars relating to this celebrated Outlaw, in Sir John Hawkins's Hist. of Music, vol. iii. p. 410, 4to.

For the catastrophe of Little John, who, it seems, was executed for a robbery on Arbor-hill, Dublin (with some curious particulars relating to his skill in archery), see Mr. J. C. Walker's ingenious "Memoir on the Armour and Weapons of the Irish," p. 129, annexed to his "Historical Essay on the Dress of the Ancient and Modern Irish." Dublin, 1788, 4to.

Some liberties were, by the Editor, taken with this ballad; which, in this Edition, hath been brought nearer to the folio MS.

When shaws beene sheene, and shradds full fayre, And leaves both large and longe, Itt is merrye walking in the fayre forrest To heare the small birdes songe.

The woodwelle sang, and wold not cease, Sitting upon the sprynge. Soe lowde, he awakened Robin Hood, In the greenwood where he lay.

* See also the following ballad, v. 147. † Num. D. 5. 2. ‡ Old Plays, 4to. K. vol. x. Ver. 1. on the meane where the M.S. has shades: and shriadda should perhaps be awradds; i.e. the surface of the ground: viz. "when the fields were in their beauty:" or perhaps shades. § Ser. 6th before K. Ed. Apr. 12. fol. 75, Gil:1:u's Life of Lat. p. 122.
Now by my faye, sayd jollye Robin,
A sweaven I had this night;
I dreamt me of two wittye ymen,
That fast with me can fight.

Methought they did mee bente and binde,
And tooke my bow mee froe;
If I be Robin alive in this lande,
Ile be wroken on them towe.

Sweavens are swift, master, quoth John,
As the wind that blowes ore a hill;
For if itt be never so loude this night,
To-morrow itt may be still.

Buske yee, bowne yee, my merry men all,
And John shall goe with mee,
For Ile goe seeke yond wight yemen,
In greenwood where the bee.

Then the cast on their gownes of grene,
And tooke theyr bowes each one;
And they away to the greene forrest
A shooting forth are gone.

Until they came to the merry greenwood,
Where they had gladdest bee,
There were the ware of a wight yeomon,
His body leaned to a tree.

A sword and a dagger he wore by his side,
Of manye a man the bone;
And he was clad in his cupull hyde
Topp and tayll and mayne.

Stand you still, master, quoth Little John,
Under this tree so greene,
And I will goe to yond wight yeoman
To know what he dothe meane.

Ah! John, by me thou seest sette noe store,
And that I farleyn finde:
How oft send I my men before,
And tarry my selfe behinde?

It is no cunning a knife to ken,
And a man but heare him speake;
And itt were not for bursting of my bowe,
John, I thy head wold broake.

As often wordes they breeden hale,
So they parted Robin and John;
And John is gone to Barnesdale:
The gates* he knoweth eche one.

But when he came to Barnesdale,
Great heaviness there hee hadd,
For he found tow of his owne fellowes
Were slaine both in a slade,

And Scarlett he was flyinge a-fote
Fast over stooke and stone,
For the sherrife with seven score men
Fast after him is gone.

* i. e. ways, passes, paths, ridings. *Gate is a common word in the North for way.

One shoote now I will shoote, quoth John,
With Christ his mighte and mayne;
Ile make yond fellow that flyes scoe fast,
To stopp he shal be myne.

Then John bent up his long bende-bow,
And fetteled him to shoote:
The bow was made of a tender bough,
And fell downe to his foote.

Woe worth, woe worth thee, wicked wood,
That ere thou grew on a tree;
For now this day thou art my bala,
My boote when thou shold bee.

His shoote it was but losely shot,
Yet flewe not the arrowe in vaine
For itt met one of the sherriffes men,
Good William a Trent was slaine.

It had bene better of William a Trent
To have bene abed with sorrowe,
Than to be that day in the green wood sade
To meet with Little John's arrowe.

But as it is said, when men be mett
Fyve can doe more then three,
The sherriff hath taken Little John,
And bound him fast to a tree.

Thou shalt be drawn by dale and downe,
And hanged hye on a hill.
But thou mayst fayle of thy purpose, quoth John,
If itt be Christ his will.

Let us leave talking of Little John,
And thynke of Robin Hood,
How he is gone to the wight yeoman,
Where under the leaves he stood.

Good morrowe, good fellowe, said Robin so fayre,
"Good morrowe, good fellowe," quoth he:
Methinke by this bowe thou beares in thy hande 95
A good archer thou sholdst bee.

I am wifull of my waye, quo' the yeman,
And of my morning tyde,
Ile leade thee through the wood, sayd Robin,
Good fellow, Ile be thy guide. 100

I seake an outlawe, the stranger sayd,
Men call him Robin Hood;
Rather Ild meet with that proud outlawe
Than fortye pound soe good.

Now come with me thou wightye yeman,
And Robin thou soone shal see:
But first let us some pastime find
Under the greenwood tree.

First let us some mastereye make
Among the woods so even,
Wee may chance to meet with Robin Hood
Here att some unsette steven.

They cut them downe two summer shroggis,
That grew both under a breauere,
And sette them trescore rood in twaine 115
To shoot the prickes y-fero.
Robin thought on our ladye deere,
And soone leapt up againe,
And strait he came with a 'backward' stroke,
And he Sir Guy hath slayne.

He took Sir Guy's head by the hayre,
And sticked it on his bowes end:
Though hast beene a traytor all thy liffe,
Which thing must have an ende.

Robin pulled forth an Irish knife,
And nicked Sir Guy in the face,
That he was never on woman born,
Cold tell whose head it was.

Saies, Lye there, lye there, now Sir Guye,
And with me be not wrothe;
If thou have had the worse strokes at my hand, thou shalt have the better clothe.

Robin did off his gowne of greene,
And on Sir Guy did it throwe,
And hee put on that capull hyde,
That cladd him topp to toe.

The bowe, the arrowes, and little horne,
Now with me I will beare;
For I will away to Barnésdale,
To see how my men doe fare.

Robin Hood sett Guyes horne to his mouth,
And a loud blast in it did blow.
That beheard the sheriff of Nottingham,
As he leaned under a lowe.

Hearken, hearken, sayd the sheriff,
I hear noe tydings good.
For yonder I heare Sir Guye's borne blowe,
And he hath slaine Robin Hood.

Yonder I heare Sir Guye's horne blowe,
Itt blowes soe well in tye,
And yonder comes that wightye yeoman,
Cladd in his capull hyde.

Come byther, come byther, thou good Sir Guy,
Aske what thou wilt of mee.
O, I will none of thy gold, sayd Robin,
Nor I will none of thy fee:

But now I've slaine the master, he says,
Let me goe strike the knave;
This is all the rewarde I aske;
Nor noe other will I have.

Thou art a madman, said the sheriff,
Thou sholdest have had a knight's fee:
But seeing thy asking hath beene soe bad,
Well granted it shalbe.

When Little John heard his master speake,
Well knewe he it was his steven:
Now shall I be looest, quoth Little John,
With Christ his might in heaven.

Fast Robin lee hyed him to Little John,
He thought to loose him belive;
The sheriff and all his companye
Fast after him did drive.
IX.

AN ELEGY ON HENRY FOURTH EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

The subject of this poem which was written by Skelton, is the death of Henry Percy, fourth Earl of Northumberland, who fell a victim to the avarice of Henry VII. In 1489 the parliament had granted the king a subsidy for carrying on the war in Bretagne. This tax was found so heavy in the North that the whole country was in a flame. The E. of Northumberland, then lord lieutenant for Yorkshire, wrote to inform the king of the discontent, and praying an abatement. But nothing is so unrelenting as avarice; the king wrote back that not a penny should be abated. This message being delivered by the earl with too little caution, the populace rose, and, supposing him to be the promoter of their calamity, broke into his house, and murdered him, with several of his attendants, who yet are charged by Skelton with being backward in their duty on this occasion. This melancholy event happened at the earl's seat at Cocklodge, near Thirske, in Yorkshire, April 28, 1489. See Lord Bacon, &c.

If the reader does not find much poetical merit in this old poem, (which yet is one of Skelton's best,) he will see a striking picture of the state and magnificence kept up by our ancient nobility during the feudal times. This great earl is described here as having, among his menial servants, knights, squires, and even barons: see ver 34, 183, &c. which, however different from modern manners, was formerly not unusual with our greater barons, whose castles had all the splendour and offices of a royal court, before the laws against retainers abridged and limited the number of their attendants.

John Skelton, who commonly styled himself Poet Laureat, died June 21, 1529. The following poem, which appears to have been written soon after the event, is printed from an ancient MS. copy preserved in the British Museum, being much more correct than that printed among Skelton's Poems, in bl. Iet. 12mo. 1568. It is addressed to Henry Percy fifth Earl of Northumberland, and is prefixed &c. in the following manner:

Poeta Skelton Laureatus libellum suum metrice aloquitur.

Ad dominum proparator meum mea pagina Percy, Qui Northumbrorum jur&a paterna gerit, Ad nutum celebris tu prona repone leonis, Queque suo patri tristia justa cano. Ast ubi perlegiti, dubiam sub mente volutet Fortunam, cuncta que male fida rotat. Qui leo sit felix, et Nestorius occupet annos; Ad libitum cujus ipsa paratus ero.

Skelton Laureat upon the doloursome deth and much lamentable chauce of the most honorable Earle of Northumbrlande.

I wayle, I wepe, I sobbe, I sigh ful sore
The dedely fate, the dolefull desteny
Of him that is gone, alas! withoute restore,
Of the blode* royall descending nobelly;
Whos lordshepe dountles was slayne lamentably 5
Thorow tresun ageyn hym compassyd and wroucht;
Trew to his prince, in word, in dede, and thoug h.

Of hevenly poems, O Clyo calde by name
In the college of musis goddess hystorial,
Adres the to me, whiche am both haly and lume
In elect uterance to make memoryal:
To the for socour, to the for helpe I call
Myne homely rudnes and disgrighnes to expelle
With the freshe waters of Elcyons well.

* The mother of Henry, first Earl of Northumberland, was Mary daughter to Henry Earl of Lancaster, whose father Edmond was second son of King Henry III.—The mother and wife of the second Earl of Northumberland were both lineal descendants of King Edward III.—The Percys also were lineally descended from the Emperor Charlemaigne and the ancient Kings of France, by his ancestor Josceline du Lovain (son of Godfrey Duke of Brabant), who took the name of Percy on marrying the heiress of that house in the reign of Hen. II., Vid. Camden Britan. Edmonsdon, &c.
Of noble actes aunceyently enrolde,
Of famous princes and lorde of astate,
By thy report ar wonte to be extold,
Regestriend every every formourr date:
Of thy bountie after the usuall rate,
Kynde in me suche plenty of thy nobles,
Thes sorrowfull dites that I may shew expres.

In sesons past who hathe harde or sene
Of formar writinge by any presidente
That vilane hastarddis in ther furious tene,
Fullyd with malice of froward entente,
Confelter togeder of commoun conceyte
Falsey to slo ther mons singular goode lorde?
It may be registorde of shamefull records.

So noble a man, so valiant lorde and knight,
Fulfilld with honor, as all the worlde dothe ken;
At his commandeunt, which hade both day and Knyghtis and s quyers, at every season when [night
He calde uppon them, as menyall household men
Were no thes commones uncurteis karlis of kynde
To slo their owne lorde? God was not in their [minde. 35
And were not they to blame, I say also,
That were aboute hym, his owne servants of trust,
To suffer hym shayn of his mortal fo?
Fled away from hym, let hym ly in the dust:
They bode not till the rekening were discust. 40
What shuld I flatter? what shulde I close or paynt?
Fy, fy for shame, theirs hartes wer to faint.

In Englane and Fraunce, which grety was redouted:
Of whom both Faulders and Scotland stode in drede;
To whome grete aantes obeyde and lowtted:
A manny of rude vilhayms made him for to blode:
Unkindly they slew him, that help them oft at nede
He was there bulwark, their paves, and their wall,
Yet shamfully they slew hym; that shame mot them befal.

I say, ye commones, why wer ye so stark mad? 50
What frantky frenay fall in yourre brayne?
Where was your wit and reson, ye shoulde have had?
What willfull foly made yow to ryse aayne
Your natural lord? alas! I can not fayne.
Ye armed you with will, and left your wit bebynd;
Well may you be called commones most unkynd.

He was your chytreyne, your sheldre, your chef defence,
Redy to assyrt you in every tymne of nede:
Your worship dependd of his excellenc:
Alas! ye mad men, to far ye did excede:
Your hir was unhappy, to ill was your sped:
What movyd you agayn hym to war or to fight?
What aylyde you to sle your lord agayn all?

The grounde of his quarel was for his sovereign lord,
The welle concerning of all the hole lande,
Demandyng soche dutyes as nedis most acord
To the right of his prince which shoulde not be withstand;
For whos cause ye sley hym with your owne
hande:
But had his nobill men done wel that day,
Ye had not beene hable to have saide him nay.

But ther was fals packinge, or els I am begylde:
How-be-it the matter was evidant and playne,
For ye they had occupied ther sper and ther shielde,
This nede he mon doules hau synke or sleyne.
Bot men say they wer lynked with a double chayn,
And held with the commouns under a cloke,
Which kindeled the wyld fyre that made all this smoke.

The commouns reneyed ther taxes to pay
Of them demaundd and asked by the kinge;
With one voice importune, they playnly said nay: 80
They busskt them on a bushmente themself in baile to bringe:
Agayne the kinge's pleasure to wrastle or to wringe,
Bluntly as bestis with the boste and with cry
They saide, they forsede not, nor carede not to dy.

The noblenes of the northe this valiant lorde and knigght,
As man that was innocent of trechery or trayne,
Presed forthe boldly to witstand the myght,
And, lyke marcelli Hector, he fawt them aayne, Vigorously upon them with myght and with mayne,
Trustinge in noble men that wer with hym there: 90
But all they fled from hym for falshode or fere.

Barons, knights, squyers, one and alle,
Togeder with servaunts of his family,
Turnd their backis, and let ther master fall,
Of whos [life] they counted not a flye; 95
Take up whoes wolde for them, they let hym ly
Alas! his golde, his fee, his annual rente.
Upon suche a sort was ille bestowde and spent.

He was envyronde aboute on every syde
With his enemes, that were stark mad and wode;
Yet whiles he stode he gave them wounds wyde
Alas for routhie! what thouche his mynde were goode,
Hys courage manly, yet ther he shed his bloode!
All left alone, alas! he fawe in vyne;
For cruelly amonge them ther he was slayne. 105

Alas for pite! that-Percy thus was spyt,
The famous erle of Northumberlande:
Of knightly provès the sworde pomel and hult.
The mighty lyons doughted by se and landle;
O dolorous clauce of fortuns fruward hande! 110
What man remember how shamfully he was slayne,
From bitter weepinghe himself ran restryne!

O cruel Mars, thou dedly god of war!
O dolorous Tuesday, dedicate to thy name,
When thou shoke thy sworde so noble a man to mar!
O grounde grasious, unhappy he thy fame,
Whiche wer endewed with rede blode of the same!
Moste noble erle! O fowl museuryd grounde
Whereoue he got his fynal dedly wounde!

* Alluding to his crest and supporters. Doughted is contracted for redoubted.
O Atropos, of the fatal systers thre,
   Goddes mooste cruell unto the lyf of man,
All merciles, in the ys no pitë !
O homycide, whiche sleest all that thou kan,
So forcilly upon this erle thou ran,
That with thy sworde enharid of mortall drede;
Thou kit asunder his perfitg vitall thred !

My words unpullysht be nakide and playne,
Of aureat poemes they want ellumynynge ;
Bot by them to knowelege ye may attayne
Of this lordis dethe and of his mordrynge.
Which whils he lyvyd had fuyson of every thing,
Of knyghts, of squyres, chefe lord of toure and toune,
Tyl fykkill fortune began on hym to froyne.

Paregall to dukis, with kings he myght compare,
Surmountinge in honor all erls he did excede, 135
To all cuntres aboute hym reporte me I dare.
Lyke to Eneas benygne in worde and dede,
Valiant as Hector in every marcell ned,
Provvedent, discrete, circumspect, and wyse,
Tyll the chaunce ran agynce hym of fortune's duble dyse.

What nedethe me for to extoll his fame
With my rude pen enkanker all with rust ?
Whos noble actes shew worshiplye his name,
Transcendencyng far myne homely muse, that must
Yet sumwhat wyght suppryssyd with hardy lust,
Truly reportinge his right noble astate,
Immortallye whiche is immaculate.

His noble blode never diseteynyd was,
Trow to his prince for to defende his right,
Doublenes lateinge, fals maters to compas,
Treytory and treson he bannesht out of syght,
With travaeth to medle was all his hool delaying,
As all his kuntey kon testedy the same :
To slay such a lord, alas, it was grete shame.

If the hole quere of the musis yyne
In me all onely wer sett and comprisyde,
Embrathed with the blast of influence dyvyne,
As perfitglye as could be thought or dvyssyd ;
To me also althouche it were promysyd
Of Laureat Phebus hollye the eloquencie,
All were too litill for his magnificencie.

O yonge lyon, bot tender yet of age,
Grow and encrese, remembre thy thyn astate,
God the assyst unto thyn herytage,
And geve the grace to be more fortunate,
Agyne rebellious arme to make debaye,
And, as the lyonne, whiche is of bestis kynge,
Unto thy subjicets be kureis and beynyngue.

I pray God sende the prosperous lyf and long,
Stabile thy mynde constant to be and fast,
Right to maytayne, and to resist all wrouge : 120 135 146 155 160 165 170 175 180 185 190 195 200 205 210

All flatteringe fiytors abbor and from the cast,
Of foule detraction God kepe the from the blast:
Let double deflins in the have no place,
And be not light of credence in no case.

Wythe hevy chere, with dolorous hart and mynd,
Eche maen may sorow in his inward thought,
Thys lords death, whose pere is hard to fynd
Allgyf Englynd and Frauncy were thorow saught.
Al kings, all princes, all dukes, well theyought Bothe temporal and spiritual for to complayne
This noble man, that crewelly was saylye.

More specially barons, and those knygtes bold,
And all other gentylmen with hym enteretynd
In fea, as menyall men of his housold,
Whom he as lord worshiply maltayed :
To sorowfull wepyng they ought to be constraynd,
As oft as thei call to ther remembrance,
Of ther good lord the fate and dedely chaunce.

O perlese prince of hevyn emperyalle,
That with one worde formed al thing of nought ;
Hevyn, hell, and erth obey unto thi kall ;
Which to thy resemblynge wondresly hast wrought
All munkyn, whom thou full dere hast hogh,
With thy blode precious our finanse thou dyd pay,
And us redeemed, from the fendsy pray :

To the pray we, as prince incomperable,
As thou art of mercy and pite the well,
Thou bringe unto thy joy eternymal
The soule of this lorda from al daunger of hell,
In ended blis with the to byde and dwell
In thy palace above the orient,
Where thou art lorde, and God omnipotent.

O queene of mercy, O lady full of grace,
Maiden moste pure, and goddis moder dere,
To sorowfull harts chefe comfort and solace,
Of all women O fioure withouten pere,
Pray to thy son above the sturris cler,
He to vouchysafe by thy mediator
To pardon thy servant, and bringe to salvacion.

In joy tryumphant the hevenly yerarchy,
With all the hole sorte of that glorious place,
His soule mot receyve into thier company
Thorowe bounte of hym that formed all solace :
Well of pite, of mercy, and of grace,
The father, the son, and the holy goste
In Trinitate one God of myghts moste.

†† I have placed the foregoing poem of Skelton's before the following extract from Hawes, not only because it was written first, but because I think Skelton is in general to be considered as the earlier poet; many of his poems being written long before Hawes's \"Granada Amour.\"
THE TOWER OF DOCTRINE.

X.

THE TOWER OF DOCTRINE.

The reader has here a specimen of the descriptive powers of Stephen Hawes, a celebrated poet in the reign of Hen. VII., though now little known. It is extracted from an allegorical poem of his (written in 1505,) intitled, "The Hist. of Gravende Amoure & La Belle Pucel, called the Palace of Pleasure, &c." 4to. 1555. See more of Hawes in Ath. Ox. v. 1, p. 6, and Warton's Observ. v. 2, p. 105. He was also author of a book, intitled, "The Temple of Glass. Wrote by Stephen Hawes, gentleman of the bedchamber to K. Henry VII." Pr. for Caxton, 4to. no date.

The following Stanzas are taken from Chap. III. and IV. of the Hist. above mentioned. "How Fame departed from Gravende Amour and left him with Governancce and Grace, and howe he went to the Tower of Doctrine, &c." As we are able to give no small lyric piece of Hawes's, the reader will excurse the insertion of this extract.

I TOOK about and saw a craggie roche,
Fare in the west nere to the element,
And as I dyd then unto it approche,
Upon the toppie I sawe refulgent
The royal tower of Morall Document,
Made of fine copper with turrettes flyare and hye,
Which against Phebus shone soe marvevelysonly.

That for the very perfect brightnes
What of the tower, and of the cleare sunne
I could nothing behold the goodlines
Of that palisace, whereas Doctrine did wonne:
Tyll at the last, with mysty wyndes donne,
The radiant brightnes of golden Phebus
Auster gan cover with clowde tenebrus.

Then to the tower I drewe nere and nere,
And often mused of the great hybnes
Of the craggie rocke which quadrant did appeare:
But the flyare tower, (so much of ryches
Was all about,) sexangled doublis;
Gargeyd with grayhoundes, and with manylyons,
20 Made of fyne golde; with divers sundry dragons*.

The little turrets with ymage of golde
About was set, whiche with the wynde aye moved
With propre vices, that I did well beholde
About the tower, in sundry wyse they hoved
25 With goodly pypes, in their mouthes tunned,
That with the wynde they pyped a daunce
Ilcapped Amon de la hauty plesance.

V. 25, towers, PC.

* Grayhoundes, Lions, Dragons, were at that time the royal supporters.

The toure was great of marveyleous wydnes,
To whych ther was no way to passe but one,
Into the toure for to have an intres:
A grece ther was ychesyd all of stone
Out of the rocke, on whyche men dyd gone
Up to the toure, and in lykewyse dyd I
With bothe the Grayhoundes in my company*.: 35

Tyll that I came unto a ryall gate,
Where I sawe stondynghe the goodly portres,
Whychaxd me, from whence I came u-late;
To whome I gan in every thynge expresse
All myne adventure, chaunce, and busynesse,
And eke my name; I told her every dell:
Whan she herte this she lyked me right well.

Her name, she sayd, was called Countenaunce;
Into the 'base' courte she dyd me then led,
Where was a fountayne depuried of plesance,
A noble spryngye, a ryall conduye-te,
Made of fyne golde enameled with reed;
And on the toppie four dragons blewre and stoute
Thys dulect water in four partes dyd spoute.

Of whychre there flowed foure ryvers ryght cler,
Sweter than Nylus; or Ganges was ther odoure:
Tygrys or Eufrates unto them no pere:
I dyd than taste the aromatyke lycorce,
Fragraunt of fume, and sweete as any flooure;
And in my mouthe it had a marveelyson scens
Of divers spycyes, I knewe not what it ment.

And after thys further forth me brought
Dame Countenaunce into a goodly Hall,
Of jasper stones it was wonderly wrought:
Thy wyndowes cleare depuried all of crystall,
And in the roufe on hye over all
Of golde was made a ryght crafty vyn;
Instede of grapes the rubies there did shyne.

The flore was paved with bernall clarified,
With pillers made of stones precious,
Like a place of pleasure so gayely glorified,
It myght be called a palisace glorious,
So muche delectable and solacions;
The hall was hanged hye and circular
With cloth of arras in the rycheast maner,
That treated well of a ful noble story,

Of the doubyt waye to the Tower Perilous;
Hawe a noble knyght should wynne the victory
Of many a serpente foule and odious.

V. iv. besy courte, PC.
V. 49, parties, PC.
* This alludes to a former part of the Poem.
† Nysus, PC.
‡ The story of the poem.
XI.

THE CHILD OF ELLE,

—is given from a fragment in the Editor's folio MS.; which, though extremely defective and mutilated, appeared to have so much merit, that it excited a strong desire to attempt a completion of the story. The reader will easily discover the supplemental stanzas by their inferiority, and at the same time be inclined to pardon it, when he considers how difficult it must be to imitate the affecting simplicity and artless beauties of the original.

Child was a title sometimes given to a knight. See Gloss.

The Child of Elle to his garden went,
And stood at his garden pale,
Whan, lo! he beheld fair Emmelines page
Come tripping downe the dale.

The Child of Elle he hyed him thence,
Y-wis he stoode not stille,
And soone he motto faire Emmelines page
Come climbing up the hille.

Nowe Christe thee save, thou little foot-page,
Now Christe thee save and see!
Oh tell me how does thy ladye gaye,
And what may thy tydings bee?

My lady she is all woe-begone,
And the teares they falle from her eyne;
And aye she laments the deadlye feude
Betweene her house and thine.

And here shee sends thee a silken scarfe
Bedewed with many a tear,
And biddes thee sometimes thinke on her,
Who loved thee so deare.

And here shee sends thee a ring of golde
The last boone thou mayst have,
And biddes thee weare it for her sake,
When she is sayd in grave.

For, ah! her gentle heart is broke,
And in grave soone must shee bee,
Sith her father hath chose her a new new love,
And forbidde her to think of thee.

Her father hath brought her a carlish knight,
Sir John of the north countrie,
And within three dayes shee must him wedde,
Or he vowes he will her slaye.

Nowe hye thee bacle, thou little foot-page,
And greet thy ladye from mee,
And tell her that I her owne true love
Will dye, or sette her free.

Nowe bye thee bache, thou little foot-page,
And let thy fair ladye know
This knight will I bee at her bowre winderowe,
Bette me wenle or woe.

The boye he tripped, the boye he ranne
He neither stint ne stayd
Untill he came to fair Emmelines bowre
When knellinge downe he sayd,

O ladye, I've been with thy own true love,
And he goest thee well by mee;
This night will he be at thy bowre-winderewe,
And dye or sette thee free.

Nowe daye was gone and night was come,
And all were fast asleepe,
All save the ladye Emmeline,
Who sate in her bowre to weep:

And soone she heard her true loves voice
Lowe whispering at the walle,
Awake, awake, my deare ladye,
Tis I thy true love call.

Awake, awake, my ladye deare,
Come, mount this faire palfyre
This ladder of ropes will lette thee downe,
Lie carrye thee hones aways.

Nowe nay, nowe nay, thou gentle knight,
Nowe nay, this may not bee;
For aye shold I tint my maiden fame,
If alone I should wend with thee.

O ladye, thou with a knighte so true
Mayst safely wend along,
To my ladye mother I will thee bringe,
Where marriage shall make us one.

"My father he is a baron bolde,
Of lyncge proude and hye;
And what would he saye if his daughter
Awaye with a knight that shul fly?"

Ah! well I wot, he never would rest,
Nor his neste should doe him no good,
Until he had slayne thee, Child of Elle,
And sene thy deare hearts bloodes."
And thrice he clasped her to his brest,
And kist her tenderlie:
The tears that fell from her fair eyes
Ranne like the fontayne free.

Hee mounted himselfe on his steede so talle,
And her on a fair palfraye,
And slung his bugle about his necke,
And roundlye they rode awaye.

All this beheard her owne damselle,
In her bed whereas shee ley,
Quoth shee, My lord shall knowe of this,
Soe I shall have golde and fee.

Awake, awake, thou baron bolde!
Awake, my noble dame!
Your daughter is fledde with the Child of Elle
To doe the deede of shame.

The baron he woke, the baron he rose,
And called his merry men all:
"And come thou forth, Sir John the knight,
Thy ladye is carried to thrall."

Faire Emmeline scant had ridden a mile,
A mile forth of the towne,
When she was aware of her fathers men
Come gallopping over the downe:

And formost came the carlish knight,
Sir John of the north countraye:
"Nowe stop, nowe stop, thou false traitoure,
Nor carry that ladye awaye.

For she is come of hye lineage,
And was of a ladye borne,
And ill it beseems thee a false churl's somne
To carrye her hence to scorne."

Nowe loud thou lyest, Sir John the knight,
Nowe thou doste lye of mee;
A knight mee gott, and a ladye me bore,
Soe never did none by thee.

But light nowe downe, my ladye faire,
Light downe, and hold my steed.
While I and this discourteous knighte
Doe trye this arduous deede.

But light nowe downe, my deare ladye,
Light downe, and hold my horse;
While I and this discourteous knighte
Doe trye our valour's force.

Fair Emmeline sighed, faire Emmeline wept,
And did all tremblinge stand:
At lengthe she sprang upon her knee,
And held his lifted hand.

Pardon, my lorde and father deare,
This faire yong knyght and mee:
Trust me, but for the carlish knyght,
I never had fled from thee.

Oft have you called your Emmeline
Your darling and your joye;
O let not then your harsh resolves
Your Emmeline destroye.

The baron he strookt his dark-brown cheeke,
And turned his heade asyde
To whipe awaye the starting teare
Hee strongly strave to hyde.

In depee revolving thought he stooede,
And museed a little space:
Then raised faire Emmeline from the grounde,
With many a fond embrace.

Here take her, Child of Elle, he sayd,
And gave her lilye white hand;
Here take my deare and only child,
And with her half my land:

Thy father once mine honour wronge
In daues of youthful pride;
Do thou the injurye repayre
In fondnesse for thy bride.

And as thou love her, and hold her deare,
Heaven prosper thee and thine:
And nowe my blessing wend wi' thee,
My lovelye Emmeline.

†† From the word kirke in ver. 159, this hath been thought to be a Scottish Ballad, but it must be acknowledged that the line referred to is among the additions supplied by the Editor: besides, in the Northern counties of England, kirk is used in the common dialect for church, as well as beyond the Tweed.

Her lover he put his horne to his mouth,
And blew both loud and shrill,
And soone he saw his owne merry men
Come ryding over the hill.

"Nowe hold thy hand, thou bold baron,
I pray thee hold thy hand,
Nor ruthless rend two gentle hearts
Fast knitt in true love's band."

Thy daughter I have dearly loved
Full long and many a day;
But with such love as holy kirke
Hath freelye said wee may.

O give consent, shee may be mine,
And bless a faithfull paire:
My lands and livings are not small,
My house and lineage faire:

My mother she was an earl's daughter,
And a noble knyght my sire—
The baron he frowned and turn'd away
With mickle dole and ire.

Fair Emmeline sighed, faire Emmeline wept,
And did all tremblinge stand:
At lengthe she sprang upon her knee,
And held his lifted hand.

Pardon, my lorde and father deare,
This faire yong knyght and mee:
Trust me, but for the carlish knyght,
I never had fled from thee.

Oft have you called your Emmeline
Your darling and your joye;
O let not then your harsh resolves
Your Emmeline destroye.

The baron he strookt his dark-brown cheeke,
And turned his heade asyde
To whipe awaye the starting teare
Hee strongly strave to hyde.

In depee revolving thought he stooede,
And museed a little space:
Then raised faire Emmeline from the grounde,
With many a fond embrace.

Here take her, Child of Elle, he sayd,
And gave her lilye white hand;
Here take my deare and only child,
And with her half my land:

Thy father once mine honour wronge
In daues of youthful pride;
Do thou the injurye repayre
In fondnesse for thy bride.

And as thou love her, and hold her deare,
Heaven prosper thee and thine:
And nowe my blessing wend wi' thee,
My lovelye Emmeline.

†† From the word kirke in ver. 159, this hath been thought to be a Scottish Ballad, but it must be acknowledged that the line referred to is among the additions supplied by the Editor: besides, in the Northern counties of England, kirk is used in the common dialect for church, as well as beyond the Tweed.
was printed at Glasgow, by Robert and Andrew Foulis, mdcclv: 8vo, 12 pages.—We are indebted for its publication (with many other valuable things in these volumes) to Sir David Dalrymple, Bart, who gave it as it was preserved in the memory of a lady, that is now dead.

The reader will here find it improved, and enlarged with several fine stanzas, recovered from a fragment of the same ballad, in the Editor’s folio MS. It is remarkable that the latter is entitled Captain Adam Carre, and is in the English idiom. But whether the author was English or Scotch, the difference originally was not great. The English Ballads are generally of the North of England, the Scottish are of the South of Scotland, and of consequence the country of Ballad-singers was sometimes subject to one crown, and sometimes to the other, and most frequently to neither. Most of the finest old Scotch songs have the scene laid within twenty miles of England, which is indeed all poetic ground, green hills, remains of woods, clear brooks. The pastoral scenes remain: of the rude chivalry of former ages happily nothing remains but the ruins of the castles, where the more daring and successful robbers resided. The House or Castle of the Rodes stood about a measured mile south from Duns, in Berwickshire: some of the ruins of it may be seen to this day. The Gordons were anciently seated in the same county: the two villages of East and West Gordon lie about ten miles from the castle of the Rodes. The fact, however, on which the Ballad is founded, happened in the North of Scotland, (see below,) yet it is but too faithful a specimen of the vio\n\l\ences practised in the feudal times in every part of this Island, and indeed all over Europe.

From the different titles of this Ballad, it should seem that the old strolling hards or minstrels (who gained a livelihood by reciting these poems) made no scruple of changing the names of the personages they introduced, to humour their hearers. For instance, if a Gordon’s conduct was blame-worthy in the opinion of that age, the obsequious minstrel would, when among Gordons, change the name to Car, whose chin or sept lay further West, and vice versa.—The foregoing observation, which I owed to Sir David Dalrymple, will appear the more perfectly well founded, if, as I have since been informed (from Crawford’s Memoirs), the principal Commander of the expedition was a Gordon, and the immediate Agent a Car, or Ker; for then the reciter might, upon good grounds, impute the barbarity here deplored, either to a Gordon or a Car, as best suited his purpose. In the third volume the reader will find a similar instance. See the song of Gil Morris, wherein the principal character introduced had different names given him, perhaps from the same cause. It may be proper to mention, that in the folio MS. instead of the “Castle of the Rodes,” it is the “Castle of Britton’s-borrow,” and also “Draitors” or “Draitors-borrow,” (for it is very obscurely written,) and “Capt. Adam Carre” is called the “Lord of Westerton-town.” Uniformity required that the additional stanzas supplied from that copy should be clothed in the Scottish orthography and idiom: this has therefore been attempted, though perhaps imperfectly.

It fell about the Martinmas,
Quhen the wind blew shril and cauld,
Said Edom o’ Gordon to his men,
We maun draw till a hauld.

And quhat a hauld sall we draw till,
My mirry men and me?
We wul gae to the house o’ the Rodes,
To see that fair lady.

The lady stude on hir castle wa’
Beheld baith dale and down:
There she was ware of a host of men
Cum ryding towards the toun.

O see ze nat, my mirry men a’?
O see ze nat qulat I see?
Methinks I see a host of men:
I marveil quha they be.

She weend it had been hir lvely lord,
As he cam ryding lame;
It was the traitor Edom o’ Gordon,
Quha reckt nae sin nor shame.

She had nae sooner buskit hirse,
And putten on hir gown.
But Edom o’ Gordon and his men Were round about the toun.

They had nae sooner supper sett,
Nae sooner said the grace,
But Edom o’ Gordon and his men Were light about the place.

The lady ran up to hir towir head,
Sa fast as she could hie,
To see if by hir faire speeches She could wi’ him agree.

But quhat he see this lady saif,
And hir yates all locked fast,
He fell into a rage of wrath,
And his loch was all aghast.

* This Ballad is well known in that neighbourhood, where it is entitled Adam o’ Gordon. It may be observed, that the famous freebooter, whom Edward I. fought with hand to hand, near Farnham, was named Adam Gordon.
EDOM O' GORDON.

Cum doun to me, ze lady gay,
Cum doun, cum doun to me: 40
This night sail ye lig within mine armes,
To-morrow my bride sail be.

I winnae cum doun, ze fals Gordon,
I winnae cum doun to thee; 45
I winnae forsake my ain dear lord,
That is seae far frae me.

Give owre zour house, ze lady fair,
Give owre zour house to me, 50
Or I sall brenn yourscl therein,
Bot and zour babies three.

I winnae give owre, ze false Gordon,
To nac sik traitor as see: 55
And if ze brenn my ain dear babies,
My lord shall make ze drie.

But reach my pistoll, Glaud, my man,*
And charge ze weil my gun*; 60
For, but an I pierce that bluidy butcher,
My babies we been undone.

She stude upon bir castle wa',
And let twa bullets flee*; 65
She mist that bluidy butchers hart,
And only raz'd his knee.

Set fire to the house, quo' fals Gordon,
All wood wi' dule and ire: 70
Fals lady, ze sall rue this deid,
As ze bren in the fire.

Wae worth, wae worth ze, Jock my man, 75
I paid ze weil zour feef;
Quhy pu' ze out the ground-wa' stane,
Lets in the reek to me?

And ein wae worth ze, Jock my man, 80
I paid ze weil zour hire;
Quhy pu' ze out the ground-wa' stane,
To me lets in the fire?

Ze paid me weil my hire, lady; 85
Ze paid me weil my feef;
But now I'm Edom o'Gordons man,
Maun either doe or die.

O than bespaik bir litle son,
Sate on the nurses knee: 90
Sayes, Mither deare, gi' owre this house,
For the reek it smitthers me.

I wad gie a' my gowd, my childe,
Sae wald I a' my fee, 95
For one blast o' the western wind,
To blaw the reek frae thee.

O then bespaik bir dochter dear, 100
She was bairth jimp and sma:
O row me in a pair o' sheits,
And tow me owre the wa.

They rowd hir in a pair o' sheits,
And towd hir owre the wa: 105
But on the point of Gordon's spear
She gat a deadly fa.

O bonnie bonnie was hir mouth,
And cherry were her cheeks,
And clear clear was hir zellow hair,
Whereon the reid bluidy dreips.

Then wi' his spear he turnd hir owre,
O gin hir face was wan! 110
He sayd, Ze are the first that eir
I wisht alive again.

He turnd hir owre and owre againe,
O gin hir skyn was whyte! 115
I might ha spared that bonnie face
To hae been sum mans delyte.

Busk and boun, my merry men a',
For ill dooms I doe guess: 120
I canne luik in that bonnie face,
As it lyes on the grass.

Thame, luiks to freits, my master deir,
Then freits will follow thame: 125
Let it nieir be said brave Edom o' Gordon
Was daunted by a dame.

But quhen the lady see the fire
Cum flaming owre hir head,
She wept and kist her children twain,
Said, Barns, we been but dead.

The Gordon then his bougill blew,
And said, 'Awa', 'awa'; 130
This house o' the Rhodes is a' in flame,
I hauld it time to ga.'

O then bespyred hir ain dear lord,
As hee cum owr the lee; 135
He sied his castle all in blaze
Sa far as he could see.

Then sair, O sair, his mind misgave,
And all his hart was wae; 140
Put on, put on, my wighton men,
So fast as ze can gae.

Put on, put on, my wighton men,
Sa fast as ze can drie; 145
For he that is hindmost of the thrang
'Sall nei get guid o' me.

Than sum they rade, and some they rin,
You fast out-owr the beat; 150
But eir the foremost could get up,
Baith lady and babes were breat.

He wrang his bands, he rent his hair,
And wept in teeneefu' muid: 155
O traitors, for this cruel deid
Ze sall weep teirs o'bluid.

V. 98, 102, O Gin, &c. a Scottish idiom to express, great admiration. V. 109, 110, Thame, &c. &c. Them that look after omens of ill luck, ill luck will follow.

* These three lines are restored from Foullis's edition, and the fol. MS., which last reads " the buffets " in ver. 38.
And after the Gordon he is gane,
So fast as he might drie;
And soon i' the Gordon's soul hartis bluid
He's broken his dear ladie.

**

†† Since the foregoing ballad was first printed, the subject of it has been found recorded in Ath.
Spotswood's History of the Church of Scotland,
p. 259; who informs us, that
"Anno 1571. In the north parts of Scotland, Adam Gordon (who was deputy for his brother the Earl of Huntley) did keep a great stir; and, under colour of the queen's authority, committed divers oppressions, especially upon the Forbes.....
Having killed Arthur Forbes, brother to the Lord Forbes.... Not long after, he sent to summon the house of Tavoy, pertaining to Alexander Forbes.
The lady refusing to yield without direction from her husband, he put fire unto it, and burnt her therein, with children and servants, being twenty-seven persons in all.

"This inhuman and barbarous cruelty made his name odious, and stained all his former doings; otherwise he was held very active and fortunate in his enterprizes."

This fact, which had escaped the Editor's notice, was in the most obliging manner pointed out to him by an ingenious writer who signs his name H. H (Newcastle, May 9,) in the Gentleman's Magazine for May, 1773, p. 219.

THE END OF THE FIRST BOOK.

SERIES THE FIRST.

BOOK II.

I

BALLADS THAT ILLUSTRATE SHAKSPEARE.

Our great dramatic poet having occasionally quoted many ancient ballads, and even taken the plot of one, if not more, of his plays from among them, it was judged proper to preserve as many of these as could be recovered, and, that they might be the more easily found, to exhibit them in one collective view. This second book is therefore set apart for the reception of such ballads as are quoted by Shakespeare, or contribute in any degree to illustrate his writings: this being the principal point in view, the candid reader will pardon the admission of some pieces that have no other kind of merit.

The design of this book being of a dramatic tendency, it may not be improperly introduced with a few observations on the origin of the English Stage, and on the conduct of our first Dramatic Poets; a subject which, though not unsuccessfully handled by several good writers already*, will yet perhaps admit of some further illustration.

ON THE ORIGIN OF THE ENGLISH STAGE, &c.

It is well known that dramatic poetry in this and most other nations of Europe owes its origin, or at least its revival, to those religious shows, which in the dark ages were usually exhibited on the more sacred festivals. At those times they were wont to represent in the churches the lives and miracles of the saints, or some of the more important stories of Scripture. And as the most mysterious subjects were frequently chosen, such as the Incarnation, Passion, and Resurrection of Christ, &c., these exhibitions acquired the general name of Mysteries.
At first they were probably a kind of dumb shows,
intermingled, it may be, with a few short speeches;
at length they grew into a regular series of connected dialogues, formally divided into acts and scenes. Specimens of these in their most improved state (being at best but poor artless compositions) may be seen among Dodsley's Old Plays and in Osborne's Harleian Miscel. How they were exhibit-hited in their most simple form, we may learn from an ancient novel, often quoted by our old dramatic Poets, entitled "a Mery Jest of a Man that was called Howleglass,"† &c., being a translation from the Dutch language, in which he is named Uelsenpiegle. Howleglass, whose waggish tricks are the subject of this book, after many adventures comes to live with a priest, who makes him his parish-clerk. This priest is described as keeping Leman or concombine, who had but one eye, to whom Howleglass owed audge for revealing his rugitories to his master. The story thus proceeds:
"And then in the meanse season, while Howleglass, was pysh clarke, at Easter they should play the

* See Ben Johnson's Poetaster, act iii. sec. 4, and his † Howleglass is said in the preface to have died in M,CCC,L.
At the end of the book, in M,CCC,L.
Resurrection of our Lord: and for because than the men wer not learned, nor could not read, the priest toke his leeman, and put her in the grave for an Aungell: and this seing Howleglas, toke him to iij of the slysmost persons that were in the towne, that played the iij Maries; and the Person [i.e. Priest or Refor- tor] played Christe, with a baner in his hand. Thanaide Howleglas to the symple persons, Whan the Aungell asketh you, whomse ye seeke, you may saye, The parsons leeman with one iye. Than it fortuned that the tyne was come that they must playe, and the Aungell asked them whom they sought, and than sayd they, as Howleglas had shewed and lerned them afore, than and answered they, We seke the priests leman with one iye. And than the priest might heare that he was mocked. And when the priests leman herd that she arose out of the grave, and would have smytten with her fist Howleglas upon the cheke, but she missed him and amote one of the simple persons that played one of the three Maries; and he gave her another; and than toke she him by the hearre [hair]; and that seing his wyfe, came running hastly to smite the priests leman; and than the priest seeing this, caste down his baner and went to helpe his woman, so that the woman gave the other sore strokes to stryke and noyse in the churche. And than Howleglas sayng themlynginge together by the eares in the bodi of the churche, went his way out of the village, and came no more, there (c)."

As the old Mysteries frequenty required the representation of some allegorical personage, such as Death, Sin, Charity, Faith, and the like, by degrees the rude poets of those unlettered ages began to form complete dramatic pieces consisting entirely of such personifications. These they entitled Moral Plays, or Moralities. The Mysteries were very inartificial, representing the Scripture stories simply according to the letter. But the Moralities are not devoid of invention; they exhibit outlines of the dramatic art: they contain something of a fable or plot, and even attempt to delineate characters and manners. I have now before me two that were printed early in the reign of Henry VIII; in which I think one may plainly discover the seeds of Tragedy and Comedy: for which reason I shall give a short analysis of them both.

One of them is entitled "Everyman" (d). The subject of this piece is the summoning of Man out of the world by Death; and its moral, that nothing will then avail him but a well-spent life and the comforts of religion. This subject and moral are opened in a monologue spoken by the Messenger (for that was the name generally given by our ancestors to the Prologue on their rude stage:) then God (e) is represented; who, after some general complaint on the degeneracy of mankind, and orders him to bring before his tribunal Every- man, for so is called the personage who represents the Human Race. Every-man appears, and receives the summons with all the marks of confusion and terror. When Death is withdrawn, Every-man applies for relief in this distress to Fellowship, Kindred, Goods, or Riches, but they successively renounce and forsake him. In this disconsolate state he betakes himself to Good Dedes, who, after upbraiding him with his long neglect of her (f), introduces him to her sister Knowledge, and she leads him to the "holy man Confession," who appoints him penance; this he inflicts upon himself on the stage and, in order to receive the sacraments of the priest. On his return he begins to wax faint, and, after Strength, Beauty, Discre- tion, and Five Wits (g) have all taken their final leave of him, gradually expires on the stage; Good Dedes still accompanying him to the last. Then an Aungell descends to sing his Requiem; and the Epi- logue is spoken by a person, called Doctour, who recapitulates the whole, and delivers the moral: "If. This memoriall men may have in mynde, Ye herers, take it of worth old and yonge, And forsake Pryde, for he deceyveth you in thende, And remembre Beautye, Five Wits, Strength and They all at last do Every Man forsake; [Discretion, Save his Good Dedes there dote he take; But beware, for and they be small Before God he hath no helpe at all," &c.

From this short analysis it may be observed, that "Every Man" is a grave solemn piece, not without some rude attempts to excite terror and pity, and therefore may not improperly be referred to the class of Tragedy. It is remarkable that in this old simple drama the fable is conducted upon the strictest model of the Greek tragedy. The action is simply one, the time of action is that of the performance, the scene is never changed, nor the stage ever empty. Every- Man, the hero of the piece, after his first appearance never withdraws, except when he goes out to receive the sacraments, which could not well be ex- hibited in public; and during his absence Know- ledge descants on the excellence and power of the priesthood, somewhat after the manner of the Greek chorus. And indeed, except in the circumstance of Every-Man’s expiring on the stage, the Sampson Agonistes of Milton is hardly formed on a severer plan (h).

The other play is entitled "Hick-Scornor" (i), and bears no distant resemblance to Comedy: its chief aim seems to be to exhibit characters and manners, its plot being much less regular than the foregoing. The Prologue is spoken by Pity represented under the character of an aged pilgrim; he is joined by Contemplacyon and Pereverence, two holy men, who, after lamenting the degeneracy of the age, declare their resolution of stemming the torrent. Pity then is left upon the stage, and presently found by Frewyll, representing a lewed debauche, who, with his dissolute companion Imaginacion, relate their manners, and not without humour de- scribe the stews and other places of base resor- tion. They are presently joined by Hick-Scornor, who is drawn as a libertine returned from travel, and agreeably to his name, scoffs at religion. These three are described as extremely vicious, who

---

(c) V. IMPRINTED, by WYLLIAM COPLAND: without date, 4to. bl. let. among Mr. Garrick's Old Plays, K. vol. X.

(d) This play has been reprinted by Mr. Hawkins in his 3 vols. of Old Plays, entitled, "The Origin of the English Drama." 12mo. Oxford, 1773. See vol. i. p. 27.

(e) The second person of the Trinity seems to be meant.
glory in every act of wickedness: at length two of them quarrel, and Pity endeavours to part the fray; on this they fall upon him, put him in the stocks, and there leave him. Pity, thus imprisoned, descants, in a kind of lyric measure on the profanity of the age, and in this situation is found by Perseverance and Contemplation, who set him at liberty, and advise him to go in search of the delinquents. As soon as he is gone, Frewill appears again; and, after relating in a very comic manner some of his rogueries and escapes from justice, is rebuked by the two holy men, who after a long altercation, at length convert him and his libertine companion Ignamcarion from their vicious course of life; and then the play ends with a few verses from Perseverance by way of epilogue. This and every morality I have seen conclude with a solemn prayer. They are all of them in rhyme; in a kind of loose stanza, intermixed with distichs.

It would be needless to point out the absurdities in the plan and conduct of the foregoing play; they are evidently great. It is sufficient to observe, that, butting the moral and religious reflection of Pity, &c. the play is of a comic cast, and contains no serious display of some of the vices of the age. Indeed the author has generally been so little attentive to the allegory, that we need only substitute other names to his personages, and we have real characters and living manners.

We see then that the writers of these moralities were upon the very threshold of real tragedy and comedy; and therefore we are not to wonder that tragedies and comedies in form soon after took place, especially as the revival of learning about this time brought them acquainted with the Roman and Greek models.

II. At what period of time the moralities had their rise here, it is difficult to discover. But plays of miracles appear to have been exhibited in England soon after the Conquest. Matthew Paris tells us that Geoffrey, afterwards Abbot of St. Albans, a Norman, who had been sent for over by Abbot Richard to take upon him the direction of the school of that monastery, coming too late, went to Dunstable and taught in the abbey there; where he caused to be acted (probably by his scholars) a miracle play of St. Catharine, composed by himself. (a).

This was long before the year 1119, and probably within the 11th century. The above play of St. Catharine was, for aught that appears, the first spectacle of that sort which was exhibited in these kingdoms: and an eminent French writer thinks it was even the first attempt towards the revival of Dramatic Entertainments in all Europe; being long before the Representations of Mysteries in France; for these did not begin till the year 1398 (b).

But whether they derived their origin from the above exhibition or not, it is certain that Holy Plays, representing the miracles and sufferings of the Saints, were become common in the reign of Henry II.; and a lighter sort of Interludes appear not to have been then unknown. In the subsequent age of Chaucer (c) "Plays of Miracles" in Lent were the common resort of idle glossips (d).

They do not appear to have been so prevalent on the continent, for the learned historian of the council of Constance (e) ascribes to the English the introduction of plays into Germany. He tells us that the Emperor, having been absent from the council for some time, was at his return received with great rejoicings, and that the English fathers in particular did, upon that occasion, cause a sacred play to be acted before him on Sunday Jan. 31, 1417; the subjects of which were:—The Nativity of our Saviour; the Arrival of the Eastern Magi; and the Massacre by Herod. Thence it appears, says this writer, that the Germans are obliged to the English for the invention of this sort of spectacles, unknown to them before that period.

The fondness of our ancestors for dramatic exhibitions of this kind, and some curious particulars relating to this subject will appear from the House of Lords Playhold Book of the fifth Earl of Northumberland, A. D. 1512: (f) whence I shall select a few extracts, which show that the exhibiting scripture dramas on the great festivals entered into the regular establishment, and formed part of the domestic regulations of our ancient nobility; and, what is more remarkable, that it was as much the business of the chaplain in those days to compose Plays for the family, as it is now for him to make sermons.

The opening of our story is as follows:—The Almonar, and if he be a maker of Interludys, than he to have a servant to the intent for writynge of the Parts; and ells to have none. The master of gramer, &c. (g) Sect. V. p. 44.

"Item, my lorde usith and accusemour to gyf herelye if is lordship kepeth a chapell and be at home, then of his lordshipes chapell, if they doo play the play of the Nativity upon cristymes day in the mornynge in my lorde chapell before his lordship (h)."

"Item, . . . item, to them of his lordship chappell and other his lordships servants that doth play the play before his lordship upon Shrof-Tewday at night yereby in reward—xa." Ibid, p. 345.

"Item, . . . . to them . . . . that playeth the play of

(a) Apuld Dunestapoliain . . . quondam ludum de sancta Katerina. (cum miracula etgariet appellamam) fecit. Ad quod decretus, petit a sacrista sancti Albani, ut ibi Capus Chorales accommodarentur, et obnutit. Et fuit ludus ille de sancta Katerina. Vixit Abbat, ad fin. Hist. Mat. Paris, fol. 1639, p. 56.—We see here that Plays of Miracles were become common enough in the time of Mat. Paris, who flourished about 1240. But that indeed appears from the more early writings of Fitz-Stephens: quoted below.

(b) Vid. Abregé Chron. de l'Hist. de France par M. Heurtault, à l'ann, 1119.

(c) See Fitz-Stephens's Description of London, preserved by Swon, (and reprinted with notes, &c. by the Rev. Mr. Pegge, in 1774, 4to.) Londiniæ pro spectaculis theatralibus, pro ludis sceniciis, ludus habet sanctiores, representationes miraculorum, &c. He is thought to have written in the reign of Hen. II. &c. and to have died in that of Richard I. It is true, at the end of this book we find mentioned Heremicius regem tertiam; but this is doublius Henry the Second's son, who was crowned during the life of his father, in 1170, and is generally distinguished as Rex jucundus Rex floridus, and sometimes they were jointed named Reges Anglici. From a great friend to the "De Religione," it should seem that the body of St. Thomas Becket was just then a new acquisicion to the Church of Canterbury.

(d) See Prologue to Wife of Bath's Tale, v. 6137. Tyrwhit.

(f) The regulations and establishments of the household of Hen. Alg. Percy, 6th Earl of Northumb. Lond. 1770. Svo. Whereof a small impression was printed by order of the late Earl of Northumb. of the goodness of Northumb. in presents to their friends.—Although begun in 1512, some of the Regulations were compos'd so late as 1525.
... upon estur day in the mornynge in ay lordis 'chapell' befors his lordshipes—xxs. Ibid.

Item, My lordes useth and accustometh yerly to gyf hym which is ordynede to be the Master of the Revels yerly in my lordis houes in cristmas for the overseyninge and orderinge of his lordships plays, interludes and dresinge that is plaied befors his lordship in his houes in the xij dayes of Cristmasen and they to have in rewarde for that caus yerly—xxs. Ibid. p. 346.

Item, My lordes useth and accustometh to gyf every yerly to the hii Parsones that his lordship admityed as his Playes to com to his lordship yerly at Cristynnas ynde at all other such tymes as his lordship shall comande them for playing of playe and interludes about his lordship in his lordships houes for every of their fees for an hawe yere... Ibid. p. 351.

Item, to be payd... for rewards to Players for plays played at Christynnas by strangeres in my house after xxii. (g) every play, by estimacion samee—xxxiiij. liii. (h). Sect. I. p. 92.

"Item, My Lordse usith and accustometh to gyf yerely when his lordship is at home, to every erly Players that comes to his lordship before Cristynnas ande Candidamas, if he be his special lordie & fende & Kymsman—xxs." Sect. XI. III. P. 340.

"Item, My lordes usith and accustometh to gyf yerely, when his lordship is at home to every Lords Players, that comny to his lordship before Cristynmas and Candidamas—xxs." Ibid.

The reader will observe the great difference in the reward given to such Players as were retainers of noble personages, and such as are styled Strangers, or, as we may suppose, only strolers.

The profession of a common player was about this time held by some in low estimation. In an old satire, entitled "Cock Lorrelas Boto" (i) the author enumerating the most common trades or callings, as "carpenters, coopers, joyners," &c. mentions "Players, cutters, money-batterers, Golde-washers, tomblers, jogelers, Pardoners, &c." Sig. B. vj.

III. It hath been observed already, that plays of Miracles, or Mysteries, as they were called, led to the introduction of Moral Plays or Morallities, which prevailed so early, and became so common, that, towards the latter end of King Henry VIII's reign, John Rastel, brother-in-law to Sir Thomas More, conceived a design of making them the vehicle of science and natural philosophy. With this view he published "A new Interlude and a Mery of the Nature of the Four Elements: Declaring many proper points of Philosophy Naturall, and of Dyvers Strange Landys," (d) &c. It is observable that the poet speaks of the discovery of America as then recent;

"Within this xx yere Westwarde be founde new landes That we never harde tell of before this," &c.

The West Indies were discovered by Columbus in 1492, which fixes the writing of this play to about 1510 (two years before the date of the above Household Book.) The play of "Hick Scoerner" was probably somewhat more ancient, as he still more imperfectly alludes to the American discoveries, under the name of "the Newe founde Ionde." (Sign. A. vii.)

It is observable that in the olden moralities, as in that last mentioned, Every-man, &c., is printed no kind of stage direction for the exits and entrances of the personages, no division of acts and scenes. But in the moral interlude of "Lusty Juventus," (b) written under Edward VI., the exits and entrances began to be noted in the margin: (c) at length in Queen Elizabeth's reign moralities appeared formally divided into acts and scenes, with a regular prologue, &c. One of these is reprinted by Dodsley.

Before we quit this subject of the very early printed plays, it may just be observed, that, although so few are now extant, it should seem many were printed before the reign of Queen Elizabeth, as at the beginning of her reign, her Injunctions in 1559 are particularly directed to the suppressing of "many pamphlets, plays, and ballads; that no manner of person shall be allowed to print any such, &c." but under certain restrictions, &c.

In the time of Hen. VIII., one or two dramatic pieces had been published under the classical names of comedy and tragedy, (d) but they appear not to have been intended for popular use: it was not till the religious ferment had subsided that the public had leisure to attend to dramatic poetry. In the reign of Elizabeth, tragedies and comedies began to appear in form, and, could the poets have persevered, the first models would have been, "Corbode," a regular tragedy, was acted in 1561; (e) and "Gordobode," in 1566, exhibited "Jocasta," a translation from Euripides, as also "The Supposes," a regular comedy, from Ariosto: near thirty years before any of Shakespeare's were printed.

The people however still retained a relish for their certeyne points of cosmography—and of dyvers strange regions—and of the newe founde landys, and the maner of the people. This part is extremely curious, as it shows what notions were entertained of the new American discoveries by our own countrymen.

(c) Described in Sricres the Second, preface to book ii. The Dramatis Personae of this piece are: "t. Messenguer, Lusty Juventus, Good Counsail, Knowledge, Satan the devyll, Hypocrise, Fellowship, Abominable-lying an harold, God's merciful-promises." (f)

(c) I have also discovered some few Erratas and Intratas in the very old interlude of the "Four Elements."

(b) Bishop Baile had applied the name of Tragedy to his Mystery of "God's Promises," in 1538. In 1540 John Palsgrave, B.D. had republished a Latin comedy, called "Acolastos," with an English version. Holinshed tells us (Vol. iii. p. 850), that so early as 1520 the king had "a good comedie of Plautus plaide" before him at Greenwich; but this was in Latin, as Mr. Farrer informs us in his curious "Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare," 8vo, p. 31.

(e) See Ames, p. 316.—This play appears to have been first printed under the name of "Gorbode;" then under that of "Ferny Forrests," in 1592; and again under "Gorboide," 1590.—Ames calls the first edition quartio, Laugbaine, octavo, and Tanner 12mo.
old mysteries and moralities \((f)\), and the popular dramatic poems seem to have made them their models. From the graver sort of moralities our modern Tragedy appears to have derived its origin; as our Comedy evidently took its rise from the lighter interludes of that kind. And as most of these pieces contain an absurd mixture of religion and buffoonery, an eminent critic \((g)\) has well deduced from them the origins of our unnatural Tragi-comedies. Even after the people had been accustomed to tragedies and comedies, moralities still kept their ground: one of them entitled “The New Custom” \((h)\) was printed so late as 1573: at length they assumed the name of masques, \((i)\) and, with some classical improvements, became in the two following reigns the favourite entertainments of the court.

IV. The old mysteries, which ceased to be acted after the reformation, appear to have given birth to a Third Species of stage exhibition, which, though now confounded with tragedy and comedy, were by our first dramatic writers considered as quite distinct from them both: these were historical plays, or histories, a species of dynamic writing, which resembled the old moralities in representing a series of historical events simply in the order of time in which they happened, without any regard to the three greatunities. These pieces seem to differ from tragedies, just as much as historical poems do from Epic: as the Pharsalus does from the Iliad.

What might contribute to make dramatic poetry take this form was, that soon after the mysteries ceased to be exhibited, was published a large collection of poetical narratives, called “The Mirror for Magistrates, \((a)\) wherein a great number of the most eminent characters in English history are drawn relating their own misfortunes. This book was popular, and of a dramatic cast; and therefore, as an elegant writer \((b)\) has well observed, might have its influence in producing historical plays. These narratives probably furnished the subjects, and the ancient mysteries suggested the plan.

There appears indeed to have been one instance of an attempt at an Historical Play itself, which was perhaps as early as any mystery on a religious subject; for such, I think, we may pronounce the representation of a memorable event in English history, that was expressed in actions and rhimes. This was the old Coventry play of “Hock Tuesday,” \((c)\) founded on the story of the massacre of the Danes, as it happened on St. Brice’s night, November 13, 1002.\((d)\) The play in question was performed by certain men of Coventry, among the other shows and entertainments at Kenilworth Castle, in July 1575, prepared for Queen Elizabeth, and this the rather “because the matter mentioneth how valiantly our English women, for the love of their country, behaved themselves.”

The writer, whose words are here quoted, \((e)\) hath given a short description of the performance, which deserves on that occasion to have been without recitation or rhimes, and reduced to mere dumb-show; consisting of violent skirmishes and encounters, first between Danish and English “lance-knights on horse back,” armed with spear and shield; and afterwards between “hosts” of footmen: which at length ended in the Danes being “beaten down, overcome, and many led captive by our English women.” \((f)\)

This play, it seems, which was wont to be exhibited in their city yearly, and which had been of great antiquity and long continuance there, \((g)\) had of late been suppressed, at the instance of some well-meaning but precise preachers, of whose “sourness” herein the townsmen complain; urging that their play was “without example of ill manners, papistry, or any superstition; \((h)\)” which shows it to have been entirely distinct from a religious mystery. But having been despatched, and the mystery men, who in the hurry of a sudden after the sports were begun, the players apparently had not been able to recover the old rhimes, or to procure new ones, to accompany the action; which if it originally represented “the outrage and importable insolency of the Danes, the grievous complaint of Huna, king Ethelred’s chief-tain in wars; \((i)\)” his counselling and contriving the pich to dispatch them; concluding with the conflicts above mentioned, and their final suppression, “the explication in actions and rhimes after their manner,” \((i)\) one can hardly conceive a more regular model of a complete drama; and, if taken up soon after the event, it must have been the earliest of the kind in Europe.\(^{+}\)

Whatever this old play, or “storial show,” \((k)\) was at the time it was exhibited to Queen Elizabeth, it had probably our young Shakespeare for a spectator, who was then in his twelfth year, and doubtless attended with all the inhabitants of the surrounding country at these “pious pleasures;” \((l)\) and it is supposed that the Warwickshire Stratford is only a few miles distant. And as the Queen was much diverted with the Coventry play, “whereat her Majesty laughed well,” and rewarded the performers with 2

\((e)\) Re. Lancham, whose Letter, containing a full description of the Shows, &c. is reprinted at large in Nicholls’ Progresses of Q. Elizabeth, &c. vol. i. 4to. 1788. That, writer’s orthography, being peculiar and affected, is here not followed.

Lancham describes this play of Hock Tuesday, which was “presented in an historical one by certain good-hearted men of Coventry” \((p. 32)\), and which was “wont to be given in their city yearly” \((p. 33)\), as if it were peculiar to them, terming it “their old storial show” \((p. 32)\).—And so it might be as represented and expressed by them “after their manner” \((p. 30)\); although we are also told by Bevil Higgin, that St. Brice’s Eve was still celebrated by the Northern English in commemoration of this massacre of the Danes, the women bearing brass instruments, and singing old rhimes and diddled rhymes of their own invention. See his Short View of Eng. History, Svo, p. 17. \((The Preface is dated 1734).\)

\((f)\) Lancham, p. 37. \((g)\) Ibid. \((h)\) Ibid. * Ibid. p. 32. \((i)\) Ibid. p. 33. + The Rhimes. &c. prove this play to have been in English, likewise Mr. Thos. Warton thinks the Mysteries composed before 1228 were in Latin. Malone’s Shakesp. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 9. \((l)\) Lancham, p. 32. \((m)\) See Nicholls’ Progresses, vol. i. p. 57.
buck's and 5 marks in money: who, "what rejoicing upon their ample reward, and what triumphing upon the good acceptance, vaunted their play was never so dignified, nor ever any players before so beastified:" but especially if our young bard afterwards gained admittance into the castle to see a play, which the same evening, after supper, was there "present'd of a very good theme, but to set forth by the actors' well handling, that pleasure and mirth made it seem very short, though it lasted two good hours and more (m)," we may imagine what an impression was made on his infant mind. Indeed the dramatic cast of many parts of that superb entertainment, which continued nineteen days, and was the most splendid of the kind ever attempted in this kingdom; the addresses to the Queen in the personated characters of Sybille, a savage man, and Sylvanus, as she approached or departed from the castle; and, on the water, by Arion, a Triton, or the Lady of the Lake, must have had a very great effect on a young imagination, whose dramatic powers were hereafter to astonish the world.

But that the historical play was considered by our old writers, and by Shakespeare himself, as distinct from tragedy and comedy, will sufficiently appear from various passages in their works. "Of late days," says Stow, "in place of those stage plays (n) hath been used comedies, tragedies, enterludes and histories both true and fayned (o)."—Beaumont and Fletcher, in the prologue to "The Captain," say, "This is nor Comedy, nor Tragedy, Nor History."——

Polonius in "Hamlet" commends the actors, as the best in the world, "either for tragedie, comedie, historie, pastoral," &c. And Shakespeare's friends, Heminge and Condell, in the first folio edit. of his plays, in 1623 (p), have not only entitled their book "Mr. William Shakespeare's comedies, histories, and tragedies:" but in their table of contents have arranged them under those three several heads; placing in the class of histories, "K. John, Richard II, Henry IV, 2 pts. Henry V, Henry VI, 3 pts. Rich. III, and Henry VIII;" to which they might have added such of his other plays as have their subjects taken from the old Chronicles, or Plutarch's lives.

Although Shakespeare is found not to have been the first who invented this species of drama(g), yet he cultivated it with such superior success, and threw upon this simple inartificial tissue of scenes such a blaze of genius that his histories maintain their ground in defiance of Aristotle and all the critics of the classic school, and will ever continue to interest and instruct an English audience.

Before Shakespeare wrote, historical plays do not appear to have attained this distinction, being not mentioned in Q. Elizabeth's licence in 1574 (r) to James Burbage and others, who are only impoverished "to use, exercise, and occupie, the Arte and faculitie of playenge comedies, tragedies, enterludes, stage-players, and such other like."—But when Shakespeare's histories had become the ornaments of the stage, they were considered by the public, and by himself, as a formal and necessary species, and are thenceforth so distinguished in public instruments. They are particularly inserted in the licence granted by K. James I, in 1603 (s), to W. Shakespeare himself, and the players his fellows; who are authorized "to use and exercise the arte and faculty of playing comedies, tragedies, histories, enterludes, morals, pastoral, stage-plays, and such like."

The same merited distinction they continued to maintain after his death, till the theatre itself was extinguished; for they are expressly mentioned in a warrant 1642, for licensing certain "late comedians of Q. Anne deceased, to bring up children in the qualities and exercise of playing comedies, histories, enterludes, morals, pastoral, stage-plays, and such like." The same appears in an admonition issued in 1637 (t) by Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, then Lord Chamberlain, to the master and wardens of the company of printers and stationers; wherein is set forth the complaint of his Majesty's servants the players, that "diverse of their books of comedies and tragedies, chronicle-histories, and the like," had been printed and published to their prejudice, &c.

This distinction, we see, prevailed for near half a century; but after the Restoration, when the stage revived for the entertainment of a new race of auditors, many of whom had been exiled in France, and formed their taste from the French theatre, Shakespeare's histories appear to have been no longer relished; at least the distinction respecting them is dropped in the patents that were immediately granted after the king's return.

This appears not only from the allowance to Mr. William Heeston in June 1660(w), to use the house in Salisbury-court "for a play-house, wherein comedies, tragedies, tragi-comedies, pastoral, and interludes, may be acted," but also from the fuller grant (dated August 21, 1760) (v) to Thomas Killigrew, Esq. and Sir William Davenant, knt. by which they have authority to erect two companies of players, and to fit up two theatres "for the representation of tragedy, pastoral, opera, and all other entertainments of that nature."

But while Shakespeare was the favourite dramatic poet, his histories had such superior merit, that he might well claim to be the chief, if not the only historic dramatist that kept possession of the English stage; which gives a strong support to the tradition mentioned by Gildon(w), that, in a conversation with Ben Jonson, our bard vindicated his historical plays, by urging, that, as he had found "the nation in general very ignorant of history, he wrote them

(m) Laneham, p. 38, 39. This was on Sunday evening, July 9.
(n) The Creation of the World, acted at Skinner's well in 1499.
(p) The same distinction is continued in the 3d. and 3d. editions. &c.
(q) See Malone's Shakeps. vol. i. part ii. p. 31.
(r) See Malone's Shakeps. vol. i. pt. ii. p. 37.
(s) Ibid. p. 40.
(t) Ibid. p. 49. Here Histories, or Historical Plays, are found totally to have excluded the mention of Tragedies, as proof of their superior popularity. In an Order for the King's Comedians to attend K. Ch. in his summer's progress, 1656, (Ibid. p. 134.) Histories are not particularly mentioned: "be so neither are tragedies: they being briefly directed to 'act plays, comedies, and interludes, without any lett." &c.
(u) Ibid. p. 139.
(v) This appears to be the date by Mr. Malone, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 239.
(w) Ibid. p. 344.
(x) See Malone's Shakeps. vol. vi. p. 427. This ingenious writer well, with his known liberality, excuse the difference of opinion here entertained concerning the above tradition.
in order to instruct the people in this particular." This is assigning not only a good motive, but a very probable reason for his preference of this species of composition; since we cannot doubt but his illiterate countrymen would not only want such instruction when he first began to write, notwithstanding the obscure dramatic chroniclers who preceded him; but also that they would highly profit by his admirable lectures on English history so long as he continued to deliver them to his audience. And, as it implies that he was the first who introduced our chronicles on the stage, I see not why the tradition should be rejected.

Upon the whole we have had abundant proof, that both Shakespeare and his contemporaries considered his histories, or historical plays, as of a legitimate distinct species, sufficiently separate from tragedy and comedy; a distinction which deserves the particular attention of his critics and commentators; who, by upholding it, do a great deal of his proper defence and best vindication for his neglect of the Unities, and departure from the classical dramatic forms. For, if it be the first canon of sound criticism to examine any work by whatever rule the author prescribed for his own observance, then we ought not to try Shakespeare's Histories by the general laws of tragedy or comedy. Whether the rule itself be vicious or not, is another inquiry; but certainly we ought to examine a work only by those principles according to which it was composed. This would save a deal of impertinent criticism.

V. We have now brought the inquiry as low as was intended, but cannot quit it, without entering into a short description of what may be called the Economy of the ancient English stage.

Such was the fondness of our forefathers for dramatic entertainments, that not fewer than nineteen play-houses had been opened before the year 1633, when Pryme published his Histriomastix(a). From this writer it should be noticed that "tobacco, wine and beer(b), were in those days the usual accommodations in the theatre, as within our memory at Sadler's Wells.

With regard to the players themselves, the several companies were (as hath been already shown (c) retained, or menial servants to particular noblemen, (d) who protected them in the exercise of their profession; and many of them were occasionally Strollers, that travelled from one gentleman's house to another. Yet so much were they encouraged, that, notwithstanding their multitude, some of them acquired large fortunes. Edward Allen, master of the play-house called the Globe, who founded Dulwich college, is a known instance. And an old writer speaks of the very inferior actors, whom he calls the hirelings, as living in a degree of splendour, which was thought enormous in that frugal age(e).

At the same time the ancient prices of admission were often very low. Some houses had penny-benches(f). The "two-penny gallery" is mentioned in the prologue to Beaumont and Fletcher's Woman-Hater (g). And seats of three-pence and a groat seem to be included in the passage of Pryme above referred to. Yet different houses varied in their prices: that play-house called the Hope had seats of five several rates from six-pence to half-a-crown(h). But

---

(a) He speaks in p. 429, of the Playhouses in Bishopsgate-street, and on Lodgiate-hill, which are not among the seventeen enumerated in the Preface to Dodsley's Old Plays. Nay, it appears from Rymer's MSS, that twenty-three Playhouses had been at different periods open in London: and even six of them at one time. See Malone's Shakesp. vol. i. pt. ii. p. 48.
(b) So, I think, we may infer from the following passage, viz. How many are there, who, according to the several qualities, spend 2d. 3d. 4d. 6d. 12d. 18s. and sometimes 4s. or 5s. at a play-house day by day, if coach-bout, housetobacco, wine, beer, and some like vaine expenses, which playes do usually occasion, be cast into the reckoning? Pryme's Histriom. p. 322. But that tobacco was smoked in the playhouses, appears from Taylor the water-poet, in his proclamation for tobacco's propagation. "Let play-houses, drinking-schools, taverns, & be continually hanned with the noice and contagious vapours of it; nay (if it be possible) bring it into the very street, and there chok up their preachers." (Works, p. 253.) And this is really the case at Cambridge: James I. sent a letter in 1607, against "taking tobacco" in St. Mary's. So I learn from my friend Dr. Farmer.
(c) A gentleman has informed me, that once going into a chocolate-room, he saw the maker of the rooms lying in the audience sitting with their hats on, smoking tobacco, while the preacher was holding forth in his morning gown.
(d) See loco supra, p. 153 from the E. of Northumb. Household Book.

---

[Note: The text continues with a detailed analysis of the English stage, its history, and the roles of actors and spectators.]
a shilling seems to have been the usual price of what is now called the Pit, which probably had its name from one of the play-houses having been a Cock-pit. The day originally set apart for theatrical exhibition appears to have been Sunday; probably because the first dramatic pieces were of a religious cast. During a great part of Queen Elizabeth's reign, the playhouses were only licensed to be opened on that day; but before the end of her reign, or soon after, this abuse was probably removed.

The usual time of acting was early in the afternoon, plays being generally performed by daylight. All female parts were performed by men, no English actress being ever seen on the public stage, before the Civil Wars.

Lastly, with regard to the playhouse furniture and ornaments, a writer of King Charles the Second's time (p), who well remembered the preceding age, assures us, that in general "they had no other scenes nor decorations of the stage, but only old tapestry, and the stage strewn with rushes, with habits accordingly (q)."

Yet Corrye thought our theatrical exhibitions, &c. splendid when compared with what he saw abroad. Speaking of the theatre for comedies at Venice, he says, "The house is very beggarly and base, in comparison of our stately playhouses in England: neyer can their actors compare with ours for apparell, shewes, and musickes. Here I observed certaine things that I never saw before: for I saw women act, a thing that I never saw before, though I have heard that it hath beene sometimes used in London; and they performed it with as good a grace, action, gesture, and whatsoever convenient for a player, as ever I saw any masculine actor(r)."

It ought, however, to be observed, that, amid such a multitude of playhouses as subsisted in the Metropolis before the Civil Wars, there must have been a great difference between their several accommodations, ornaments, and prices; and that some would be much more showy than others, though probably all were much inferior in splendour to the two great theatres after the Restoration.

(ii) This etymology hath been objected to by a very ingenious writer (see Malone's Shakespeare, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 29), who thinks it questionable, because, in St. Mary's church at Cambridge, there is an area, that is under the pulpit, and surrounded by the galleries, is ('now') called the pit; which, he says, no one can suspect to have been a Cock-pit, or that a play-house phrase could be applied to a church. But whoever is acquainted with the licentiousness of boys, will not think it impossible that they should thus apply a name so properly expressive of the situation and use might at length prevail among the senior members of the university; especially when those young men became seniors themselves. The name of pit, so applied at Cambridge, must be deemed to have been a cant phrase, until it can be shown that the area in other churches was usually so called.

(3) So Ste. Goebee, in his Schoole of Abuse, 1579, 12mo, speaking of the players, says, "These, because they are allowed to play every Sunday, make ill or v. Sundayes at least every week, fol. 24. — So the author of a Second and Third Blast of Retract from Plaies, 1589, 12mo. "Let the magistrate but repel them from the liberty of placing on the Sabbath-day, . . . To plate on the Sabbath is but a privilege of sufnace, and might with ease be repelled, were it thoroughly followed." p. 60, 61. So again, "Is not the Sabbath of all other days the most abused? . . . Wherefore abuse not so the Sabbath-day, my brethren; leave not the temple of the Lord." "These unseveral morse of unseemly sentences passing out of the mouth of a ruffian plaier, doth more content the hangrie humors of the rude multitude, and carrie better relish in their mouths, than the bread of the worde, &c." Vid. pag. 63, 65, 60, &c. I do not recollect that explanations of this kind occur in Frynge, whence I conclude that this enormity no longer subsisted in his time.

It should also seem, from the author of the Third Blast above quoted, that the churches still continued to be used occasionally for theatres. Thus, in p. 77, he says, that the players, (who, as hath been observed, were servants of the nobility,) "under the title of their masters, or as retainers, are privileged to rowe abroad, and permitted to publish their mumetrie in everie temple of God, and that throughout England, unto the horrible contempt of prayers."

(4) "He entertaines us! (says Overbury in his character of an Actor) "in the best pleasure of our life, that is, betweene eales; the most unitt time either for study, or bodily exercise." — Even to this day, as in the reign of Cha. II, Plays generally began at 3 in the afternoon.

(m) See Biog. Brit. i. 117, n. D.

(o) I say "no English Actress—on the public stage," because Pryance speaks of it as an unusual enormity, that "they had French—women actors in a play not long since performed in Blackfriars Play-house." This was in 1629, vid. page 215. And though female parts were performed by men or boys on the public stage, yet in masques at court,
ADAM BELL, CLYM OF THE Clough, AND WILLIAM OF CLOUDESLY,

— were three noted outlaws, whose skill in archery rendered them formerly as famous in the North of England, as Robin Hood and his fellows were in the midland counties. Their place of residence was in the forest of Englewood, not far from Carlisle, (called corruptly in the ballad Englewood, whereas Engle- or Ingel-wood signifies wood for firing.) At what time they lived does not appear. The author of the common ballad on "The pedigree, education, and marriage, of Robin Hood," makes them contemporary with Robin Hood's father, in order to give him the honour of beating them: viz:

The father of Robin a forrester was,
And he shot in a lusty long-bow
Two north-country miles and an inch at a shot,
As the Pindar of Wakefield does know:

For he brought Adam Bell, and Clim of the Clough,
And William a Clowdeslee
To shoot with our Forester for forty mark;
And our Forester beat them all three.

Collect. of Old Ballads, 1727, 1 vol. p. 67.

This seems to prove that they were commonly thought to have lived before the popular hero of Sherwood.

Our northern archers were not unknown to their southern countrymen: their excellence at the long-bow is often alluded to by our ancient poets. Shakspere, in his comedy of "Much ado about nothing," act i, makes Benedicke confirm his resolves of not yielding to love, by this protestation, "If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat," and shoot at me, and he that hits me, let him be clapt on the shoulder, and called Adam:" meaning Adam Bell, as Theobald rightly observes, who refers to one or two other passages in our old poets wherein he is mentioned. The Oxford editor has also well conjectured, that "Abraham Cupid," in Romeo and Juliet, act ii. sc. 1, should be "Adam Cupid," in allusion to our archer. Ben Jonson has mentioned Clym o' the Clough in his Alchemist, act i, sc. 2. And Sir William Davenant, in a mock poem of his, called "The Long Vacation in London," describes the attorneys and proctors, as making matches to meet, in Finsbury fields.

"With loynes in canvass bow-case tyde:
Where arrows stick with mickle pride;"

Like ghosts of Adam Bell and Clymne.
Sol sets for fear they'll shoot at him.

Works, 1673, fol. p. 291.

I have only to add further concerning the principal hero of this ballad, that the Bells were noted rogues in the north so late as the time of Queen Elizabeth. See in Rymer's Fudera, a letter from Lord William Howard to some of the officers of state, wherein he mentions them.

As for the following stanzas, which will be judged from the style, orthography, and numbers, to be of considerable antiquity, they were here given (corrected in some places by a MS. copy in the Editor's old folio) from a black-letter 4to. Imprinted at London in 1679. But by the usual inverted 'comma' have been assisted by conjecture.

In the same MS., this ballad is followed by another, entitled Younge Cloudeslee, being a continuation of the present story, and reciting the adventures of William of Cloudesley's son: but greatly inferior to this both in merit and antiquity.

PART THE FIRST.

Mery it was in the grene forest
Amonge the leve's grene,
Whereas men hunt east and west
Wyrth bowes and arrows kene;
To raise the dere out of theyr denne;
Suche sightes hath ofte bene sene;
As by thre yemen of the north crountry,
By them it is I meanes.

The one of them hight Adam Bel,
The other Clym of the Clough,
The thyrd was William of Cloudesly,
An archer good ynoogh,
They were outlawed for venyson,
These yemen everychone;
They swore them brethren upon a day
To Englyshe wood for to gone.

Now lith and lysten, gentylmen,
That of myrthes lovethe to here:
Two of them were single men,
The third had a wedded fere.

Wyllym was the wedded man,
Muche more than was hys care:
He sayde to hys brethren upon a day,
To Carilie he would fare,
For to speke with sayde Alyce his wife,
And with his chylde ren thre.
By my truth, sayde Adam Bel,
Not by the consell of me:
For if ye go to Carilie, brother,
And from thy wyde, wode wende,
If that the justice may you take,
Your lyfe were at an ende.

V. 24, Carilie, in P. C. Pussin.

* Clym of the Clough means Clem, [Clement] of the Cliff: for so Clough signifies in the North.
If that I come not to-mrowe, brother,
By pryme to you a-gaune,
Truste you then that I am 'taken,'
Or else that I am slayne.

He toke his leave of his brethren two,
And to Carlile he is gon:
There he knocked at his owne window
Shortelye and anone.

Wher be you, sayre Alyce, he sayd,
My wife and chyldren three!
Lyghtly let in thyn ey owne husbande,
Wylliam of Cloudeslee.

Alyce opened a backe wyndow,
And loked all aboute,
She was ware of the justice and shirife bothe,
Wyth a full great route.

Alas! treason, cryed Alyce,
Ever wo may thou be!
Goe into my chamber, my husband, she sayd,
Swete Wylyum of Cloudeslee.

He toke his sword and his buckler,
Hys bow and hys chyldren thre,
And wente into hys strongest chamber,
Where he thought surest to be.

Fayre Alyce, like a lover true,
Took a polaix in her hande:
Said, He shall dye that cometh in Thys dore, whyle I may stand.

Cloudeslee bente a right good bowe.
That was of a trusty tre,
He smot the justice on the brest,
That hys arowe burst in three.

'A' curse on his harte, saide William,
Thys day thye cote dyd on!
If it had ben no better then myne,
It had gone nere thy bone.

Yelde the Cloudesle, sayd the justise,
And thy bowe and thy arrowes the fro.
'A' curse on hys hart, sayd fair Alyce,
That my husband counselleth so.

Set fyre on the house, saide the sheriff,
Syn thy wylly no better be,
And brenne we therin William, he saide,
Hys wyfe and chyldren thre.

They fyred the house in many a place,
The fyre flew up on hye;
Alas! then cryed sayre Alise,
I se we here shall dye.

William openyd a backe wyndow,
That was in hys chamber hie,
And there with sheetes he did let downe
His wyfe and children thre.

Have you here my treasure, sayde William,
My wyfe and my chyldren thre:
For Christes love do them no harme,
But wroke you all on me.

Wylliam shot so wonderous well,
Tyll hys arrowes were all age,
And the fyre so fast upon hym fell,
That hys bowstraying brent in two.

The sparkles brent and fell upon
Good Wylyum of Cloudesle:
Than was he a wofull man, and sayde,
Thys is a cowardes death to me.

V. 55. take, PC. tame. MS.
V. 85, sic. MS. shop window, PC.
Leever had I, said Wylyam,
With my swords in the route to renne,
Then here among myne enemies wode
Thus cruelly to brene.

He toke hys sward and hys buckler,
And among them all he ran,
Where the people were most in prece,
He smote downe many a man.

There myght no man abyde hys stroakes,
So seryly on them he ran:
Then they threw wyndowes and dores on him,
And so toke that good yeman.

There they hym bounde both hand and fote,
And in a deep dungeon him cast:
Now, Cloudesle, sayd the justice,
Thou shalt be hanged in haste.

'A payre of new gallowes, sayd the sherife,
Now shal l for thee make;'
And the gates of Carleil shal be shutte:
No man shal come in therat.

Then shall not helpe Clym of the Clough,
Nor yet shall Adam Bell,
Though they came with a thousand mo,
Nor all the devels in hell.

Early in the monnyng the justice uprose,
To the gates first can he gone,
And commandeed to be shut full close
Lightlye everychone.

Then went he to the markett place,
As fast as he coulde hye;
There a payre of new gallowes he set up
Beside the pyllorye.

A llyte boy ' among them asked,'
What meane that gallow-tre?
They sayde to hange a good yeman,
Called Wylyam of Cloudesle.

That llyte boye was the townes swynen-heard,
And kypt hye Alyces swynye;
Oft he had seene William in the woodde,
And geun hym there to dyne.

He went out att a crevis of the wall,
And lightly to the woode dyd gone;
There met he with these wightye yemen
Shortly and anon.

Alas! then sayd the llyte boye,
Ye tary here all too longe;
Cloudeslee is taken, and dampeped to death,
And readye for to honge.

Alas! then sayd good Adam Bell,
That ever we saw thy daye!
He had better have tarried with us,
So ofte as we dyd him praye.

He myght have dwelt in greene forste,
Under the shadowes greene,
And have keppe both hym and us att reste,
Out of all trouble and teene.

Adam bent a ryght good bow,
A great hart sone hee had slayne;
Take that, chylde, he sayde, to thy dyner,
And bring me myne arrowe aggaine.

Now go we hence, sayed these wightye yeomen,
Tarrye we no longer here;
We shall hym borowe by God his grace,
Though we buy itt full dere.

To Caerleil wente these bold yemen,
All in a monnyng of maye.
Here is a fyte* of Cloudesle,
And another is for to saye.

PART THE SECOND.

And when they came to mery Caerleile,
All in 'the' monnyng tyde,
They founde the gates shut them untill
About on every syde.

Alas! then sayd good Adam Bell,
That ever we were made men!
These gates be shut so wonderous fast,
We may not come therein.

Then bespake him Clym of the Clough,
Wyth a wylle we wyl us in bryng;
Let us saye we be messengers,
Stryght come nowe from our king.

Adam said, I have a letter written,
Now let us wysely werke,
We wyl saye we have the kynges seale;
I holde the porter no clerke.

Then Adam Bell bete on the gutes
With strokes great and stronge:
The porter marveille, who was therat,
And to the gates he thronge.

Who is there now, sayde the porter,
That maketh all thyss knockinge?
We betw messengers, quoth Clym of the Clough,
Be come ryghte from our kyng.

We have a letter, sayd Adam Bel,
To the justice we must itt bryng;
Let us in our messagge to do,
That we were agayne to the kyng.

Here commeth none in, sayd the porter,
By hym that dyed on a tre,
Tylf a false thefe be hanged,
Called Wylyam of Cloudesle.

Then spake the good yeman Clym of the Clough,
And swore by Mary fre,
And if that we stande long wythout,
Lyke a thefe hanged shalt thou be.

---

V. 151, sic. MS. lyke Justice, PC.—V. 153, 4, are contracted from the fol. MS. and PC.—V. 179, yonge men, PC.
Lo! here we have the kynges seale:
What, Lurden, art thou wode?
The porter went* it had been so,
And lightely dyd off his hode.

Welcome is my lorde seale, he saide;
For that ye shall come in.
He opened the gate full shortlye:
An eyul openynge for hym.

Now are we in, sayde Adam Bell,
* Wherof we are full faine;
But Christ he knowes, that harowed hell,
How we shall com out agayyne.

Had we the keys, said Clim of the Clough,
Ryght wel then shoulde we spede,
Then might we come out wel ynough
When we se tyme and nede.

They called the porter to counsell,
And wrang his necke in two,
And caste hym in a depe dungeon,
And toke his keys hym fro.

Now am I porter, sayd Adam Bel,
Se brother the keys are here,
The worst porter to merry Carleile
That 'tho' had thyis hundred yere.

And now wyll we our bowes bend,
Into the towne wyll we go,
For to delyuer our dere brother,
That lyeth in care and wo.

Then bythen theyr good ewe bowes,
And loyked theyr stringes were round,
The market place in mery Carleile
They beset that stound.

And, as they loked them besyde,
A paire of new galowes 'theye' see,
And the justice with a quest of squyers,
That judged William hanged to be.

And Cloundesle lay ready there in a cart,
Fast bound both fote and hand;
And a stronge rop about hys necke,
All readey for to hange.

The justice called to hym a ladde,
Cloundesless clothes bee shold have,
To take the measure of that yemâ­n,
Therafter to make hys grave.

I have sene as great mervaile, said Cloundesle,
As betweyne thyss and pryme,
He that maketh a grave for mee,
Hymselfe may lye therin.

Thou speakest proudeyse, said the justice,
I will thee hange with my bande.
Full weel here I his brethen two,
There styll as they dyd stande.

Then Cloundesle cast his eyen asyde,
And saw hys 'brethren twaine'
At a corner of the market place,
Redy the justice for to slaine.

I se comfort, sayd Cloundesle,
Yet hope I well to fare,
If I might have my handes at wyll
Ryghtlyt wolde I care,

Then spake good Adam Bell
To Clym of the Clough so free,
Brother, se you marke the justyce wel,
Lo! yonder you may him se:

And at the shyrifes shote I wyll
Strongly wyth an arrowe ke
A better shote in mery Carleile
Thys seven yere was not sene.

They loosed their arrowes both at once,
Of no man had they dreed;
The one hyt the justice, the other the sheryfe,
That both theys sides gan blede.

All men voyded; that them stode nye,
When the justice fell to the gronde,
And the sheryfe nye him by;
Eyther had his deathes wonde.

All the cizentys fast gan flye,
They durst no longer abyde:
There lyghtly they losed Cloundeslee,
Where he with ropes lay tyde.

Wyllyam start to an officer of the towne,
Hys axe ' from' hys hand he woringe,
On echc syde he smote them downe,
Hee thought he taryed to long.

Wyllyam sayde to his brethren two,
Thys daye let us lyve and die,
If ever you have nede, as I have now,
The same shall you finde by me.

They shot so well in that tyde,
Theyr stringes were of silke ful sure,
That they kept the stretes on every side;
That batayle did long endure.

They fought together as brethren true,
Lyke hardy men and bolde,
Many a man to the ground they threw
And many a herte made cold.

But when their arrowes were all gon,
Men preced to them full fast,
They drew theyr swordes then alone
And theyr bowes from them cast.

They went lyghtlyse on theyr way,
Wyth swordes and buclers round;
By that it was mydd of the day,
They made many a wound.

V. 105, lowsed thre, PC.—Ver 106, can bled. MS.

---

V. Lordene, PC.

* i. e. weened, thought, (which last is the reading of the folio M.S.)—Calais, or Rouen, was taken from the English by showing the governor, who could not read, a letter with the king's seal, which was all he looked at.
† So Ascham in his Toxophilus gives a precept: "The stringes must be rounde." (p. 148, ed. 1761.) otherwise, we may conclude from mechanical principles, the arrow will not fly true.

V. 105, lowsed thre, PC.—Ver 106, can bled. MS.
There was an out-horne* in Carleie blowan,
And the belles backward dyd ryng.
Many a woman sayde, Alas!
And many their handes dyd wyng.

The mayre of Carleie forth com was, 145
Wyth hym a ful great route:
These yemen dred hym full sore,
Of theyr lyves they stode in great doute.

The mayre came armed a full great pace,
With a pollaxe in hys hande.
Many a strong man wyth him was,
There in that stowre to stande.

The mayre smot at Cloudeslee with his bil,
Hys bucel he brast in two,
Full many a yeman with great eyll,
Alas! Treason they cryed for wo.
Kepe well the gates fast, they bad,
That these traytours therout not go.

But al for nought was that they wrought,
For so fast they downe were layde.
Tyll they all thre, that so manfulli fought,
Were gotten without, aibreade.

Hare here your keys, sayd Adam Bel,
Myne office I here forsale,
And yt you do by my counsell
A new porter do ye make.

He threw theyr keys at theyr heads,
And bad them well to thryvet,
And all that letteth any good yeman
To come and comfort his wyfe.

Thus be these good yeman gon to the wod,
As lightly as lefe on lynde;
The loughe and be mery in theyr mode,
Theyr enemies were fare behynd.

When they came to Englyshe wode,
Under the trusty tre,
There they found bowes full good,
And arrows full great plente.

So God me help, sayd Adam Bell,
And Clym of the Clough so fre,
I would we were in mery Carleie,
Before that fayre meyiye.

They set them downe, and made good chere,
And eate and dranke full well,
A second fyte of the wightye yeomen: 185
Another I wyll you tell.

PART THE THIRD.

As they sat in Englyshe wood,
Under the green-wode tre,
They thought they herd a woman wepe,
But her they mought not se.

V. 148, For of, MS.—V. 175, merry green wood, MS.—
V. 183, see part i. v. 197.
* Outborne is an old term signifying the calling forth of subjects to arms by the sound of a horn. See Cole’s Lat.
Dict. Balsley, &c.
† This is spoken ironically.

Sore then syghed the fayre Alyce.
That ever I sawe this day!
For nove is my dere husband slayne.
Alas! and wel-a-way!

Myght I have spoken wyth hys dere brethren,
Or with eyther of them twayne,
To showe them what him beffell,
My hart were out of payne.

Cloudeslè walked a lytle beside,
He looked under the grene wood lynde,
He was ware of his wife, and chylde three,
Full wo in harte and mynde.

Welcome, wyfe, then sayde Wyllyam,
Under ‘this’ trusti tre:
I had wende yesterday, by swete saynt John,
Thou sholdest me never ‘have’ se.

“Now well is me that ye be here,
My harte is out of wo.”
Dame, he sayde, be mery and glad,
And thanke my brethren two.

Herof to speake, said Adam Bell,
Wys it is no boite:
The meute, that we must supp withall,
It runneth yet fast on fote.

Then went they downe into a launde,
These noble archares all thre;
Eche of them slew a hart of greece,
The best that they coldse.

Have here the best, Alyce, my wyfe,
Sayde Wyllyam of Cloudeslè;
By cause ye so bouldely stode by me
When I was slayne full nye.

Then went they to suppere
Wyth suche meute as they had;
And thanked God of ther fortune:
They were both mery and glad.
And when they had supped well,
Certayne withouten lease,
Cloudeslè sayd, We wyll to our kyng,
To get us a charter of peace.

Alyce shal be at our sojournyng
In a nunnery here besyde;
My tow sonnes shall wyth her go,
And there they shal abyde.

Myne eldest son shall go wyth me;
For hym have ‘you’ no care:
And he shall bring you wordes again,
How that we do fare.

Thus be these yemen to London gone,
As fast as they myght ‘be’
Tyll they came to the kynges pallace,
Where they wold esed be.

And when they came to the kynges courte,
Unto the pallace gate,
Of no man wold they aske no leave,
But boldly went in therat.
They preced prestly into the hall,
Of no man had they dreađe:
The porter came after, and dyd them call,
And with them began to chyde.

The usher sayde, Yemen, what wold ye haue? 65
I pray you tell to me:
You myght thus make officers shent:
Good syrs, of whence be ye?

Syr, we be out-lawes of the forest
Certayne withouten lease;
And hether we be come to the kyng,
To get us a charter of peace.

And when they came before the kyng,
As it was the lawe of the lande,
The kneeled downe without lettyng,
And echel held up his hand.

The sayed, Lord, we beseeche the here,
That ye wyll graunte us grace;
For we have slayne your fat falow dere
In many a sondry place.

What be your nams, then saied our king,
Anone that you tell me?
They sayd, Adam Bell, Clime of the Clough,
And Wylyamm of Cloudesle.

Be ye those theves, then sayd our kyng,
That men have tolde to me?
Here to God I make an avowe,
Ye shal be hanged al thre.

Ye shal be dead without mercy,
As I am kyngge of this lande.
He commanded his officers everichone,
Fast on them to lay bande.

There they take these good yemen,
And arestede them al thre:
So may I thryre, sayd Adam Bell,
Thys game lyketh not me.

But, good lorde, we beseeke you now,
That yee graunte us grace,
Insomuch as frely we be to you come,
As frely we may fro you passe,

With such weapons, as we have here,
Tyll we be out of your place;
And yf we lyve this hundreth yere,
We wyll askye you no grace.

Ye speake proudely, sayd the kyngge;
Ye shal be hanged all thre.
That were great pitye, then sayd the quene,
If any grace myght be.

My lorde, when I came fyrrst into this lande
To be your wedded wyfe,
The fyrrst boone that I wold aske,
Ye would graunte it me belyfe:

And I asked you never none tyll now;
Therefore, good lorde, graunte it me.
Now aske it, madam, sayd the kyngge,
And graunte it shal be.

Then, good my lord, I you beseeche,
These yemen graunte ye me.
Madame, ye myght have asked a boone,
That shal have been worth them all thre. 120
Ye myght have askede towres, and townes,
Parkes and forestes plente.
None sce pleasanct to my pay, shee sayd;
Nor none so lefe to me,

Madame, sith it is your desyre,
Your askyng graunte shal be;
But I had lever have you given
Good market townes thre.

The quene was a glad woman,
And sayde, Lord, granercy;
I dare undertake for them,
That true men shal they be.

But, good my lord, speke som mery word,
That comfort they may se.
I graunte you grace, then sayd our king;
Washe, felos, and to meate go ye.

They had not setten but a whylle
Certayne withoute leasynge,
There came messengers out of the north
With letters to our kyng.

And when the came before the kyngge,
They kneel downe on their kne;
And sayd, Lord, your officers grete you well,
Of Carleile in the north cuntre.

How fareth my justice, sayd the kyngge,
And my sherife also!
Syr, they be slayne without leasynge,
And many an officer mo.

Who hath them slayne? sayd the kyngge;
Anone titt ton tell me.
"Adam Bell, and Clime of the Clough, And Wylyamm of Cloudesle."

Abas, for rewh! then sayd our kyngge:
My hart is wondorous sore;
I had lever than a thousande pounde,
I had knowne of thys before;

For I have graunte them grace,
And that forthynketh me:
But had I knowne all thys before,
They had been hanged al thre.

The kyngge hee opened the letter anone,
Himselfe he read it thro,
And founde how these outlawes had slaine
Thre hundred men and mo:

Fyrst the justice, and the sheryffe,
And the mayre of Carlele town;
Of all the constables and catchipollis
Alyve were 'scant' left one:

The baylyes, and the bedleys both,
And the seregentes of the law,
And forty fosters of the fe,
These outlawes had yslaw:

V. 130, God a mercy, MS — V. 168, left but one, MS. not one. FC.
And broke his parks, and slayne his dere;
Of all they chose he best;
So perelous out-lawes, as they were,
Walked not by easte nor west.

When the kyng this letter had red,
In hys harte he syghed sore:
Take up the tables alone he bad,
For I may eat no more.

The kyng called hys best archars
To the buttes wyth hym to go:
I wyll se these felowe shote, he sayd,
In the north have wrought this wo.

The kynges bowmen buske them blyve,
And the queues archers also;
So dyd these three wyghte yemen;
With them they thought to go.

There twyse, or thrus they shote about
For to assay their hande;
There was no shote these yemen shot,
That any prycke* myght stand.

Then spake Wyllyam of Cloudeles;
By hym that for me dyed,
I hold hym never no good archar,
That shoteth at buttes so wyde.

'At what a butte now wold ye shote?'
I pray thee tell to me.
At suche a but, syr, he sayd,
As men use in my countree.

Wyllyam wente into a fyeld,
And 'with hym' his two brethren:
There th-y set up two hasell roddes
'Twenty' score paces betwene.

I hold him an archar, said Cloudeles,
That yonder wande electh in two.
Here is none suche, sayd the kyng,
Nor no man can so do.

I shall assaye, syr, sayd Cloudeles,
Or that I further go.
Cloudeles with a bearyng arowe
Clave the wand in two.

Thou art the best archer, then said the king,
Forsotiche that ever I se.
And yet for your love, sayd Wyllyum,
I wyll do myr maystere.

I have a sonne is seven yere olde,
He is to me full deare;
I wyll hym tye to a stake;
All shall se, that be here;

And lay an apple upon lys head,
And go syxe score paces hym fro,
And I myselfe with a brode arow
Shall cleve the apple in two.

Now haste the, then sayd the kyng,
By hym that dyd on a tre,
But if thou do not, as thou best sayde,
Hanged shalt thou be.

And thou touche his head or gowne,
In syght that men may se,
By all the sayntes that be in heaven,
I shall hange youall thre.

That I have promised, said William,
That I wyll never forsake.
And there even before the kyng:
In the earth he drove a stake:

And bound thereto his eldest sonne,
And bad hym stand styll therent;
And turned the childes face him fro,
Because he should not start.

An apple upon his head he set,
And then his bowe he bent:
Syxe score paces they were meaten,
And thether Cloudeles went.

There he drew out a fayr brode arrowe,
Hys bowe was great and longe,
He set that arrow in his bowe,
That was both styffe and stronge.

He prayed the people, that wer there,
That they 'all still wold' stand,
For he that shoteth for such a wager
Beloveth a stedfast hand.

Muche people prayed for Cloudeles,
That his lyfe saved myght be,
And when he made hym redy to shote,
There was many weeping ee.

'But' Cloudeles clefe the apple in two,
'His sonne he did not nowe.'
Over Gods forbode, sayde the kynge,
That thou shold shote at me.

I gave thee eightene pence a day,
And my bowe shall thou bere,
And over all the north countre
I make the chyfe rydere.

And I thryente pence a day, said the quene,
By God, and by my fay;
Come feche thy payment when thou wylt,
No man shall say the may.

Wyllyam, I make the a gentleman
Of clothlyng, and of fe:
And thy two brethren, yemen of my chambre,
For they are so semely to se.

Your sonne, for he is tendre of age,
Of my wyne-seller he shall be;
And when he commeth to mans estate,
Better avnounced shall he be.

Ver. 183, by the, MS.—Ver. 282, 283, 212, to PC.—Ver. 204, i. e. 400 yards.—Ver. 288, sic MS. none that can, PC. Ver. 222, i. e. 120 yards.
* i. e. mark.

Ver. 243, sic, MS. ont met. PC.—Ver. 232, steedye, MS. Ver. 235, And I gave the xvij pence, PC.
THE AGED LOVER RENOUNCETH LOVE.

And, Wylyam, bring me your wife, said the quene,
Me longeth her sore to se: 260
She shall be my chefe gentlewoman,
To governe my nurserye.

The yemen thanked them all curteously.
To some byasoph wyuld we, wound,
Of all the synnes, that we have done,
To be assayled at his hand.

The grave-digger's song in Hamlet, act v. is taken from three stanzas of the following poem, though greatly altered and disguised, as the same were corrupted by the bellad-singers of Shakespeare's time: or perhaps so designed by the poet himself, the better to suit the character of an illiterate clown. The original is preserved among Surrey's Poems, and is attributed to Lord Vaux, by George Gascoigne, who tells us, it "was thought by some to be made upon his death-bed," a popular error which he laughs at. (See his Epist, to Yong Gent, prefixed to his Posies, 1575, 4to.) It is also ascribed to Lord Vaux in a manuscript copy preserved in the British Museum*. This lord was remarkable for his skill in drawing feigned manners, &c. for so I understand an ancient writer. "The Lord Vaux his commendation lyth chiefly in the facilitie of his metre, and the aptnesse of his descriptions such as he taketh upon him to make; namely in sundry of his songs, wherein he showeth the counterfeit action very lively and pleasantly." Arte de Eng. Poesie, 1590, p. 51. See another song by this poet in Series the Second, No. VIII.

II.

THE AGED LOVER RENOUNCETH LOVE.

The wrinkles in my brow,
The furrowes in my face
Say, Limping age will 't lodge' him now,
Where youth must give him place.

The barbenger of death,
To me I se him ride,
The cough, the cold, the gasping breath,
Doth bid me to provide

A pikeax and a spade,
And eke a shrowding shete,
A house of clay for to be made
For such a guest most mete.

Me thinkes I hear the clarke,
That knoales the carefull knell;
And bids me leave my ' weary' warke,
Ere nature me compell.

My keperst knite the knot,
That youth doth laugh to scorne,
Of me that ' shall bee cleanse' forgot,
As I had ' ne'er' bene borne.

Thus must I youth gave up,
Whose badge I long did ware:
To them I yeld the wanton cup,
That better may it beare.

Lo, here the bared skull;
By whose balde signe I know,
That stouping age away shall pull
'What' youthful yeres did sow.

For Beatitie with her band,
These croked cares had wrought,
And shippd me into the land,
From whence I first was brought.

And ye that bide behinde,
Have ye none other trust:
As ye of claye were cast by kinde,
So shall ye 'turne' to dust.

* he i. e. hie, hasten. See the Glossary
† Alluding perhaps to Eccles. xii. 3.
III.

JEPTHAH JUDGE OF ISRAEL.

In Shakespeare's Hamlet, act ii, the hero of the play takes occasion to bantir Polonius with some scraps of an old ballad, which has never appeared yet in any collection: for which reason, as it is but short, it will not perhaps be unacceptable to the reader; who will also be diverted with the pleasant absurdities of the composition. It was retrieved from utter oblivion by a lady, who wrote it down from memory, as she had formerly heard it sung by her father. I am indebted for it to the friendship of Mr. Stevens.

It has been said, that the original ballad, in black-letter, is among Anthony à Wood's Collections in the Ashmolean Museum. But, upon application lately made, the volume which contained this song was missing, so that it can only now be given as in the former edition.

The bantie of Hamlet is as follows:

"Hamlet. 'O Jeptha, Judge of Israel,' what a treasure hastad thou!
"Polonius. What a treasure had he, my lord?
"Ham. Why, 'One faire daughter, and no more, The which he loved passing well.'
"Polon. Still on my daughter.
"Ham. Am not I 'th right, old Jeptha?
"Polon. If you call me Jeptha, my lord, I have a daughter, that I love passing well.
"Ham. Nay, that follows not.
"Polon. What follows then, my lord?
"Ham. Why, 'As by lot, God wot:' and then you know, 'It came to passe, As most like it was.' The first row of the pious chanson will shew you more."

Have you not heard these many years ago, Jeptha was judge of Israel?
He had one only daughter and no mo, The which he loved passing well:
And, as by lot,
God wot,
It so came to pass,
As Gods will was,
That great wars there should be,
And none should be chosen chief but he.

And when he was appointed judge,
And chiefain of the company;
A solemn vow to God he made;
If he returned with victory,

At his return
To burn
The first live thing,
That should meet with him then,
Off his house, when he should return aget.

It came to pass, the wars was oer,
And he returned with victory;
His dear and only daughter first of all
Came to meet her father foremosdy:
And all the way,
She did play
On tabret and pipe,
Full many a stripe,
With note so high,
For joy that her father is come so nigh.

But when he saw his daughter dear
Coming on most foremosdy,
He wrung his hands, and tore his hair,
And cryed out most piteously;
'Oh! it's thou, said he,
That have brought me Low,
And troubled me so,
That I know not what to do.

For I have made a vow, he sed,
'I he which must be replenished:
" What thou hast spoke
Do not revoke:
What thou last said,
Be not affraid;
Altho' it be I;
Keep promises to God on high.

But, dear father, grant me one request,
That I may go to the wilderness,
Three months there with my friends to stay;
There to bewail my virginity;
And let there be,
Said she,
Some two or three Young maids with me."
So he sent her away,
For to mourn, for to mourn, till her dying day.

IV.

A ROBYN JOLLY ROBYN.

In his "Twelfth Night," Shakespeare introduces the clown singing part of the two first stanzas of the following song; which has been recovered from an ancient MS. of Dr. Harrington's at Bath, preserved among the many literary treasures transmitted to the ingenious and worthy possessor by a long line of most respectable ancestors. Of these only a small part hath been printed in the "Nugae Antiquae," 3 vols, 12mo; a work which the public impatiently wishes to see continued.
A SONG TO THE LUTE IN MUSICKE.

This sonnet (which is ascribed to Richard Edwards, in the "Paradise of Dainty Devises," fo. 31, b.) is by Shakespeare made the subject of some pleasant ridicule in his "Romeo and Juliet," act iv. sc. 5, where he introduces Peter putting this question to the musicians.

"Peter....why 'Silver Sound'? why 'Musicke with her silver sound'? what say you, Simon Cauting?"

"1. Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound."
"Pet. Pretty! what say you, Hugh Rebecke?"

"2. Mus. I say, silver sound, because musicians sound for silver."
"Pet. Pretty too! what say you, James Sound-post?"

"3. Mus. Faith, I know not what to say,
"Pet....I will say it for you: It is 'musicke with her silver sound,' because musicians have no gold for sounding."

This ridicule is not so much levelled at the song itself (which for the time it was written is not inelegant) as at those forced and unnatural explanations often given by us painful editors and expositors of ancient authors.

This copy is printed from an old quarto MS. in the Cotton Library (Vesp. A. 25), entitled, "Divers things of Hen. viij's time;" with some corrections from The Paradise of Dainty Devises, 1596.

Where gripsinge grefes the hart would wounde,
And doefulfe dumps the mynde oppresse,
There musicke with her silver sound
With spede is wont to send redresse:
Of trobled mynde, in every sore,
Swete musicke hath a salve in store.

In joye yt makts our mirthe abounde,
In wo yt chere us hevy sprites;
Be strawghted heads reluyf hath founde,
By musickes pleasuante sweyte delightes:
Our senses all, what shal I say more?
Are subiecte unto musicks lore.

V.

A SONG TO THE LUTE IN MUSICKE.

The song is thus given by Shakespeare, act iv. sc. 2. (Malone's edit. iv. 93.)

"Tell me how thy lady doth."
Malvolio. Fool.
"My lady is unkind, perdy."
Malvolio. Fool.
Clown. "Alas, why is she so?"

Clown. "She loves another."—Who calls, ha?

Dr. Farmer has conjectured that the song should begin thus:

"Hey, jolly Robin, tell to me
How does thy lady do?
My lady is unkind perdy—
Alas, why is she so?"

But this ingenious emendation is now superseded by the proper readings of the old song itself, which is here printed from what appears the most ancient of Dr. Harrington's poetical MSS, and which has, therefore, been marked No. I. (scil. p. 63.) That volume seems to have been written in the reign of King Henry VIII, and as it contains many of the poems of Sir Thomas Wyatt, hath had almost all the contents attributed to him by marginal directions written with an old but later hand, and not always rightly, as, I think, might be made appear by other good authorities. Among the rest, this song is there attributed to Sir Thomas Wyatt also; but the discerning reader will probably judge it to belong to a more obsolete writer.

In the old MS. to the 3d and 5th stanzas is prefixed this title, Responce, and to the 4th and 6th, Le Plaintif; but in the last instance so evidently wrong, that it was thought better to omit these titles, and to mark the changes of the dialogue by inverted commas. In other respects the MS. is strictly followed, except where noted in the margin.—Yet the first stanza appears to be defective, and it should seem that a line is wanting, unless the four first words were lengthened in the tune.

A Robyn,
Jolly Robyn,
Tell me how thy leman doeth,
And thou shalt knowe of myn.

"My lady is unkynde perde."
Alack! why is she so?

"She loveth an other better than me:
And yet she will say no."

I fynde no such doublenes:
I fynde women true.

My lady loveth me downtles,
And will change for no newe.

"Thou art happy while that doeth last;
But I say, as I fynde,
That women's love is but a blast,
And torneth with the wynde,"

Suche folkes can take no harme by love,
That can abide their torn.

"But I alas can no way prove
In love but lake and morn."

But if thou wilt avoyde thy harme
Lerne this lessen of me,
At others fieres thy selfe to warme,
And let them warme with the .
VI.

KING COPHE'TU'A AND THE BEGGAR-MAID,

— is a story often alluded to by our old dramatic writers. Shakespeare, in his Romeo and Juliet, act ii, sc. 1, makes Mercutio say,

"—Her (Venus's) purpling son and heir,
Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so true,
When King Cophe'tua loved the beggar-maid."

As the 13th line of the following ballad seems here particularly alluded to, it is not improbable that Shakespeare wrote it "shot so trim," which the players or printers, not perceiving the allusion, might alter to "true." The former, as being the more humorous expression, seems most likely to have come from the mouth of Mercutio.

In the 2d part of Hen. IV. act v, sc. 3, Falstaff is introduced eftsoons saying to Pistol,

"O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news?
Let King Cophe'tua know the truth thereof."

These lines, Dr. Warburton thinks, were taken from an old ballast play of "King Cophe'tua. No such play is, I believe, now to be found; but it does not therefore follow that it never existed. Many dramatic pieces are referred to by old writers; which are not now extant, or even mentioned in any list. In the infancy of the stage, plays were often exhibited that were never printed.

It is probably in allusion to the same play that Ben Jonson says, in his Comedy of "Every Man in his Humour," act iii. sc. 4,

"I have not the heart to devour thee, an' I might be made as rich as King Cophe'tua."

At least there is no mention of King Cophe'tua's riches in the present ballad, which is the oldest I have met with on the subject.

It is printed from Rich. Johnson's "Crown Garland of Goulden Roses," 1612, 12mo. (where it is entitled simply "A Song of a Beggar and a King;) corrected by another copy.

I READ that once in Affrica
A princely wight did raine,
Who had to name Cophe'tua,
As poets they did faine:

From natures lawes he did decline,
For sure he was not of my mind,
He cared not for women-kinde,
But did them all disdain.

*See above, Preface to Song i. Book ii. of this vol. p. 158.
†Since this conjecture first occurred, it has been discovered that "shot so trim" was the genuine reading. See Shakespeare ed. 1793, xiv. 393.

O heavenly gyft, that rules the mynd,
Even as the sterno dothe rule the shippe! 20
O musicke, whom the Gods assinde
To comforte manne, whom cares would nippe!
Since thou both man and beste doest move,
What beste ys he, wyll the disprove?

But, marke, what happned on a day,
As he out of his window lay,
He saw a beggar all in gray,
The which did cause his paine.

The blinded boy, that shottes so trim,
From heaven downe did he;
He drew a dart and shot at him,
In place where he did ly:
Which soone did pierse him to the quicke,
And when he felt the arrow pricke,
Which in his tender heart did sticke
He looketh as he would dye.

What sudden chance is this, quoth he,
That I to love must subject be,
Which never thereto would agree,
But stil did it defie?

Then from the window he did come,
And laid him on his bed,
A thousand heapes of care did runne
Within his troubled head:
For now he meanes to crave her love,
And now he seekes which way to proove
How he his fancie might remove,
And not this beggar wed.
But Cupid had him so in snare,
That this poor beggar must prepare
A salve to cure him of his care,
Or els he would be dead.

And, as he musing thus did ly,
He thought for to devise
How he might have her companye,
That so did 'maze his eyes.
In thee, quoth he, doth rest my life;
For surely thou shalt be my wife,
Or else this hand with bloody knife
The Gods shall sure suffice.
Then from his bed he soon arose,
And to his pallace gate he goes;
Full little then this begger knowes
When she the king espies.

The Gods preserve your majesty,
The beggers all gen cry:
Vouchsafe to give your charity
Our childrens food to buy.
The king to them his pursue did cast,
And they to part it made great haste;
This silly woman was the last
That after them did ly.
TAKE THY OLD CLOAK ABOUT THEE.

The king he cal’d her back againe,
And unto he gave his chaine;
And said, With us you shall remaine
Till such time as we dye:
For thou, quoth he, shalt be my wife,
And honoured for my queene;
With thee I mean to lead my life,
As shortly shall be seen:
Our wedding shall appointed be,
And every thing in its degree;
Come on, quoth he, and follow me,
Thou shalt go shift thee clean.
What is thy name, faire maid! quoth he.
Penelophon*, O king, quoth she;
With that she made a lowe courtesie;
A trim one as I weene.
Thus hand in hand along they walke
Unto the king’s pallaice:
The king with courteous comly talke
This beggar doth imbace:
The beggar blashoth scarlet red,
And straight againe as pale as lead,
But not a word at all she said,
She was in such amaze.
At last she spake with trembling voyce,
And said, O king, I doe rejoyce
That you will take me for your choyce,
And my degree’s so base.
And when the wedding day was come,
The king commanded strait
The noblemen both all and some
Upon the queene to wait.

And she behaved herself that day,
As if she had never walkt the way:
She had forgot her gown of gray,
Which she did weare of lute.
The proverb is come to passe,
The priest, when he begins his masse,
Forgets that ever clerke he was;
He knowth not his estate.

Here you may read, Cophetua,
Though long time fancie-fed,
Compelled by the blinded boy
The beggar for to wed:
He that did lovers looks disdain,
To do the same was glad and faine,
Or else he would himselfe have slain,
In storie, as we read.
Disdain no whit, O lady deere,
But pitty now thy servant heere,
Least that it hap to thee this yeare,
As to that king it did,
And thus they led a quiet life
During their princely raigne;
And in a tombbe were buried both,
As writers sheweth plaine.
The lords they tooke it grievously,
The ladies tooke it heaviely,
The commons cryed pitiously,
Their death to them was paine,
Their fame did sound so passingly
That it did pierce the stary sky,
And throughout all the world did flye
To every princes realme*.

---is supposed to have been originally a Scotch ballad. The reader here has an ancient copy in the English idiom, with an additional stanza (the 2d) ever before printed. This curiosity is preserved in the Editor’s folio MS. but not without corruptions, which are here removed by the assistance of the Scottish Ed. Shakespeare, in his Othello, act ii. had quoted one stanza, with some variations, which are here adopted: the old MS. readings of that stanza are however given in the margin.

This winters weather it waxeth cold,
And frost doth freeze on every hill,
And Boreas blowes his blasts soe bold,
That all our cattell are like to spil;
Bell my wife, who loves noe strie,
Shee sayd unto me quietlye,
Rise up, and save cow Cumbocke liffe,
Man, put thine old cloake about thee.

---Shakespeare (who alludes to this ballad in his “Love’s Labour lost,” act iv. sc. 1) gives the Beggar’s name Zenelophon, according to all the old editions: but this seems to be a corruption; for Penelophon, in the text, sounds more like the name of a woman.—The story of the King and the Beggar is also alluded to in K. Rich II. act v. sc. 3

VII.

TAKE THY OLD CLOAK ABOUT THEE.

He.

O Bell, why dost thou flye ‘ and scorne’?
Thou kenst my cloak is very thin:
Itt is soe bare and overworne
A crickie he theron cannot rem:
Then Ile no longer borrowe nor lend,
For once Ile new apparell bee,
To-morrow Ile to town and spend,
For Ile have a new cloake about mee.

She.

Cow Cumbocke is a very good cowe,
Shew ha beene awayses true to the payle
Shew has helpt to butter and cheese, I trw,
And other things shee will not flye;
I wold be loth to see her pine,
Good husband, counsel take mee.
It is not for us to goe seene,
Man, take thine old cloake about thee.

V. 96, l. e. trampled the streets.—V. 105, Here the Poet addresses himself to his mistress.—V. 119, Sheweth was anciently the phr. numb.

* An ingenious friend thinks the two last stanzas should change place.
WILLOW, WILLOW, WILLOW.

It is from the following stanzas that Shakespeare has taken his song of the "Willow," in his Othello, act iv. sc. 3, though somewhat varied and applied by him to a female character. He makes Desdemona introduce it in this pathetic and affecting manner:

"My mother had a maid call'd Barbara;
She was in love; and she lov'd prov'd mad,
And did forsake her. She had a song of—Willow.
An old thing 'twas, but it express'd her fortune,
And she died singing it."

This is given from a black-letter copy in the Pepys collection, thus entitled, "A Lover's Complaint, being forsaken of his Love." To a pleasant tune.

A rooks soul sat sighing under a sicamore tree;
O willow, willow, willow!
With his hand on his bosom, his head on his knee:
O willow, willow, willow!
O willow, willow, willow!
Sing, O the greene willow shall be my garland.

He sigh'd in his singing, and after each grone,
Come willow, &c.
I am dead to all pleasure, my true-love is gone;
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow shall be my garland.

My love she is turned; untrue she doth prove:
O willow, &c.
She renders me nothing but hate for my love.
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

O pity me, (cried he,) ye lovers, each one;
O willow, &c.
Her heart's hard as marble; she rues not my mone.
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

The cold streams ran by him, his eyes wept apace;
O willow, &c.
The salt tears fell from him, which drowned his face:
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

The mute birds ante by him, made tame by his mone:
O willow, &c.
[stones.
The salt tears fell from him, which softened the
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow shall be my garland!

Let nobody blame me, her scornes I do prove;
O willow, &c.
She was borne to be faire; I, to die for her love.
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow shall be my garland.

O that beauty should harbour a heart that's so hard!
Sing willow, &c.
My true love rejecting without all regard.
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

Let love no more boast him in palace or bower,
O willow, &c.
For women are trothles, and flote in an houre.
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

They are clad in blacke, green, yellowe, or 'gray,
See far above their owne degree.
Once in my life Ie ' doe as they,'
For Ie have a new cloake about mee.

Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

V. 41, flyfe, MS.

V. 49, King Harry, a very good king, MS. V. 50, I trow his hose cost but, MS. V. 51, He thought them 120 to deere, MS. V. 52, clowes, MS. V. 53, He was king and wore the crowne, MS.
But what helps complaining? In vain I complain:
O willow, &c.
I must patiently suffer her scorn and desjaine.
O willow, &c. 50
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

Come, all you forsaken, and sit down by me,
O willow, &c. [she.
He that 'plaines of his false love, mine's falser than
O willow, &c. 55
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

The willow wreath weare I, since my love did fleet;
O willow, &c.
A Garland for lovers forsaken most meete.
O willow, &c. 60
Sing, O the Greene willow shall be my garland!

PART THE SECOND.

Lowre lay'd by my sorrow, begot by desjaine;
O willow, willow, willow! 5
Against her to cruell, still still I complaine,
O willow, willow, willow!
O willow, willow, willow!
Sing, O the Greene willow shall be my garland!

O love too injurious, to wound my poore heart!
O willow, &c.
To suffer the triumph, and joy in my smart.
O willow, &c. 10
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

O willow, willow, willow! the willow garland,
O willow, &c.
A signe of her falsenesse before me doth stand:
O willow, &c. 15
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

As here it doth bid to despair and to dye,
O willow, &c.
So hang it, friends, ore me in grave where I ly:
O willow, &c. 20
Sing, O the Greene willow shall be my garland.

In grave where I rest mee, hang this to the view,
O willow, &c.
Of all that doe knowe her, to blaze her untrue.
O willow, &c. 25
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

With these words engraven, as epitaph meet,
O willow, &c. [sweet.
"Here lies one, drank poysen for potion most
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

Though she thus unkindly hath scorned my love,
O willow, &c. 30
And carelessly smiles at the sorrowes I prove;
O willow, &c. 35
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

I cannot against her unkindly exclaim,
O willow, &c. [name:
Cause once well I loved her, and honoured her
O willow, &c. 40
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

The name of her souded so sweete in mine eare,
O willow, &c.
It rays'd my heart lightly, the name of my deare;
O willow, &c. 45
Sing, O the Greene willow shall be my garland.

As then 'twas my comfort, it now is my griefe;
O willow, &c. 50
It now brings me anguish; then brought me reliefe.
O willow, &c.
Sing, O the Greene willow, &c.

Farewell, faire false hearted: plaints end with my
O willow, willow, willow! [breath?
Thou dost loath me, I love thee, though cause of my deathe.
O willow, willow, willow! 55
O willow, willow, willow!
Sing, O the Greene willow shall be my garland.

IX.

SIR LANCELOT DU LAKE.

This ballad is quoted in Shakespeare's second part of Henry IV. act ii. The subject of it is taken from the ancient romance of King Arthur, (commonly called Morte Arthur), being a poetical translation of chap. cviii., cix., ex., in part 1st, as they stand in ed. 1634, 4to. In the older editions the chapters are differently numbered.—This song is given from a printed copy, corrected in part by a fragment in the editor's folio MS.

In the same play of 2 Henry IV. Silence hums a scrap of one of the old ballads of Robin Hood. It is taken from the following stanza of "Robin Hood and the Pindar of Wakefield."—

All this behord three wighty yeomen,
Twas Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John:
With that they espy'd the jolly Pindar
As he sate under a throne.

That ballad may be found on every stall, and therefore is not here reprinted.

When Arthur first in court began,
And was approved king,
By force of armes great victors wanne,
And conquest home did bring.

Then into England straight he came
With fifty good and able
Knights, that resorted unto him,
And were of his round table:

And he had justs and turnaments,
Wherto were many presst,
Wherein some knights did far excell
And eke surmount the rest.
But one Sir Lancelot du Lake,
Who was approved well,
He for his deeds and feats of armes
All others did excell.

When he had rested him a while,
In play, and game, and sport,
He said he wold goe prove himself
In some adventurous sort.

He armed rode in a forest wide,
And met a damsell faire,
Who told him of adventures great,
Wherto he gave great ear.

Such wold I find, quoth Lancelott:
For that cause came I hither.
Thou seest, quoth shee, a knight full good,
And I will bring thee thither.

Whereas a mighty knight doth dwell,
That now is of great fame;
Therefore tell me what wight thou art,
And what may be thy name.

"My name is Lancelot du Lake." Quoth she, it likes me than:
Here dwelleth a knight who never was
Yet matcht with any man:

Who has in prison threescore knights
And four, that he did wound;
Knights of King Arthur's court they be,
And of his table round.

She brought him to a river side,
And also to a tree,
Whereon a copper bason hung,
And many shields to see.

He struck soe hard, the bason broke;
And Tarquin soon he spied:
Who drove a horse before him fast,
Whereon a knight lay tyed.

Sir knight, then sayd Sir Lancelott,
Bring me that horse-load hither,
And lay him downe, and let him rest;
Weel try our force together:

For, as I understand, thou hast,
Soo far as thou art able,
Done great despite and shame unto
The knights of the Round Table.

If thou be of the Table Round,
Quoth Tarquin speedilye,
Both thee and all thy fellowship
I utterly defy.

That's over much, quoth Lancelott tho,
Defend thee by and by.
They sett their speares unto their steeds,
And eache att other fie.

They coucht thire speares, (their horses ran, 65
As though there had beene thunder)
And strucke them each immidist their shields,
Wherewith they broke in sunder.

Their horses backes brake under them,
The knights were both astound:
To avoid their horses they made haste
And light upon the ground.

They tooke them to their shields full fast,
The swords they drew out than,
With mighty strokes most eagerlye
Each at the other ran.

They wounded were, and bled full sore,
They both for breath did stand,
And leaning on their swords awhile,
Quoth Tarquins, Hold thy hand,

And tell to me what I shall aske,
Say on, quoth Lancelott tho.
Thou art, quoth Tarquins, the best knight
That ever I did know;

And like a knight that I did hate:
Sooe that thou be not bee,
I will deliver all the rest,
And eke accord with thee.

That is well said quoth Lancelott;
But sith it must be soe,
What knight is that thou hatest thus?
I pray thee to me show.

His name is Lancelot du Lake,
He slew my brother deere;
Him I suspect of all the rest:
I would I had him here.

Thy wish thou hast, but yet unknowne,
I am Lancelot du Lake,
Now knight of Arthurs Table Round;
Kings Hauls son of Schuake;

And I desire thee do thy worst.
Ho, ho, quoth Tarquin tho,
One of us two shall end our lives
Before that we do go.

If thou be Lancelot du Lake,
Then welcome shalt thou bee;
Wherefore see thou thyself defend,
For now defy I thee.

They buckled then together so,
Like unto wild boares rashing;*
And with their swords and shields they ran
At one another slashing:

The ground besprinkled was wyth blood:
Tarquin began to yield;
For he gave backe for weariness,
And lowe did beare his shield.

* Rashing seems to be the old hunting term to express the stroke made by the wild-boar with his fangs. To rase has apparently a meaning something similar. See Mr. Stee-193.) where the quartos read, "Nor thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh rash boarish fangs."
So in K. Richard III, act iii, sc. 9, (vol. x. p. 597, 583.)
"He dreame
To night the Boar had raze off his helm."
GERNUTUS THE JEW OF VENICE.

This soone Sir Lancelot espysde,
He leapt upon him then,
He pull'd him downe upon his knee,
And rushing off his helm.

Forthwith he strukke his necke in two,
And, when he had soe done,
From prison threescore knights and four Delivered everye one,

X.

CORYDON'S FAREWELL TO PHILLIS,

There be many mo, though that she doe goe,
There be many mo, I fear not:
Why then let her goe, I care not.

Farewell, farewell; since this I find is true
I will not spend more time in wooing you:
But I will seek elsewhere, if I may find love there:
Shall I bid her goe? what and if I doe?
Shall I bid her goe and spare not?
O no, no, no, I dare not.

Ten thousand times farewell;—yet stay a while:—
Sweet, kiss me once; sweet kisses time beguile:
I have no power to move. How now am I in love?
Wilt thou needs be gone? Go then, all is one.
Wilt thou needs be gone? Oh, hie thee!
Nay stay, and do no more deny me.

Once more adieu, I see loath to depart
Bids oft adieu to her, that holds my heart.
But seeing I must lose thy love, which I did choose,
Goe thy way for me, since that may not be.
Goe thy ways for me. But whither?
Goe, oh, but where I may come thither.

What shall I doe? my love is now departed.
She is as fair, as she is cruel-hearted.
[repeated,
She would not be intreated, with prayers oft
If she come no more, shall I die therefore?
If she come no more, what care I?
Faith, let her goe, or come, or tarry.

XI.

GERNUTUS THE JEW OF VENICE.

In the "Life of Pope Sixtus V. translated from the Italian of Greg. Leti, by the Rev. Mr. Farne worth, folio," is a remarkable passage to the following effect.

"It was reported in Rome, that Drake had taken and plundered St. Domingo in Hispaniola, and carried off an immense booty. This account came in a private letter to Paul Secchi, a very considerable merchant in the city, who had large concerns in those parts, which he had insured. Upon receiving this news, he sent for the insurer Sampson Ceneda, a Jew, and acquainted him with it. The Jew whose interest it was to have such a report thought false, gave many reasons why it could not possibly be true,
and at last worked himself into such a passion, that he said, I'll lay you a pound of flesh it is a
lye. Secchi, who was of a fiery hot temper, replied, I'll lay you a thousand crowns against a pound of your flesh that it is true. The Jew accepted the wager, and articles were immediately executed betwixt them, that, if Secchi won, he should him-selv cut the flesh with a sharp knife from whatever part of the Jew's body he pleased. The truth of the account was soon confirmed; and the Jew was almost distracted, when he was informed, that Secchi had solemnly swore he would compel him to an exact performance of his contract. A report of this transaction was brought to the Pope, who sent for the parties, and, being informed of the whole affair, said, when contracts are made, it is but just they should be fulfilled, as this shall: take a knife, therefore, Secchi, and cut a pound of flesh from any part you please of the Jew’s body. We advise you however, to be very careful; for, if you cut but a scrape more or less than your due, you shall certainly be hanged.”

The editor of that book is of opinion, that the scene between Shylock and Antonio in the “Merchant of Venice” is taken from this incident. But Mr. Watton, in his ingenious “Observations on the Faerie Queen,” vol. 1, page 128,” has referred it to the following ballad. Mr. Watton thinks this ballad was written before Shakespere’s play, as being not so circumstantial, and having more of the nakedness of an original. Besides, it differs from the play in many circumstances, which a mere copyist, such as we may suppose the ballad-maker to be, would hardly have given himself the trouble to alter. Indeed he expressly informs us, that he had his story from the Italian writers. See the “Connoisseur,” vol. 1, No. 16.

After all, one would be glad to know what authority “Leti” had for the foregoing fact, or at least for connecting the taking of St. Domingo by Drake; for this expedition did not happen till 1585, and it is very certain that a play of the “Jew, representing the greediness of worldly chusers, and bloody minds of usurers,” had been exhibited at the play-house called the “Bull,” before the year 1579, being mentioned in Steph. Gosson’s “School of Abuse,” which was printed in that year.

As for Shakespeare’s “Merchant of Venice,” the earliest edition known of it is in quarto, 1600; though it had been exhibited in the year 1598, being mentioned, together with eleven others of his plays, in Meres’s “Wits Treasury,” &c. 1598, 12mo. fol. 282. See Malone’s Shakspe.

The following is printed from an ancient black-letter copy in the Pepys collection, entitled, “A new Song, shewing the cruelty of ‘Gernutus, a Jewe,’ who, belonging to a merchant an hundred crowns, would have a pound of his flesh, because he could not pay him at the time appointed. To the tune of Black and Yellow.”

THE FIRST PART.

In Venice towe ne long agee
A cruel Jew did dwell,
Which lived all on usurie
As Italian writers tell.

Gernutus called was the Jew,
Which never thought to dye,
Nor ever yet did any good
To them in streets that lie.

His life was like a barrow bogge,
That liveth many a day,
Yet never once doth any good,
Until men will him slay.

Or like a filthy heap of dung,
That lyeth in a whoard;
Which never can do any good,
Till it be spread abroad.

So fares it with the usurer,
He cannot sleep in rest,
For feare the thieve will him pursue
To plucke him from his nest.

His heart doth think on many a wile,
How to deceive the poore;
His mouth is almost ful of mucke,
Yet still he gapes for more.

His wife must lend a shilling,
For every wecke a penny,
Yet bring a pledge, that is double worth,
If that you will have any.

And see, likewise, you keepe your day,
Or else you lose it all:
This was the living of the wife,
Her cow she did it call.

Within that citie dwelt that time
A merchant of great fame,
Which being distressed in his need,
Unto Gernutus came:

Desiring him to stand his friend
For twelve month and a day,
To lend to him an hundred crownes:
And he for it would pay

Whatsoever he would demand of him,
And pledges he should have.
No, (quoth the Jew with fleering lookes,) Sir, aske what you will have.

No penny for the loan of it
For one year you shall pay;
You may doe me as good a turne,
Before my dying day.

But we will have a merry jeast,
For to be talked long:
You shall make me a bond, quoth he,
That shall be large and strong:

And this shall be the forfeiture;
Of your owne flesh a pound.
If you agree, make you the bond,
And here is a hundred crownes.

With right good will! the marchant says:
And so the bond was made.
When twelve month and a day drew on
That backe it should be payd.

The merchants ships were all at sea,
And money came not in;
Which way to take, or what to doe
To think he doth begin:

And to Gernutus strait he comes
With cap and bended knee,
And sayde to him, Of curtesie
I pray you beare with mee.

My day is come, and I have not
The money for to pay:
And little good the forfeitture
Will doe you, I dare say,

V. 32. Cow, &c. seems to have suggested to Shakespeare Shake:ck’s argument for usury taken from Jacob’s manage of Laban’s sheep, act i, to which Antonio replies:
“Was this inserted to make interest good?
Or are your gold and silver eues and rams?—
Shy, I cannot toll. I make it breed as fast.
With all my heart, Gernutus sayd,
Commend it to your minde:
In things of bigger weight then this
You shall me ready finde.

He goes his way; the day once past
Gernutus doth not slacke
To get a sergiant presently;
And clapt him on the backe:

And layd him into prison strong,
And sue his bond withall;
And when the judgement day was come,
For judgement he did call.

The marchants friends came thither fast
With many a weeping eye,
For other means they could not find,
But he that day must dye.

THE SECOND PART.

"Of the Jews crueltie; setting forth the mercifulnesse of the Judge towards the Marchant. To the tune of Blakke and Yellow."

Some offer'd for his hundred crownes
Five hundred for to pay;
And some a thousand, two or three,
Yet still he did deny.

And at the last ten thousand crownes
They offer'd, him to save.
Gernutus sayd, I will no gold:
My forfeite I will have.

A pound of flesh is my demand,
And that shall be my hire.
Then sayd the judge, Yet, good my friend,
Let me of you desire

To take the flesh from such a place,
As yet you let him live;
Do so, and lo! an hundred crownes
To thee here will I give.

No: no: quoth he; no: judgement here:
For this it shall be trie,
For I will have my pound of flesh
From under his right side.

It grieved all the companie
His crueltie to see,
For neither friend nor foe could helpe
But he must spoyled bee.

The bloudie Jew now ready is
With whetted blade in hand*,
To spoyle the bloud of innocent,
By forfeit of his bond.

And as he was about to strike
In him the deadly blow:
Stay (quoth the judge) thy crueltie;
I charge the to do so.

Sith needs thou wilt thy forfeit have,
Which is of flesh a pound:
See that thou shed no drop of bloud,
Nor yet the man confound.

For if thou doe, like murderer
Thou here shalt hanged be:
Likewise of flesh see that thou cut
No more than longes to thee:

For if thou take either more or lesse
To the value of a mite,
Thou shalt be hanged presently,
As is both law and right.

Gernutus now waxt frantick mad,
And wotes not what to say;
Quoth he at last, Ten thousand crownes,
I will that he shall pay;

And so I graunt to set him free.
The judge doth answere make;
You shall not have a penny given;
Your forfeyture now take.

At the last he doth demand
But for to have his owne.
No, quoth the judge, doe as you list,
Thy judgement shall be showne.

Either take your pound of flesh, quoth he,
Or cancel me your bond.
O cruell judge, then quoth the Jew,
That doth against me stand!

And so with griping grieved mind
He biddeth them fare-well.
' Then 'all the people prays'd the Lord,
That ever this heard tell.

Good people, that doe heare this song,
For trueth I dare well say,
That many a wretch as ill as hee
Doth live now at this day;

That seeketh nothing but the spoyle
Of many a wealthy man,
And for to trap the innocent
Deviseth what they can.

From whom the Lord deliver me,
And every Christian too,
And send to them like sentence eke
That meaneth so to do.

* * Since the first edition of this book was printed, the Editor hath had reason to believe that both Shakespeare and the Author of this ballad are indebted for their story of the Jew (however they came by it) to an Italian Novel, which was first printed at Milan in the year 1534, in a book entitled, Il pecorone, nel quale si contengono Cinquanta Novelle antiche, &c. re-published at Florence about the year 1748, or 9.—The Author was Ser. Giovanni Fioren- tino, who wrote in 1378; thirty years after the time in which the scene of Boccace's Decameron is laid. (Vid. Manni Istorla di Decameron di Giov. Boccac. 4to Fior. 1744.) That Shakespeare had his plot from the Novel it-

V. 61. griped, Ashmol. copy. of the novel which Mr. Johnson has given us at the end of his commentary on Shakespeare's play. The translation of the Italian story at large is not easy to be met with, having I believe never been published, though it was printed some years ago with this title, "The Novel, from which the Merchant of Venice, written by Shakespeare is taken, translated from the Italian. To which is added, a translation of a novel from the Decameron of Boccacio, London, Printed for M. Cooper, 1755, 8vo."

XII.

THE PASSIONATE SHEPHERD TO HIS LOVE.

This beautiful sonnet is quoted in the Merry Wives of Windsor, act iii. sc. 1, and hath been usually ascribed (together with the reply) to Shakespeare himself by the modern editors of his smaller poems. A copy of this madrigal, containing only four stanzas (the 4th and 6th being wanting,) accompanied with the first stanza of the answer, being printed in "The Passionate Pilgrimage, and Sonnets to sundry Notes of Musicke, by Mr. William Shakespeare, Lond. printed for W. Jaggard, 1599." Thus was this sonnet, &c. published as Shakespeare's in his lifetime.

And yet there is good reason to believe that (not Shakespeare, but) Christopher Marlow wrote the song, and Sir Walter Raleigh the "Nymph's Reply:" for so we are positively assured by Isaac Walton, a writer of some credit, who has inserted them both in his Compleat Angler, under the character of "that smooth song, which was made by Kit Marlow, now at least fifty years ago; and ... an Answer to it, which was made by Sir Walter Raleigh in his younger days ... Old fashioned poetry, but choice and good."—It also passed for Marlow's in the opinion of his contemporaries; for in the old poetical miscellany, entitled, "England's Helicon," it is printed with the name of Chr. Marlow subjoined to it; and the reply is signed Ignoto, which is known to have been a signature of Sir Walter Raleigh. With the same signature Ignoto, in that collection, is an imitation of Marlow's, beginning thus:

"Come live with me, and be my dear,
And we will revel all the year,
In plains and groves, &c."

Upon the whole I am inclined to attribute them to Marlow, and Raleigh; notwithstanding the authority of Shakespeare's Book of Sonnets. For it is well known that as he took no care of his own compositions, so was he utterly regardless what spurious things were gathered upon him. Sir John Oldcastle, the London Prodigal, and the Yorkshire Tragedy, were printed with his name at full length in the title-pages, while he was living, which yet were afterwards rejected by his first editors Heminges and Condell, who were his intimate friends, (as he mentions both in his will,) and therefore no doubt had good authority for setting them aside.

* First printed in the year 1653, but probably written some time before.
† Since the above was written, Mr. Malone, with his usual discernment, hath rejected the stanzas in question from the other sonnets, &c. of Shakespeare, in his correct editio of the Passionate Pilgrim, &c. See his Shakesp. vol. x. p. 349

The following sonnet appears to have been (as it deserved) a great favourite with our earlier poets: for, besides the imitation above mentioned, another is to be found among Donne's Poems, entitled, "The Bait," beginning thus:

"Come live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
Of golden sands, &c."

As for Chr. Marlow, who was in high repute for his dramatic writings, he lost his life by a stab received in a brothel, before the year 1593. See A. Wood, i. 138.

Come live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and vallies, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee beds of roses
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Imbrodered all with leaves of mintle;

A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Slippers lin'd choicely for the cold;
With buckles of the purest gold;

A belt of straw, and ivie buds,
With coral claspes, and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me, and be my love.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May morning;
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my love.

THE NYMPH'S REPLY.

If that the World and Love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee, and be thy love.

But time drives flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold,
And Philomel becomes dumb,
And all complain of cares to come.
The flowers do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yield:
A honey tone, a heart of gall,
Is fancies spring, but sorrows fall.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten.

Thy belt of straw, and ivie buds,
Thy coral clasps, and amber studs;
All these in me no means can move
To come to thee, and be thy love.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joyes no date, nor age no need;
Then those delights my mind might move
To live with thee, and be thy love.

The following is given from a copy in "The Golden Garland," entitled as above; compared with three others, two of them in black letter in the Pepys collection, entitled "The Lamentable and Tragical History of Titus Andronicus, &c." "To the Tune of Fortune," printed for E. Wright. Unluckily, none of these have any dates.

You noble minds, and famous martall wights,
That in defence of native country fights,
Give ear to me, that ten yeeres fought for Rome,
Yet respt disgrace at my returning home.

In Rome I lived in fame fulle threescore yeeres,
My name beloved was of all my peeres;
Fulle five-and-twenty valiant sonnes I had,
Whose forwarde vertues made their father glad.

For when Romes foes their warlike forces bent,
Against them stille my sonnes and I were sent;
Against the Gothes full ten yeeres weare warre
We spent, receiving many a bloody scarre.

Just two-and-twenty of my sonnes were slaine
Before we did returne to Rome againe:
Of five-and-twenty sonnes, I brought but three Alive, the stately towers of Rome to see.

When wars were done, I conquer home did bring
And did present my prisoners to the king,
The queene of Gothes, her sons, and eke a Moore,
Which did such murders, like was nere before.

The emperour did make this queene his wife,
Which bred in Rome debate and deadly strife;
The Moore, with her two sonnes did growe soo proud,
That none like them in Rome might be allowed.

The Moore soo pleas'd this new-made empress' eie,
That she consented to him secretley
For to abuse her husbands marriage bed,
And soe in time a blackamore she bred.

Then she, whose thoughts to murder were inclinde,
Consented with the Moore of bloody minde
Against myselfe, my kin, and all my frendes,
In cruel sort to bring them to their ends.

Soo when in age I thought to live in peace,
Both care and grieue began then to increase:
Amongst my sonnes I had one daughter brighte,
Which joy'd, and pleased best my aged sight;

Mr. Malone thinks 1591 to be the era when our author commenced a writer for the stage. See in his Shaksp. the ingenious "Attempt to ascarrin the order in which the plays of Shakespeare were written."

Since the above was written, Shakespeare's memory has been fully vindicated from the charge of writing the above play by the best critics. See what has been urged by Stevens and Malone in their excellent editions of Shakespeare, &c.
My deare Lavinia was betrothed than
To Cesars sonne, a young and noble man:
Who, in a hunting by the emperours wife,
And her two sones, bereaved was of life.

He being slaine, was cast in cruel wise,
Into a darksome den from light of skyes:
The cruel Moore did come that way as then
With my three sones, who fell into the den,
The Moore then fetcht the emperour with speed, 45
For to accuse them of that murderoues deed,
And when my sones within the den were found,
In wrongfull prison they were cast and bound.

But nowe, behold? what wounded most my mind,
The empresses two sones of savage kind
My daughter ravished without remorse,
And took away her honour, quite perforce.

When they had tasted of soe sweetes a flore,
Fearing this sweete should shortly turne to sofre,
They cutt her tongue, whereby she could not tell 55
How that dishonoure unto her beffel.

Then both her hands they bashly cutt off quite,
Whereby their wickednesse she could not write;
Nor with her needle on her sampler sowe
The bloodye workers of her dierefull wo.

My brother Marcus found her in the wood,
Staining the grassie ground with purple blood,
That trickled from her stumpes, and bloudlesse armes:
Noe tongue at all she had to tell her harms.

But when I sawe her in that woefull case,
With teares of bloud I wet mine aged face:
For my Lavinia I lamented more
Then for my two-and-twenty sones before.

When as I sawe she could not write nor speake,
With grief mine aged heart began to breake;
We spared an heape of sand upon the ground,
Whereby those bloody tyrants out we found.

For with a staffe, without the helpe of hand,
She writ these words upon the plat of sand:
"The lustfull sones of the proud emperesse 75
Are doers of this hateful wickednesse."

I tore the milk-white hairs from off mine head,
I curst the bourse, wherein I first was bred,

I wisht this hand, that fought for countrie's fame,
In cradle rokct, had first been stroken lame.

The Moore delighting still in villainy
Did say, to sett my sones from prison free
I should unto the king my right hand give,
And then my three imprisoned sones should live.

The Moore I caus'd to strike it off with speede, 85
Whereat I grieved not to see it bleed,
But for my sones would willingly impart,
And for their ransome send my bleeding heart.

But as my life did linger thus in paine,
They sent to me my bootsesse hand againe,
And therewithal the heads of my three sones,
Which filld my dyng heart with fresher moones.

Then past reliefe, I upp and downe did goe,
And with my tears writ in the dust my woe:
I shot my arrowes* towards heaven hee
And for revenge to hell did often crye.

The empress then, thinking that I was mad,
Like Furies she and both her sones were clad,
(She nam'd Revenge, and Rape and Murder they)
To undermine and heare what I would say. 100

I fed their foolish veines† a certaine space,
Until my friends did find a secret place,
Where both her sones unto a post were bound,
And just revenge in cruel sort was found.

I cut their throates, my daughter held the pan 105
Betwixt her stumpes, wherein the bloud it ran :
And then I ground their bones to powder small,
And made a paste for pyes streight therewithall.

Then with their flese I made two mighty pyes,
And at a banquet served in stately wise: 110
Before the empress set this loathsome meat;
So of her sones own flesh she well did eat.

Myselie bereav'd my daughter then of life,
The empress then I slewe with bloody knife,
And stabb'd the emperour immediatly, 115
And then myself: even so did Titus die.

Then this revenge against the Moore was found,
Alive they set him halfe into the ground,
Whereas he stood untill such time he starr'd,
And soe God send all murderers may be serv'd 120-

XIV.

TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY.

The first stanza of this little sonnet, which an eminent critic* justly admires for its extreme sweetness, is found in Shakespeare's "Measure for Measure," act iv. sc. 1. Both the stanzas are preserved in Beaumont and Fletcher's "Bloody Brother," act v. sc. 2. Sewel and Gildon have printed it among Shakespeare's smaller poems; but they have done the same by twenty other pieces that were never writ by him, their book being a wretched heap of inaccuracies and mistakes. It is not found in Jaggard's old edition of Shakespeare's "Passionate Pilgrim †, &c.

* Dr. Warburton in his Shakep.
† If the ballad was written before the play, I should suppose this to be only a metaphorical expression, taken from that in the Psalms, "They shoot out their arrows, even bitter words." Ps. 64. 3.
‡ i. e. encouraged them in their foolish humors, or fancies.
§ Mr. Malone in his improved edition of Shakespeare's Sonnets, &c. hath substituted this instead of Marlow's Madrigal, printed above; for which he hath assigned reasons, which the reader may see in his vol. x. p. 340.
-KING LEIR AND HIS THREE DAUGHTERS.

Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworne;
And those eyes, the breake of day,
Lights, that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring againe,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vaine.

KING LEIR AND HIS THREE DAUGHTERS.

The reader has here an ancient ballad on the subject of King Lear, which (as a sensible female critic has well observed) bears so exact an analogy to the argument of Shakespeare’s play, that his having copied it could not be doubted, if it were certain that it was written before the tragedy. Here is found the hint of Lear’s madness, which the old chronicles do not mention, as also the extravagant cruelty exercised on him by his daughters. In the death of Lear they likewise very exactly coincide.—The misfortune is, that there is nothing to assist us in ascertaining the date of the ballad but what little evidence arises from within; this the reader must weigh, and judge for himself.

It may be proper to observe, that Shakspere was not the first of our Dramatic Poets who fitted the story of Leir to the stage. His first 4to edition is dated 1608; but three years before that had been printed a play entitled “The true Chronicle History of Leir and his three daughters Gonorill, Ragan, and Cordelie, as it hath been divers and sundry times lately acted, 1605, 4to.”—This is a very poor and dull performance, but happily excited Shakspere to undertake the subject, which he has given with very different incidents. It is remarkable, that neither the circumstances of Leir’s madness, nor his retinue of a select number of knights, nor the affecting deaths of Cordelia and Leir, are found in that first dramatic piece; in all which Shakspere concurs with this ballad.

But to form a true judgment of Shakspere’s merit, the curious reader should cast his eye over that previous sketch, which he will find printed at the end of the twenty plays of Shakspere, republished from the quarto impressions by George Steevens, Esq. with such elegance and exactness as led us to expect that fine edition of all the works of our great Dramatic Poet, which he hath since published.

The following ballad is given from an ancient copy in the “Golden Garland,” bl. let. entitled, “A lamentable Song of the Death of King Lear and his Three Daughters. To the tune of When flying Fame.”

KING Lear once ruled in this land
With princely power and peace;
And had all things with hearts content,
That might his joys increase.

Amongst those things that nature gave,
Three daughters fair had he,
So princely seeming beautiful,
As fairer could not be.

† See Jeffery of Monmouth, Holingshead, &c. who relate Leir’s history in many respects the same as the ballad.

Hide, oh hide those hills of snowe,
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
Of whose tops the pinke that growe
Are of those that April wears;
But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

So on a time it pleas’d the king
A question thus to move,
Which of his daughters to his grace
Could shew the dearest love:
For to my age you bring content,
Quoth he, then let me hear,
Which of you three in plighted troth
The kindest will appear.

To whom the eldest thus began;
Dear father, mind, quoth she,
Before your face, to do you good,
My blood shall reader’d be:
And for your sake my bleeding heart
Shall here be cut in twain,
Ere that I see your reverend age
The smallest grief sustain.

And so will I, the second said;
Dear father, for your sake,
The worst of all extremities
I’ll gently undertake:
And serve your highness night and day
With diligence and love;
That sweet content and quietness
Discomforts may remove.

In doing so, you glad my soul,
The aged king reply’d;
But what sayst thou, my youngest girl,
How is thy love ally’d?
My love (quoth young Cordelia then)
Which t. your grace I owe,
Shall be the duty of a child,
And that is all I’ll show.

And wilt thou shew no more, quoth he,
Than doth thy duty bind?
I well perceive thy love is small,
When as no more I find.
Henceforth I banish thee my court,
Thou art no child of mine;
Nor any part of this my realm
By favour shall be thine.

Thy elder sisters loves are more
Than well I can demand,
To whom I equally bestow
My kingdom and my land,
My pious state and all my goods,
That lovingly I may
With those thy sisters be maintain’d
Until my dying day.
Thus flattering speeches won renown,
By these two sisters here;
The third had causeless banishment,
Yet was her love more dear:

For poor Cordelia patiently
Went wandering up and down,
Unhelp'd, unpity'd, gentle maid,
Through many an English town:

Untill at last in famous France
She gentler fortunes found;
Though poor and bare, yet she was deem'd
The fairest on the ground:

Where when the king her virtues heard,
And this fair lady seen,
With full consent of all his court
He made his wife and queen.

Her father King Leir this while
With his two daughters said:
Forgetful of their promis'd loves,
Full soon the same decay'd;

And living in Queen Ragan's court,
The eldest of the twain,
She took from him his chiepest means,
And most of all his train.

For whereas twenty men were wont
To wait with bended knee:
She gave allowance but to ten,
And after scarce to three;

Nay, one she thought too much for him;
So took she all away,
In hope that in her court, good king,
He would no longer stay.

Am I rewarded thus, quoth he,
In giving all I have
Unto my children, and to beg
For what I lately gave?

I'll go unto my Gonorell:
My second child, I know,
Will be more kind and pitiful,
And will relieve my woe.

Full fast he hies then to her court;
Where when she heard his moan
Return'd him answer, That she grief'd,
That all his means were gone:

But no way could relieve his wants;
Yet if that he would stay
Within her kitchen, he should have
What scullions gave away.

When he had heard, with bitter tears
He made his answer then;
In what I did let me be made
Example to all men.

I will return again, quoth he,
Unto my Ragan's court;
She will not use me thus, I hope,
But in a kinder sort.

Where when he came, she gave command
To drive him thence away:
When he was well within her court
(She said) he would not stay.

Then back again to Gonorell
The woeful king did his,
That in her kitchen he might have
What scullion boys set by.

But there of that he was deny'd
Which she had promis'd late:
For once refusing, he should not
Come after to her gate.
Thus twixt his daughters, for relief
He wondred up and down;
Being glad to feed on beggars food,
That lately wore a crown.

And calling to remembrance then
His youngest daughters words,
That said the duty of a child
Was all that love affords:

But doubting to repair to her,
Whom he had banish'd so,
Grew frustick mad; for in his mind
He bore the wounds of woe:

Which made him rend his milk-white locks,
And tresses from his head,
And all with blood bestain his cheeks,
With age and honour spread.

To hills and woods and watry founts
He made his hourly moun.
Till hills and woods and sensless things,
Did seem to sigh and groan.

Even thus possesst with discontent,
He passed o're to France,
In hopes from fair Cordelia there,
To find some gentler chance;

Most virtuous dame? which when she heard
Of this her father's grief;
As duty bound, she quickly sent Him comfort and relief:

And by a train of noble peers,
In brave and gallant sort,
She gave in charge he should be brought To Aganippus' court;
Whose royal king, with noble mind
So freely gave consent,
To muster up his knights at arms,
To fame and courage bent.

And so to England came with speed,
To reposesee King Leir,
And drive his daughters from their thrones
By his Cordelia dear.
Where she, true-heated noble queen,
Was in the battel slain;
Yet he good king, in his old days,
Posset his crown again.

But when he heard Cordelia's death,
Who died indeed for love
Of her dear father, in whose cause
She did this battle move;
He swooning fell upon her breast,
From whence he never parted:
But on her bosom left his life,
That was so truly hearted.

The lords and nobles when they saw
The end of these events,
The other sisters unto death
They doomed by consent;
And being dead, their crowns they left
Unto the next of kin:
Thus have you seen the fall of price,
And disobedient sin.
XVI.

YOUTH AND AGE

Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare;
Youth is full of sport,
Age breath is short;
Youth is nimble, Age is lame;
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold;
Youth is wild, and Age is tame.
Age, I do abhor thee;
Youth, I do adore thee;
O, my love, my love is young:
Age, I do despis thee;
Oh sweet shepherds, lie thee,
For methinks thou stayst too long.

* * * See Malone's Shakesp. vol. x, p. 325.

THE FROLICKSOME DUKE, OR THE TINKER'S GOOD FORTUNE.

The following ballad is upon the same subject, as the induction to Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew: whether it may be thought to have suggested the hint to the Dramatic poet, or is not rather of later date, the reader must determine.

The story is told of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy; and is thus related by an old English writer: "The said duke, at the marriage of Eleonora, sister to the king of Portugal, at Bruges in Flanders, which was solemnised in the deep of winter; when as by reason of unseasonable weather he could neither hawke nor hunt, and was now tired with cards, dice, &c. and such other domestick sports, or to see ladies dance; with some of his courtiers, he would in the evening walke disguised all about the towne. It so fortunat, as he was walking late one night, he found a country fellow dead drunk, snorting on a bulke; he caused his followers to bring him to his palace, and there stripping him of his old clothes, and attyryng him after the court fashion, when he wakened he and they were all ready to attend upon his excellency, and persuade him that he was some great duke. The poor fellow admiring how hecame there, was served in state all day long: after supper he saw them dance, heard musicke, and all the rest of those court-like pleasures; but late at night, when he was well tyled, and again fast asleep, they put on his old robes, and so conveyed him to the place where they first found him. Now the fellow had not made them so good sport the day before, as he did now, when he returned to himself: all the jest was to see how he looked upon it. In conclusion, after some little admiration, the poore man told his friends he had seen a vision; constantly believed it; would not otherwise be persuaded, and so the jest ended." Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, pt ii. sec. 2. memb. 4. 2d. ed. 1624, fol.

This ballad is given from a black-letter copy in the Pepys collection, which is entitled as above "To the tune of Fond boy."

Now as name does report a young duke keeps a court, One that pleases his fancy with frollicksome sport: But amongst all the rest, here is one I protest, Which will make you to smile when you hear the true jest:
A poor tinker he found, lying drunk on the ground, As secure in a sleep as if laid in a swound.

The duke said to his men, William, Richard and Ben, Take him home to my palace, we'll sport with him then. O'er a horse he was laid, and with care soon convey'd To the palace, altho' he was poorly arraí'd: Then they stript off his cloaths, both his shirt, shoes and hose, And they put him to bed for to take his repose.

Having pull'd off his shirt, which was all over durt, They did give him clean holland, this was no great hurt: On a bed of soft down, like a lord of renown, They did lay him to sleep the drink out of his crown. In the morning when day, then admiring he lay, For to see the rich chamber both gaudy and gay.

Now he lay something late, in his rich bed of state, Till at last knights and squires they on him did wait; And the chamberlain bare, thendid likewise declare, He desired to know what apparel he'd ware: The poor tinker amaz'd, on the gentleman gaz'd, And admired how he to this honour was rais'd.
THE FRIAR OF ORDERS GRAY.

Tho' he seem'd something mute, yet he chose a rich suit,
Which he straitways put on without longer dispute:
With a star on his side, which the tinker oft ey'd,
And it seem'd for to swell him 'no' little with pride;
For he said to himself, Where is Joan my sweet wife?
Sure she never did see me so fine in her life. 30

From a convenient place, the right duke his good Did observe his behaviour in every case. [grace To a garden of state, on the tinker they wait, Trumpets sounding before him: thought he, this is great:
Where an hour or two, pleasant walks he did view, With commanders and squires in scarlet and blew.

A fine dinner was drest, both for him and his guests, He was plac'd at the table above all the rest; In a rich chair 'or bed,' lin'd with fine crimson red, With a rich golden canopy over his head: 40 As he sat at his meat, the musick play'd sweet, With the choicest of singing his joys to compleat.

While the tinker did dine, he had plenty of wine, Rich canary with sherry and tent superfine, Like a right honest soul, faith, he took off his bowl,45 Till at last he began for to tumble and roul [snore. From his chair to the floor, where he sleeping did Being seven times drearier than ever before.

Then the duke did ordain, they should strip him amain, And restore him his old leather garments again: 50

'Twas a point: next the worst, yet perform it they must, And they carry'd him strait, where they found him at first;
Then he slept all the night, as indeed well he might; But when he did waken, his joys took their flight.

For his glory 'to him' so pleasant did seem, 55 That he thought it to be but ameer golden dream; Till at length he was brought to the duke, where he sought For a pardon, as fearing he had set him at nought; But his higness he said, Thou 'rt a jolly bold blade, Such a frolick before I think never was plaid. 60

Then his highness bespoke him a new suit and cloak, Which he gave for the sake of this frolicksome jock; Nay, and five-hundred pound, with ten acres of ground, Thou shalt never, said he, range the countires round, Crying old brass to mend, for I'll be thy good friend,65 Nay, and Joan thy sweet wife shall my duchess attend.

Then the tinker reply'd, What! must Joan my sweet Be a lady in chariots of pleasure to ride? [bride Must we have gold and land ev'ry day at command? Then I shall be a squire I well understand: 70 Well I thank your good grace, and your love I embrace,
I was never before in so happy a case.

XVIII.
THE FRIAR OF ORDERS GRAY.

Dispersed through Shakespeare's plays are innumerable little fragments of ancient ballads, the entire copies of which could not be recovered. Many of these being of the most beautiful and pathetic simplicity, the Editor was tempted to select some of them, and with a few supplemental stanzas to connect them together, and form them into a little Tale, which is here submitted to the reader's candour. *

One small fragment was taken from Beaumont and Fletcher. It was a friar of orders gray Walkt forth to tell his beades; And he met with a lady faire Chas a pilgrim's weeds.

Now Christ thee save, thou reverend friar, I pray thee tell to me, If ever at yon holy shrine My true love thou didst see.

And how should I know your true love From many another one? O, by his cockle hat, and staff, And by his sandal shoon*. 10

But chiefly by his face and mien, That were so fair to view; His' flaxen locks that sweetly curl'd, And eye of lovely blue.

O lady, he is dead and gone! Lady, he's dead and gone! And at his head a green grass turfe, And at his heels a stone.

Within these holy cloysters long He languished, and he dyed, Lamenting of a ladies love, And 'playing of her pride.

Here bore him barefac'd on his bier Six proper youths and tall, And many a tear bedew'd his grave Within your kirk-yard wall.

And art thou dead, thou gentle youth! And art thou dead and gone! And didst thou dye for love of me! Break, cruel heart of stone!

O weep not, lady, weep not soe: Some ghostly comfort seek: Let not vain sorrow rive thy heart, Nay teares bedel thy cheek.

* These are the distinguishing marks of a Pilgrim. The chief places of devotion being beyond sea, the pilgrims were wont to put cockle-shells in their hats to denote the intention w performance of their devotion. Warb. Shakesp. vol. viii. p. 224.
And art thou dead, thou much-lov'd youth,
And didst thou dye for mee?
Then farewell home; for ever-more
A pilgrim I will bee.

But first upon my true-loves grave
My weary limbs I'll lay,
And thrice I'll kiss the green-grass turf,
That wraps his breathless clay

Yet stay, fair lady: rest awhile
Beneath this cloyster wall:
See through the hawthorn blows the cold wind,
And drizzly rain doth fall.

O stay me not, thou holy friar;
O stay me not, I pray;
No drizzly rain that falls on me,
Can wash my fault away.

Yet stay, fair lady, turn again,
And dry those pearly tears;
For see beneath this gown of gray
Thy owne true-love appears.

Here forc'd by grief, and hopeless love,
These holy weeds I sought;
And here amid these lonely walls
To end my days I thought.

But haply for my year of grace *
Is not yet past away,
Might I still hope to win thy love,
No longer would I stay.

Now farewell grief, and welcome joy
Once more unto my heart;
For since I have found thee, lovely youth,
We never more will part.

* * * As the foregoing song has been thought to have suggested to our late excellent poet Dr. Goldsmith, the plan of this beautiful ballad of Edwin and Emma," (first printed in his "Vicar of Wakefield," ) it is but justice to his memory to declare, that his poem was written first, and that if there is any imitation in the case, they will be found both to be indebted to the beautiful old ballad " Gentle Herdsman," &c. printed in this work, which the doctor had much admired in manuscript, and has finely improved. See Series the Second, book i. song xiv. ver. 37, &c.

* The year of probation, or novicia te.
SERIES THE FIRST.

BOOK III.

I.

THE MORE MODERN BALLAD OF CHEVY CHACE.

At the beginning of this volume we gave the old original Song of "Chevy Chace." The reader has here the more improved edition of that fine heroic ballad. It will afford an agreeable entertainment to the curious to compare them together, and to see how far the latter bard has excelled his predecessor, and where he has fallen short of him. For though he has every where improved the versification, and generally the sentiment and diction; yet some few passages retain more dignity in the ancient copy; at least the obscurities of the style serves as a veil to hide whatever might appear too familiar or vulgar in them. Thus, for instance, the catastrophe of the gallant Witherington is in the modern copy exprest in terms which never fail at present to excite ridicule; whereas in the original it is related with a plain and pathetic simplicity, that is liable to no such unlucky effect: See the stanza in page 4, which, in modern orthography, &c. would run thus:

"For Witherington my heart is woe,
That ever he slain should be:
For when his legs were hewn in two
He knelt and fought on his knee."

So again the stanza which describes the fall of Montgomery is somewhat more elevated in the ancient copy:

"The dint it was both sad and sore,
He on Montgomery set:
The swan-feathers his arrow bore
With his hearts blood were wet."

We might also add, that the circumstances of the battle are more clearly conceived, and the several incidents more distinctly marked in the old original, than in the improved copy. It is well known that the ancient English weapon was the long bow, and that this nation excelled all others in archery; while the Scottish warriors chiefly depended on the use of the spear: this characteristic difference never escapes our ancient bard, whose description of the first onset (p. 3.) is to the following effect:

"The proposal of the two gallant ears to determine the dispute by single combat being overruled; the English, says he, who stood with their bows ready bent, gave a general discharge of their arrows, which slew seven score spearmen of the enemy: but, notwithstanding so severe a loss, Douglas like a brave captain kept his ground. He had divided his forces into three columns, who as soon as the English had discharged the first volley, bore down upon them with their spears, and breaking through their ranks reduced them to close fighting. The archers upon this dropt their bows and had recourse to their swords, and there followed so sharp a conflict, that multitudes on both sides lost their lives." In the midst of this general engagement, at length, the two great earls meet, and after a spirited encounter agree to breathe; upon which a parley ensues, that would do honour to Homer himself.

Nothing can be more pleasingly distinct and circumstantial than this: whereas, the modern copy, though in general it has great merit, is here unluckily both confused and obscure. Indeed the original words seem here to have been totally misunderstood.

"Yet bydys the yerl Douglas upon the Bent," evidently signifies, "Yet the earl Douglas abides in the Field:" Whereas the more modern bard seems to have understood by Bent, the inclination of his mind, and accordingly runs quite off from the subject.*

"To drive the deer with hound and horn
Earl Douglas had the bent." v. 109.

One may also observe a generous impartiality in the old original bard, when in the conclusion of his tale he represents both nations as quitting the field, without any reproachful reflection on either: though he gives to his own countrymen the credit of being the smaller number.

"Of fifteen hundred archers of England
Went away but fifty and three;
Of twenty hundred spearmen of Scotland,
But even five and fifty."

He attributes flight to neither party, as hath been done in the modern copies of this ballad, as well Scotch as English. For, to be even with our latter bard, who makes the Scots to flee, some reviser of North Britain has turned his own arms against him, and printed an edition at Glasgow, in which the lines are thus transposed:

"Of fifteen hundred Scottish spiers
Went hame but fifty-three:
Of twenty hundred Englishmen
Scarcely fifty-five did flee."

And to countenance this change he has suppressed the two stanzas between ver. 240 and ver. 249.—From that edition I have here reformed the Scottish names, which in the modern English ballad appeared to be corrupted.

When I call the present admired ballad modern, I only mean that it is comparatively so; for that it

* In the present edition, instead of the unmeaning lines here censured, an insertion is made of four stanzas modernized from the ancient copy.
who thought it no derogation to his episcopal character, to vow a fondness for this excellent old ballad. See the preface to Old's Latin Songs, 1685, 8vo.

God prosper long our noble king,
Our lives and safeties all;
A woefull hunting once there did
In Chevy-Chace befall.

To drive the deere with hound and horne,
Erle Percy took his way,
The child may rue that is unborne,
The hunting of that day.

The stout Erle of Northumberland
A vow to God did make,
His pleasure in the Scottish woods
Three summers days to take;

The cheepest harts in Chevy-chace
To kill and bear away.
These tydings to Erle Douglas came,
In Scotland where he lay:

Who sent Erle Percy present word,
He will prevent his sport.
The English Erle, not fearing that,
Did to the woods resort.

With fifteen hundred bow-men bold;
All chosen men of might,
Who knew full well in time of neede
To ayme their shafts aight.

The gallant greyhounds swiftly ran,
To chase the fallow deere:
On munday they began to hunt,
Ere day-light did appear;

And long before high noone they had
An hundred fat buckes slaine;
Then having dined, the drovers went
To razeu the deere againe.

The bow-men mustered on the hills,
Well able to endure;
Thereis backsides all, with special care,
That day were guarded sure.

The hounds ran swiftly through the woods,
The nimble deere to take*;
That with their cries the hills and dales
An ecoho shrill did make.

Lord Percy to the quarry went,
To view the slaughter'd deere;
Quoth he, Erle Douglas promised
This day to meet me heere:

Ver. 56, That they were, fol. MS.

* The Clavich Hills and circumjacent Wastes are at present void of Deer, and almost stript of their woods; but formerly they had enough of both to justify the description attempted here and in the Ancient Ballad of Chevy-Chace. Leave, in the reign of Hen. VIII, thus describes this county: " In Northumberland, as I hear be, no forests, except Clivet Hills; where is much Brushe-Wood, and some Oke; Grownde overgrown with Linge, and some with Mosse. I have hardye say that Clivet Hills stretcheth xe miles. There is great Pente of Redde-Deere, and Roo Buckes." Hist. vol. vii. p. 56. — This passage, which did not occur when pages 67., were printed off, confirm the accounts there given of the Staggs and the Roe.
THE MORE MODERN BALLAD OF CHEVY-CHACE.

But if I thought he wold not come, 45
Noe longer wold I stay.
With that, a brave younge gentleman
Thus to the Erle did say:

Loe, yonder doth Erle Douglas come, 50
His men in armour bright;
Full two hundred Scottish soeres
All marching in our sight;

All men of pleasant Tivydale,
Fast by the river Tweede:
O cease your sports, Erle Percy said,
And take your bowes with speede:

And now with me, my countrymen,
Your courage forth advance;
For there was never champion yett
In Scotland or in France,

That ever did on horsebacke come,
But if my hap it were,
I durst encounter man for man,
With him to break a spere.

Erle Douglas on his milke-white steede,
Most like a baron bold,
Rode formost of his company,
Whose armour shone like gold.

Show me, sayd bee, whose men you bee,
That hunt soe boldly heere,
That, without my consent, doe chase
And kill my fallow-deere.

The first man that did answer make
Was noble Percy bee;
Who sayd, Wee list not to declare,
Nor shew whose men wee bee

Yet wee will spend our dearest blood,
Thy cheefest harts to slay.
Then Douglas swore a solemne oath
And thus in rage did say,

Ere thus I will out-braved bee,
One of us two shall dye:
I know thee well, an erle thou art;
Lord Percy, soe am I.

But trust me, Percy, pittyte it were
And great offence to kill
Any of these our guilllesse men,
For they have done no ill.

Let thou and I the battell trye,
And set our men aside.
Accurst bee he, Erle Percy sayd,
By whom this is denied.

Then stept a gallant squier forth,
Witherington was his name,
Who sayd, I wold not have it told
To Henry our king for shame,

That ere my captaine fought on foote,
And I stood looking on.
You bee two erles, sayd Witherington
And I a squier alone:

He doe the best that doe I may,
While I have power to stand:
While I have power to weeld my sword,
He fight with hart and hand.

Our English archers bent their bowes,
Their harts were good and trew;
Att the first flight of arrowes sent,
Full four-score Scots they alew.

* [Yet hides Earl Douglas on the beat,
As Chieftan stout and good.
As valiant Captain, all unmov'd
The shock he firmly stood.

His host he parted had in three,
As Leader ware and try'd,
And soon his spearmen on their foes
Dare down on every side.

* The four stanzas here inclosed in brackets, which are borrowed chiefly from the ancient copy, are offered to the reader instead of the following lines, which occur in the editor's folio MS.

To drive the deere with bound and borne,
Douglas hade on the beat;
Two captains moved with mickle might
Their spere to shivers went.

Throughout the English archery
They dealt full many a wound:
But still our valiant Englishmen
All firmly kept their ground:

And throwing strait their bowes away,
They gras'd their swords so bright:
And now sharp blows, a heavy shower,
On shields and helmets light.]

They closed full fast on eve ery side,
Noe slacknes there was found;
And many a gallant gentleman
Lay gasping on the ground.

O Christ! it was a grieve to see,
And likewise for to heare,
The cries of men lying in their gore,
And scattered here and there.

At last these two stout erles did meet,
Like captaines of great might:
Like lyons wood, they layd on lode,
And made a cruel fight:

They fought untill they both did sweat,
With swords of tempered steele;
Until the blood, like drops of rain,
They trickling downe did feele.

Yeeld thee, Lord Percy, Douglas sayd;
In faith I will thee bringe,
Where thou shalt high advanced bee
By James our Scottish king:

Thy ransome I will freely give,
And this report of thee,
Thou art the most courageous knight,
That ever I did see.
THE MORE MODERN BALLAD OF CHEVY-CHACE.

Noe, Douglas, quoth Erle Percy then,
Thy proffer I doe scorne;
I will not yeeld to any Scott,
That ever yet was borne.

With that, there came an arrow keen
Out of an English bow,
Which struck Erle Douglas to the heart,
A deepe and deadlye blow:

Who never spake more words than these,
Fight on, my merry men all;
For why, my life is at an end;
Lord Percy sees my fall.

Then leaving liffe, Erle Percy toke
The dead man by the hand;
And said, Erle Douglas, for thy life
Wold I had lost my land.

O Christ! my very hart doth bleed
With sorrow for thy sake;
For sure, a more redoubted knight
Mischance cold never take.

A knight amongst the Scotts there was,
Which saw Erle Douglas dye;
Who straung in wrath did vow revenge
Upon the Lord Percy:

Sir Hugh Montgomerie was he call'd,
Who, with a spine most bright,
Well-mounted on a gallant steed,
Ran fiercely through the fight:

And past the English archers all,
Without all dread or fear;
And through Erle Percy's body then
He thrust his hateful spere;

With such a vehement force and might
He did his body gore,
The staff ran through the other side
A large cloth-yard, and more.

So thus did both these nobles dye,
Whose courage none could staine:
An English archer then perceiv'd
The noble erle was staine;

He had a bow bent in his hand,
Made of a trusty tree;
An arrow of a cloth-yard long
Up to the head drew hee:

Against Sir Hugh Montgomerie,
So right the shaft he sett,
The grey goose-wing that was thereon,
In his harts blood was wet;

This fight did last from break of day,
Till setting of the sun;
For when they rung the evening-bell,\
The battle scarse was done.

With stout Erle Percy, there was slaine
Sir John of Egerton,*\[150\]
Sir Robert Ratcliff, and Sir John,
Sir James that bold barron:

And with Sir George and stout Sir James,
Both knights of good account,
Good Sir Ralph Ruby there was slaine,
Whose prowessse did surmount.

For Witherington needs must I wayle,
As one in doeleful dumpyes;\[205\]
For when his legs were smitten off,
He fought upon his stumpes,

And with Erle Douglas, there was slaine
Sir Hugh Montgomerie,
Sir Charles Murray, that from the feeld
One foote wold never see.

Sir Charles Murray, of Ratcliff, too,
His sisters sonne was hee;
Sir David Lamb, so well esteem'd,
Yet saved cold not hee.

And the Lord Maxwell in like case
Did with Erle Douglas dye:
Of twenty hundred Scottish spere
Scarse fifty-five did flye.

Of fifteen hundred Englishmen,
Went home but fifty three;
The rest were slaine in Chevy-Chase,
Under the greene woode tree.

Next day did many widowes come,
Their husbands to bewayle;
They waist their wounds in brinisch teares,
But all wold not prevayle.

Theyr bodys, bathed in purple gore,
They bare with them away;
They kist them dead a thousand times,
Ere they were clad in clay.

The newes was brought to Eddenborrow,
Where Scotsland's king did raigne,
That brave Erle Douglas suddenlye
Was with an arrow slaine.

O heavy newes, King James did say,
Scotland may witnesse bee,
I have not any capitaine more
Of such account as hee.

Like tydings to King Henry came,
Within as short a space,
That Percy of Northumberland
Was slaine in Chevy-Chase:

Now God be with him, said our king,
Sith it will noe better bee;
I trust I have, within my realme,
Five hundred as good as hee:

* Sc. the Currence bell, usually rung at eights o'clock; to which the moderns apparently allude, instead of the "Evesong bell," or bell for vespers of the original author, before the Reformacion. Vide supra pag. 4, v. 97.

\+ i. e. "I, as one in deep concern, must lament." The construction here has generally been misunderstood. The old MS. reads unfull dumpyes.
DEATH'S FINAL CONQUEST.

Yett shall not Scotta nor Scotland say,
But I will vengeance take:
I'll be revenged on them all,
For brave Earl Percyes sake.

This vow full well the king perform'd
After, at Humbledowne;
In one day, fifty knights were slayne,
With lords of great renowne:

And of the rest, of small account,
Did many thousands dye:
Thus endeth the hunting of Chevy-Chase,
Made by the Erle Percy.

God save our King, and bless this land
With plenty, joy, and peace;
And grant henceforth, that foule debate
'Twixt noblemen may cease.

* * Since the former impression of these volumes hath been published, a new edition of Collins's Peerage, 1779, &c. ix. vols. 8vo. which contains, in volume ii. p. 334, an historical passage, which may be thought to throw considerable light on the subject of the preceding Ballad: viz.

"In this... year, 1466, according to Hector Boethius, was fought the battle of Pepperden, not far from the Chevios Hist, between the Earl of Northumberland [Hild Earl, son of Hotspur] and Earl William Douglas, of Angus, with a small army of about four thousand men each, in which the latter had the advantage. As this seems to have been a private conflict between these two great Chief-tains of the Borders, rather than a national war, it has been thought to have given rise to the celebrated old ballad of Chevy-Chase; which, to render it more pathetic and interesting, has been heightened with tragic incidents wholly fictitious." [See Ridpath's Border Hist. 4to, p. 401.]

The surnames in the foregoing ballad are altered, either by accident or design, from the old original copy, and in common editions extremely corrupted. They are here rectified, as much as they could be. Thus,

Ver 202 Egerton.] This name is restored (instead of Ogerton, com. ed.) from the Editor's folio MS. The pieces in that MS. appear to have been collected, and many of them composed (among which might be this ballad) by an inhabitant of Cheshire: who was willing to pay a compliment here to one of his countrymen, of the eminent family De or Of Egerton (so the name was first written) ancestors of the present Duke of Bridgewater; and this he could do with the more propriety, as the Percies had formerly great interest in that county: At the fatal battle of Shrewsbury, all the flower of the Cheshire gentlemen lost their lives fighting in the cause of Hotspur.

Ver. 203. Ratcliffe.] This was a family much distinguished in Northumberland. Edw. Ratcliffe mil. was sheriff of that county in 17 of Hen. VII, and others of the same surname afterwards. (See Fuller, p. 313.) Sir George Ratcliffe, Knt, was one of the commissioners of inclosure in 1559. (See Nicholson, p. 330.) Of this family was the late Earl of Derwentwater, who was beheaded in 1715. The Editor's folio MS. however, reads here, Sir Robert Ratcliffe and Sir William.

The Harleys were an erewm family in Cumberland. (See Fuller, p. 224.) Whether this may be thought to be the same name, I do not determine.

Ver. 204. Barons.] This is apparently altered (not to say corrupted) from Hearone, in p. 4, ver. 114.

Ver. 207. Ruby.] This might be intended to celebrate one of the ancient possessors of Ruby Castle, in the county of Durham. Yet it is written Reby, in the fol. MS., and looks like a corruption of Rugby or Rokey, an eminent family in Yorkshire, See p. 4, p. 9. It will not be wondered that the Percies should be thought to bring followers out of that county, where they themselves were originally seated, and had always such extensive property and influence.

Ver. 215. Murray.] So the Scottish copy. In the com. edit. it is Carrel or Currel; and Morell in the fol. MS.

Ver. 217. Murray.] So the Scot. edit.—The common copies read Murrel. The folio MS. gives the line in the following peculiar manner,

"Sir Roger Heuer of Harclife too."

Ver. 219. Lamb.] The folio MS. has,

"Sir David Lambwell, well esteemed."

This seems evidently corrupted from Lwdale or Liddell, in the old copy, see pages 4-9.

II.

DEATH'S FINAL CONQUEST.

These fine moral stanzas were originally intended for a solemn funeral song, in a play of James Shirley's, entitled, "The contention of Ajax and Ulysses;" no date, 8vo.—Shirley flourished as a dramatic writer early in the reign of Charles I: but he outlived the Restoration. His death happened October 29, 1666, aet. 72.

This little poem was written long after many of those that follow, but is inserted here as a kind of dirge to the foregoing piece. It is said to have been a favourite song with R. Charles II.

The glories of our birth and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armour against fate:
Death lays his icy hands on kings:
Scepter and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill,
But their strong nerves at last must yield;
They tame but one another still.
Early or late
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath,
When they pale captives creep to death.
The garlands wither on your brow,
Then boast no more your mighty deeds:

Upon death's purple altar now
See where the victor victim bleeds:
All heads must come
To the cold tomb,
Only the actions of the just
Smell sweet, and blossom in the dust.

III.

THE RISING IN THE NORTH.

The subject of this ballad is the great Northern Insurrection in the 12th year of Elizabeth, 1569; which proved so fatal to Thomas Percy, the seventh Earl of Northumberland.

There had not long before been a secret negotiation entered into between some of the Scottish and English nobility, to bring about a marriage between Mary Queen of Scots, at that time a prisoner in England, and the Duke of Norfolk, a nobleman of excellent character, and firmly attached to the Protestant religion. This match was proposed to all the most considerable of the English nobility, and among the rest to the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, two noblemen very powerful in the north. As it seemed to promise a speedy and safe conclusion of the troubles in Scotland, with many advantages to the crown of England, they all consented to it, provided it should prove agreeable to Queen Elizabeth. The Earl of Leicester (Elizabeth's favourite) undertook to break the matter to her; but before he could find an opportunity, the affair had come to her ears by other hands, and she was thrown into a violent flame. The Duke of Norfolk, with several of his friends, was committed to the Tower, and summons were sent to the northern earls instantly to make their appearance at court. It is said that the Earl of Northumberland, who was a man of a mild and gentle nature, was deliberating with himself whether he should not obey the message, and rely upon the queen's candour and clemency, when he was forced into desperate measures by a sudden report at midnight, Nov. 13, that a party of his enemies were come to seize on his person*. The earl was then at his house at Topcliffe in Yorkshire. When rising hastily out of bed, he withdrew to the Earl of Westmoreland, at Brancepeth, where the country came in to them, and pressed them to take arms in their own defence. They accordingly set up their standards, declaring their intent was to restore the ancient religion, to get the succession of the crown firmly settled, and to prevent the destruction of the ancient nobility, &c. Their common banner† (on which was displayed the cross, together with the five wounds of Christ,) was borne by an ancient gentleman, Richard Norton, Esq., of Norton-conyers: who with his sons (among whom, Christopher, Marmaduke, and Thomas, are expressly named by Camden), distinguished himself on this occasion. Having entered Durham, they tore the Bible, &c., and caused mass to be said there: they then marched on to Clifford Moor near Wetherby, where they mustered their men. Their intention was to have proceeded on to York; but, altering their minds, they fell upon Barnard's castle, which Sir George Bowes held out against them for eleven days. The two earls, who spent their large estates in hospitality, and were extremely beloved on that account, were masters of little ready money, the Earl of Northumberland bringing with him only 8000 crowns, and the Earl of Westmoreland nothing at all for the subsistence of their forces, they were not able to march to London, as they had at first intended. In these circumstances, Westmoreland began so visibly to despawn, that many of his men slunk away, though Northumberland still kept up his resolution, and was master of the field till December 13, when the Earl of Sussex, accompanied with Lord Hunsden and others, having marched out of York at the head of a large body of forces, and being followed by a still larger army under the command of Ambrose Dudley, Earl of Warwick, the insurgents retreated northward towards the borders, and their dismissing their followers, made their escape into Scotland. Though this insurrection had been suppressed with so little bloodshed, the Earl of Sussex and Sir George Bowes, marshal of the army put vast numbers to death by martial law, without any regular trial. The former of these caused at Durham sixty-three constables to be hanged at once. And the latter made his boast, that, for sixty miles in length, and forty in breadth, between Newcastle, and Wetherby, there was hardly a town or village wherein he had not executed some of the inhabitants. This exceeds the cruelties practised in the west after Monmouth's rebellion: but that was not the age of tenderness and humanity.

Such is the account collected from Stow, Speed, Camden, Guthrie, Carte, and Rapin; it agrees in most particulars with the following ballad, which was apparently the production of some northern minstrel, who was well affected to the two noblemen. It is here printed from two MS. copies, one of them in the editor's folio collection. They contained considerable variations, out of which such readings were chosen as seemed most poetical and consonant to history.

Listen, lively lording all,
Lithe and listen unto me,
And I will sing of a noble earl,
The noblest earls in the north country.

* This circumstance is overlooked in the ballad. Besides this, the ballad mentions the separate banners of the two noblemen.
Earle Percy is into his garden gone,
And after him waketh his faire lady*:
I heard a bird sing in mine eare,
That I must either fight, or flee.

Now heaven forefend, my dearest lord,
That ever such harm should hap to thee:
But goe to London to the court,
And faire full truth and honestie.

Now may now may, my ladye gay,
Alas! thy counsel suits not me;
Mine enemies prevail so fast,
That at the court I may not bee.

O goe to the court yet, good my lord,
And take thy gallant men with thee:
If any dare to doe you wrong,
Then your warrant they may bee.

Now may now may, thou ladye faire,
The court is full of subtiltie;
And if I goe to the court, lady,
Never more I may thee see.

Yet goe to the court, my lord, she sayes,
And myselfe will ride wi' thee:
At court then for my dearest lord,
His faithfull borrowes I will bee.

Now may now may, my lady deare;
For lover had I lose my life,
Than leave among my cruelle foes
My love in jeopardy and strife.

But come thou hither my little foot-page,
Come thou hither unto mee,
To minister Norton thou must goe
In all the haste that ever may bee.

Commend me to that gentleman,
And beare this letter here fro mee;
And say that earnestly I praye,
He will ryde in my companie.

One while the little foot-page went,
And another while he ran;
Untill he came to his journeys end
The little foot-page never ran.

When to that gentleman he came,
Down he kneeled on his knee;
And tooke the letter betwixt his hands,
And lett the gentleman it see.

And when the letter it was redd
Affore that goodlye companye,
I wis, if you the truthe wold know,
There was many a weeping eeye.

He sayd, Come thither, Christopher Norton,
A gallant youth thou seemst to bee;
What doest thou counsell me, my sonne
Now that good erle's in jeopardy?

Father, my counsellor's fair and free;
That erle he is a noble lord,
And whatsoever to him you hight,
I wold not have you breake your word.

Gramercy, Christopher, my sonne,
Thy counsell well it liketh mee,
And if we speed and scape with life,
Well advanced shalt thou bee.

Come ye hither, mine nine good sonnes,
Gallant men I trowe you bee:
How many of you, my children deare,
Will stand by that good erle and me?

Eight of them did answer make,
Eight of them spake hastefull,
O father, till the daye we dye
We'll stand by that good erle and thee.

Gramercy now, my children deare,
You showes yourselves right bold and brave;
And whethersoe'er I live or dye,
A fathers blessing you shall have.

But what sayst thou, O Francis Norton,
That art mine eldest sonne and heire:
Somewhat lyes brooding in thy breast;
Whatever it bee, to mee declare.

Father, you are an aged man,
Your head is white, your beardes is gray;
It were a shame at these your yeares
For you to ryse in such a fray.

Now fye upon thee, coward Francis,
Thou never learntest this of mee:
When thou wert yong and tender of age,
Why did I make soe much of thee?

But, father, I will wend with you,
Unarm'd and naked will I bee;
And he that strikes against the crowne,
Ever an ill death may he dee.

Then rose that reverend gentleman,
And with him came a goodlye band
To join with the brave Erle Percy,
And all the flower o' Northumberland.

With them the noble Nevill came,
The erle of Westmorland was lée:
At Wetherbye they mustred their host,
Thirteen thousand faire to see.

Lord Westmorland his ancietn raisde,
The Dun Bull he rays'd on hye,
And three Dogs with golden collars
Were there sett out most royallye*.

* Ver. 102. Dun Bull &c.] The supporters of the Nevilles Earls of Westmorland were Two Bulls Argent, ducally col-lar'd gold, armed Or, &c. But I have not discovered the device mentioned in the ballad, among the badges, &c. given by that house. This however is certain, that, among those of the Nevilles, Lord Abergavenny, (who were of the same family,) is a den cow with a golden collar; and the Neville's of Clyte in Yorkshire (of the Westmorland branch) gave: for their crest, in 1513, a dog's (greyhound's) head erased.—So that it is not improbable but Charles Neville, the unhappy Earl of Westmorland here mentioned, might on this occasion give the above device on his banner.—After all, our old minstrel's verses here may have undergone some corruption; for, in another ballad in the same folio MS. and apparently written by the same hand, containing the sequel of this Lord Westmorland's history, his banner is thus de scribed, more conformable to his known bearings:

"Set me up my faire Dun Bull,
With Golden Hornes, hee bears all soe hye."
Erle Percy there his ancient spred, 105
The Halfe-Moone shining all soo faire *:
The Norton's ancystent had the crosse,
And the five wounds our Lord did beare.
Then Sir George Bowes he straitwaye rose,
After them some spoyle to make:
Those noble erles turn'd backe againe,
And aye they vowed that knight to take.
That baron he to his castle fied,
To Barnard castle then fled hee.
The utermost walles were eathe to win,
The earles have wonne them presentlie.
The utermost walles were lime and bricke;
But thoughse they won them soon anonne,
Leng o'er they wan the innermost walles,
For they were cut in rocke of stone.

Then newes unto leewe London came
In all the speede that ever might bee,
And word is brought to our royall queene
Of the rysing in the North country.
Her grace she turned her round about,
And like a royall queene shee swore, 125
I will ordayne them such a breakfast,
As never was in the North before.

Shee caus'd thirty thousand men berays'd,
With horse and harneis faire to see;
She caused thirty thousand men be raised,
To take the earles i' th' North country.
Wi' them the false Erle Warwick went,
Th' Erle Sussex and the Lord Hunsden;
Untill they to Yorke castle came
I wiss, they never stint ne blan.
Now spred thy ancystent, Westmorland,
Thy dun bull faime would we spye:
And thou, the Erle o' Northumberland,
Now rayse thy half moone up on hye.
But the dun bulle is fied and gone,
And the halfe moone vanished away:
The Erles, though they were brave and bold,
Against see many could not stay.
Thee, Norton, wi' thine eight good sonsne,
They doom'd to dye, alas! for ruth!
Thy reverend lockes thee could not save,
Nor them their faire and blooming youth.
Wi' them full many a gallant wight
They cruelly bereav'd of life:
And many a childe made fatherlesse,
And widowed many a tender wife.

IV.

NORTHUMBERLAND BETRAYED BY DOUGLAS.

This ballad may be considered as the sequel of the preceding. After the unfortunate Earl of Northumberland had seen himself forsaken of his followers, he endeavoured to withdraw into Scotland, but falling into the hands of the thievish borderers, was stript and otherwise ill-treated by them. At length he reached the house of Hector, of Harlaw, an Armstrong, with whom he hoped to lie concealed: for Hector Earl engaged his honour to be true to him, and was under great obligations to this unhappy nobleman. But this faithless wretch betrayed his guest for a sum of money to Murray the Regent of Scotland, who sent him to the castle of Loughleven, then belonging to William Douglas.—All the writers of that time assure us, that Hector, who was rich before, fell shortly after into poverty, and became so infamous, that to take Hector's cloak, grew into a proverb to express a man who betrays his friend. See Camden, Carleton, Holingshed, &c.

Northumberland continued in the castle of Lough-leven till the year 1572; when James Douglas Earl of Morton being elected Regent, he was given up to the Lord Hunsden at Berwick, and being carried to York suffered death. As Morton's party depended on Elizabeth for protection, an elegant historian thinks "it was scarce possible for them to refuse putting into her hands a person who had taken up arms against her. But as a sum of money was paid on that account, and shared between Morton and his kinsman Douglas, the former of whom, during his exile in England, had been much indebted to Northumberland's friendship, the abandoning this unhappy nobleman to inevitable destruction, was deemed an ungrateful and mercurial act." Robertson's Hist.

So far History coincides with this ballad, which was apparently written by some northern bard soon after the event. The interpos'd of the "Witch-Lady" (v. 53,) is probably its own invention: yet even this hath some countenance from history; for, about twenty-five years before, the Lady Jane Douglas, Lady Glamis, sister of the Earl of Angus, and nearly related to Douglas of Lough-leven, had suffered death for the pretended crime of witchcraft, who, it is presumed, is the Witch-lady alluded to in verse 133.

The following is selected (like the former) from two copies, which contained great variations; one of them in the Editor's folio MS. In the other copy some of the stanzas at the beginning of this Ballad are nearly the same with what in that MS. are made to begin another Ballad on the escape of the Earl of Westminster, who got safe into Flanders, and is feigned in the ballad to have undergone a great variety of adventures.

How long shall fortune faile me nowe,
And harrowe me with fear and dread?
How long shall I in bale abide,
In misery my life to lead?

To fall from my bliss, alas the while!
It was my sore and heavy lott:
And I must leave my native land,
And I must live a man forgot.

One gentle Armstrong I doe ken,
A Scot he is much bound to mee:
He dwelleth on the border side,
To him I'll goe right privilie.

Thus did the noble Percy 'plaine,
With a heavy heart and wel away,
When he with all his gallant men
On Bramham moor had lost the day.

But when he to the Armstrongs came,
They dealt with him all treacherously:
For they did strip that noble earle:
And ever an ill death may they dye.

False Hector to Earl Murray sent,
To shew him where his guest did hide:
Who sent him to the Lough-leven,
With William Douglas to abide.

And when he to the Douglas came,
He huched him right courteouslie.
Said, Wellcome, welcome, noble earle,
Here thou shalt safelye hide with mee.

When he had in Lough-leven been
Many a month and many a day:
To the regent * the lord wardensent,
That banishit earle for to betray.

He offered him great store of gold,
And wrote a letter fair to see:
Saying, Good my lord, grant me my boon,
And yield that banishit man to mee.

Earle Percy at the supper sate
With many a goodly gentleman:
The wylie Douglas then bespake,
And thus to flyte with him began:

What makes you be so sad, my lord,
And in your mind so sorrowfully?
To-morrow a shottinge will bee held
Among the lords of the North country.

The butts are sett, the shooting's made,
And there will be great royaltie:
And I am sworn into my bille,
Thither to bring my Lord Percy.

I'll give thee my hand, thou gentle Douglas,
And here by my true faith, quoth hee,
If thou wilt ryde to the worldes end
I will ryde in thy companye.

And then bespake a lady faire,
Mary a Douglas was her name:
You shall byde here, good English lord,
My brother is a traiterous man.

He is a traitor stout and strong,
As I tell you in privitie:
For he hath tane lervenance of the earle *
Into England nowe to 'liver thee.

Nowe nay, now nay, thou goodly lady,
The regent is a noble lord;
Ne for the gold in all England
The Douglas wold not break his word.

When the regent was a banisht man,
With me he did faire welcome find;
And whether weal or woe betide,
I still shall find him true and kind.

Betwene England and Scotland it wold breake
And friends againe they wold never bee,
If they shold 'liver a banisht erle
Was driven out of his own countrie.

Alas! alas! my lord, she says,
Nowe mickle is their traitorie;
Then lett my brother ryde his wayes,
And tell those English lords from thee.

How that you cannot with him ryde;'
Because you are in an ile of the sea ♦;
Then ere my brother come againe
To Edinbourow castle ♦ Ie carry thee.

To the Lord Hume I will thee bring,
He is well knowne a true Scots lord,
And he will lose both land and life,
Ere he with thee will break his word.

Much is my woe, Lord Percy sayd,
When I thinke on my own countrie,
When I thinke on the heavye happe
My friends have suffered there for mee.

Much is my woe, Lord Percy sayd,
And sore those wars my minde distresses;
Where many a widow lost her mate,
And many a child was fatherlesse.

And now that I a banisht man
Shold bring such evil happe with mee,
To cause my faire and noble friends
To be suspect of treacherie:

* James Douglas, Earl of Morton, elected regent of Scotland, November 24, 1572.
† Of one of the English marches. Lord Hunsden.

Of the Earl of Morton, the Regent.
♦ i.e. Lake of Leven, which hath communication with the sea.
♣ At that time in the hands of the opposite faction.
This rives my heart with double woe;
   And lever had I dye this day,
Than thinke a Douglas can be false,
   Or ever he will his guest betray.

If you'll give me no trust, my lord,
Nor unto mee no credence yield;
Yet step one moment here aside,
Ile shewe you all your foes in field.

Lady, I never loved witchcraft,
   Never dealt in privy wyle;
But evermore held the high-waye
   Of truth and honour, free from guile.

If you'll not come yourselfe, my lord,
   Yet send your chamberlaine with mee;
Let me but speak three words with him,
   And he shall come again to thee.

James Swynnard with that lady went,
   She showed him through the weme of her ring
How many English lords there were Waiting for his master and him.

And who walks yonder, my good lady,
   So royall by yonder greene;\nO yonder is the Lord Hunsden:*
   Alas! he'll doe you drie and teene.

And who both yonder, thou gay ladye,
   That walks so proudly him beside?
That is Sir William Druryt, shee sayd,
   A keene captaine hee is and tryde.

How many miles is itt, madame,
   Betwixt yond English lords and mee?
Marry it is thrice fifty miles,
   To saile to them upon the sea.

I never was on English ground,
   Ne never sawe it with mine eye,
But as my book it sheweth mee;
   And through my ring I may descrye.

My mother shine was a witch ladye,
   And of her skille she learned mee;
She wold let me see out of Lough-leven
   What they did in London citie.

But who is yond, thou ladye faire,
   That looketh with sic an austreme face?\nYonder is Sir John Foster, quoth shee,
   Alas! he'll do ye sore disgrace.

He pulled his hatt done over his browe;
   Ye wept; in his heart he was full of woe;
And he is gone to his noble lord,
   Those sorrowful tidings to show.

Now say, now say, good James Swynard,\n   I may not believe that witch ladie;
The Douglass were ever true,
   And they can ne'er prove false to mee.

I have now in Lough-leven been
   The most part of these years three,
Yet have I never had noe outrake,
   Ne no good games that I cold see.

Therefore I'll to yond shooting wend,
As to the Douglas I have hight:
   Betide me wene, betide me woe,
   He ne'er shall find my promise light.

He writh a gold ring from his finger,
And gave it to that gay ladie:
   Sayes, It was all that I cold save,
   In Harley woods where I cold bee*.

And wilt thou goe, thou noble lord,
   Then farewell truth and honestie;
And farewell heart and farewell hand;
   For never more I shall thee see.

The wind was faire, the boatmen call'd,
   All and the saylors were on borde;
Then William Douglas took to his boat,
   And with him went that noble lord.

Then he cast up a silver wand,
   Sayes, Gentle lady, farewell thee well!
The lady fell a sigh soe deep,
   And in a dead swoone down shee fell.

Now let us goe back, Douglas, he sayd,
   A sickness hath taken yond faire ladie;
If ought befall yond lady but good,
   Then blamed for ever I shall bee.

Come on, come on, my lord, he sayes;
   Come on, come on, and let her bee:
There's ladyes now in Lough-leven
   For to cheer that gay ladie.

If you'll not turne yourselfe, my lord,
Let me goe with my chamberlaine;
   We will but comfort that faire lady,
And wee will return to you again.

Come on, come on, my lord, he sayes;
   Come on, come on, and let her bee:
My sister is craftye, and wold beguile
   A thousand such as you and mee.

When they had saveld fifty myle,
   Now fifty mile upon the sea;
   Hee sent his man to ask the Douglas,
   When they shold that shooting see.

Faire words, quoth he, they make fooleis faire,
   And that by thee and thy lord is seen;
You may hap to thinke it some enough,
   Ere you that shooting reach, I ween.

Jamys his hatt pulled over his browe,
   He thought his lord then was betray'd;
And he is to Erle Percy again,
   To tell him what the Douglas sayd.

* i. e. Where I was. An ancient idiom.
† There is no navigable stream between Lough-leven and the sea: but a ballad-maker is not obliged to understand geography.

MY MIND TO ME A KINGDOM IS.

Hold up thy head, man, quoth his lord;
Nor therefore let thy courage fail,
He did it but to prove thy heart,
To see if he could make it quail.

When they had other fifty sayld,
Other fifty mile upon the sea,
Lord Percy called to Douglas himselfe,
Sayld, What wilt thou nowe doe with mee?

Looke that your brydle be wight, my lord,
And your horse goe swift as shipp att sea: 210
Looke that your spurre be bright and sharp,
That you may pricke her while she'll away.

What needeth this, Douglas? he sayth;
What needest thou to flyte with mee?

For I was counted a horseman good
Before that ever I mett with thee.

A false Hector hath my horse,
Who dealt with mee so trecherouslie:
A false Armstrong hath my spurrens,
And all the geere belongs to mee.

When they had sayled other fifty mile,
Other fifty mile upon the sea;
They landed low by Berwicke side,
A deputed 'laird' landed Lord Percy.

Then he at Yorke was doomde to dye,
It was, alas! a sorrowful sight:
Thus they betrayed that noble earle,
Who ever was a gallant wight.

V.

MY MIND TO ME A KINGDOM IS.

Thus excellent philosophical song appears to have been famous in the sixteenth century. It is quoted by Ben Jonson in his play of “Every Man out of his Humour,” first acted in 1599, act. i. sc. 1. where an impatient person says,

“i am no such pil’d cynique to believe
That beggary is the onely hapinessse,
Or, with a number of these patient fools,
To sing, ‘My minde to me a kingdome is,’
When the lune hungrie belly barks for foode.”

It is here chiefly printed from a thin quarto Music book, entitled, “Psalms, Sonets, and Songs of sadness and pietie, made into Musick of five parts; &c.” By William Byrd, one of the Gent. of the Queens Majesties honorable Chappell.—Printed by Thomas East, &c.” 4to. no date: but Ames in his Typog. has mentioned another edit. of the same book, dated 1588, which I take to have been later than this.

Some improvements, and an additional stanza (sc. the 5th.) were had from two other ancient copies; one of them in black letter in the Pepys Collection, thus inscribed, “A sweet and pleasant sonet, intituled, ‘My Minde to me a Kingdom is.’ To the tune of In Crete, &c.”

Some of the stanzas in this poem were printed by Byrd separate from the rest: they are here given in what seemed the most natural order.

My minde to me a kingdom is;
Such perfect joy therein I finde
As farre exceeds all earthly blisses,
That God or Nature hath assigne:
Though much I want, that most would have, 5
Yet still my mind forbids to crave.

Content I live, this is my stay;
I seek no more than may suffice;
I presse to beare no haughtie sway;
Look what I lack my mind supplies.

Loe! thus I triumph like a king,
Content with that my mind doth bring.

I see how plentie surfets oft,
And hastie clymers soonest fall;
I see that such as sit aloft
Misshap doth threaten most of all:
These get with toile, and keep with feare:
Such cares my mind could never beare.

No princely pompe, nor welthie store,
No force to winne the victorie,
No wylie wit to salve a sore,
No shape to winne a lovers eye;
To none of these I yeeld as thrall,
For why my mind despiseth all.

Some have too much, yet still they crave,
I little have, yet seek no more:
They are but poore, tho much they have;
And I am rich with little store:
They poor, I rich; they beg, I give;
They lacke, I lend; they pine, I live.

I laugh not at anothers losse,
I grudge not at anothers gaine;
No worldly wave my mind can tosse,
I brooke that is anothers bane;
I feare no foe, nor fawne on friend;
I lothe not life, nor dread mine end.

I joy not in no earthly blisse;
‘I weigh not Cresus’ welth a straw;
For care, I care not what it is;
I feare not fortunes fallaw law;
My mind is such as may not move
For beautie bright or force of love.

I wish but what I have at will;
I wander not to seeke for more;
I like the plaine, I clime no hill;
In greatest stormes I sitte on shore,
And laugh at them that toile in vaine
To get what must be lost again.

Ver. 224, fol. MS. reads land, and has not the following stanza.
I kisse not where I wish to kill;
I feigne not love where most I hate.
I brake no sleep to winne my will;
I wayte not at the mighties gate;
I scorne no poore, I feare no rich;
I feel no want, nor have too much.
The court, ne cart, I like, ne loath;
Extremes are counted worst of all:
The golden meane betwixt them both
Doth arest sit, and fears no fall:

This is my choyce, for why I finde,
No wealth is like a quiet minde.

My welth is health, and perfect ease;
My conscience cler my chiefe defence:
I never seeke by brybes to please,
Nor by desert to give offence:
Thus do I live, thus will I die;
Would all did so as well as I!

VI.

THE PATIENT COUNTESS.

The subject of this tale is taken from that entertaining colloquy of Erasmus, entitled "Uxor Mi-vyrapos, sive Conjogium:" which been agreeably modernized by the late Mr. Spence, in his little miscellaneous publication, entitled "Moralties, &c., by Sir Harry Beaumont," 1753, 8vo. pag. 42.

The following stanzas are extracted from an ancient poem entitled "Albion's England," written by W. Warner, a celebrated poet in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, though his name and works are now equally forgotten. The reader will find some account of him in Series the Second, book ii. song 24.
The following stanzas are printed from the author's improved edition of his work, printed in 1612, 4to; the third impression of which appeared so early as 1592, in bl. let. 4to. — The edition in 1602 is in thirteen books; and so it is reprinted in 1612, 4to; yet in 1606 was published "A Continuance of Albion's England, by the first author, W. W. Lond. 4to." this contains books xiv. xv. xvi. In Ames's Typography is preserved the memory of another publication of this writer's, entitled, "Warner's Poetry," printed in 1580, 12mo, and reprinted in 1602. There is also extant, under the name of Warner, "Syrynx, or seven fold Hist. pleasant and profitable, comical, and tragicall." 4to.
It is proper to premise that the following lines were not written by the author in Stanzas, but in long Alexandrines of fourteen syllables: which the narrowness of our page made it here necessary to subdivide.

Impatience chaungeth smoke to flame,
But jalousie is hell;
Some wives by patience have reduc'd
Ill husbands to live well:
As did the ladie of an earle,
Of whom I now shall tell.
An earle 'tis was' had wedded, lor'd;
Was lor'd, and lived long
Full true to his fayre countesse; yet
At last he did her wrong.
Once hunted he untill the chace,
Long fasting, and the heat
Did house him in a peakish graunge
Within a forest great.

Where knowne and welcom'd (as the place
And persons might afford)
Brownes bread, whig, bacon, curds and milke
Were set him on, the borde.
A cushion made of lists, a stoole
Halle backed with a hoope
Were brought him, and he sitteth down
Besides a sorry coupe.
The poore old couple wisht their bread
Were wheat, their whig were perry,
Their bacon beefe, their milke and curds
Were creame, to make him merry.
Mean while (in russet neatly clad,
With linen white as swanne,
Herselfe more white, save rosie where
The ruddy colour ranne:
Whome naked nature, not the aydes
Of arte made to excell)
The good man's daughter sturres to see
That all were feast and well;
The earle did marke her, and admire
Such beautie there to dwell.
Yet fals he to their homely fare,
And held him at a feast:
But as his hunger slaked, so
An amorous heat increas.
When this repast was past, and thanks,
And welcome too; he sayd
Unto his host and hostesse, in
The hearing of the mayd:
Yee know, quoth he, that I am lord
Of this, and many townes!
I also know that you be poore,
And I can spare you pownes.
Soo will I, so yee will consent,
That yonder lasse and I
May bargaine for her love; at least,
Doe give me leave to trye.
Who needs to know it? nay who dares
Into my doings pry?
First they dislike, yet at the length
For lucre were misled;
And then the game-some earle did wove
The damsell for his bed.
He took her in his armes, as yet
So coyish to be kist,
As mayds that know themselves belov’d,
And yieldingly resist.
In few, his offeres were so large
She lastly did consent;
With whom he lodged all that night,
And early home he went.
He tooke occasion oftentimes
In such a sort to hunt.
Whom when his lady often mist,
Contrary to his wont,
And lastly was informed of
His amorous haunt elsewhere,
It gree’d her not a little, though
She seem’d it well to beare.
And thus she reasons with herselfe,
Some fault perhaps in me;
Somewhat is done, that see he doth.
Alas! what may it be?
How may I winne him to myself?
He is a man, and men
Have imperfections; it behoves
Me pardon nature then.
To checke him were to make him check’d*
Although hee now were chaste.
A man controul’d of his wife,
To her makes lesser haste.
If duty then, or daunslie may
Prevaile to alter him;
I will be dutiful, and make
My selfe for daunslie trim.
So was she, and so lovingly
Did entertaine her lord,
As fairer, or more faultlesse none
Could be for bed or bord.
Yet still he loves his leeman, and
Did still pursuage that game,
Suspecting nothing less, than that
His lady knew the same:
Wherefore to make him know she knew,
She this devise did frame:
When long she had been wrong’d, and sought
The foresayd means in vaine,
She rideth to the simple graunge
But with a slender traine.
She lighteth, entreat, greets them well
And then did looke about her:
The guilie houshold knowing her,
Did wish themselves without her;
Yet, for she looked merily,
The lesse they did misdoubt her.

* To check is a term in falconry, applied when a hawk stops and turns away from his proper pursuit; to check also signifies to remove or chide. It is in this verse used in both senses.
Then did he question her of such
His stuffe bestowd zoe.
Forsooth, quoth she, because I did
Your love and lodging knowe:
Your love to be a proper wench,
Your lodging nothing lesse;
I held it for your health, the house
More decently to dresse.
Well wot I, notwithstanding her,
Your lordship loveth me:
And greater hope to hold you such
By quiet, then brawles, 'you see.'

VII.

DOWSABELL.

The following stanzas were written by Michael Drayton, a poet of some eminence in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth, James I, and Charles I. They are inserted in one of his pastorals, the first edition of which bears this whimsical title. "Idea. The Shepherds Garland, fashioned in nine Eglogs." Rowland's Sacrifice to the Nine Muses. London, 1593. They are inscribed with the author's name at length "To the noble and valorous gentleman Master Robert Dudley, &c." It is very remarkable that when Drayton reprinted them in the first folio edit. of his works, 1619, he had given those eclogues so thoroughly a revaisal, that there is hardly a line to be found the same as in the old edition. This poem had received the fewest corrections, and therefore is chiefly given from the ancient copy, where it is thus introduced by one of his shepherds:

Listen to mee, my lovely sheheardes joye,
And thou shalt heare, with mirth and mickle glee,
A pretie tale, which when I was a boy,
My toothles grandame oft hath tolde to me.
The author has professedly imitated the style and metre of some of the old metrical romances, particularly that of Sir Isenbras (alluded to in v. 3), as the reader may judge from the following specimen:

Lordynes, lysten, and you shal here, &c.
Ye shall well heare of a knight,
That was in warre full wyght
And doughtyde of his dede:
His name was Sir Isenbras,
Man nobler then he was
Lyved none with breme.
He was lyvel, large, and longe,
With shouulders broadde, and armes stronge,
That myghtie was to se:
He was a hardye man, and hye,
All men hym loved that hym se,
For a gentyl knight was he:
Harpers loved him in hall,
With other minstrells all,
For he gave them golde and fee, &c.

* He was born in 1563, and died in 1631, Biog. Brit.
† As also Chaucer's Rhyme of Sir Topas, v. 6.

This ancient legend was printed in black-letter, 4to, by William Copland; no date. In the Cotton Library (Calig. A. 2.) is a MS. copy of the same romance, containing the greatest variations. They are probably two different translations of some French original.

Farre in the countrey of Arden,
There won'd a knight, highst Cassemens,
As bolde as Isenbras:
Fell was he, and eger bent,
In battell and in tournament,
As was the good Sir Topas.
He had, as antique stories tell,
A daughter clepas Dowsabel,
A mayden fraere and fre:
And for she was her fathers heire,
Full well she was y-cond the leyre
Of mickle courtesie.
The silke well couthe she twise: and twine,
And make the fine march-pine,
And with the needle werke:
And she couthe helpe the priest to say
His mattins on a holy-day,
And sing a psalme in kyre.
She were a frock of frolick greene,
Might well beseeeme a mayden queene,
Which seemly was to see;
A hood to that so neat and fine,
In colour like the colombine,
Y-wrought full feastously.
Her features all as fresh above,
As is the grassse that growes by Dove;
And lyth as lasse of Kent.
Her skin as soft as Lemster wooll,
As white as snow on Peakish Hull,
Or sweene that swims in Trent.
This mayden in a morne betyme
Went forth, when May was in her prime,
To get sweete cetywall,
The honey-suckle, the harlocke,
The lilly and the lady smocke,
To deck her summer hall.
Thus, as she wandred here and there,
Y-picking of the bloomed breere,
She chanced to espie
A shepheard sitting on a bancke
Like chanteclere he crowed cranke,
And pip'd full merrillie.

He lear'd his sheepe as he him list,
When he would whistle in his fat,
To feede about him round;
Whilst he full many a carroll sung,
Untill the fields and medowes rung,
And all the woods did sound,
In favour this same shepheard swayne
Was like the bedlam Tamburlayne*
Which helde proude kings in awe:
But meke he was as a lamb mought be;
An innocent of ill as her
Whom his lewd brother slaw.

The shepheard ware a sheepe-gray cloke,
Which was of the finest loke,
That could be cut with sheere:
His mittenes were of barzens skinne,
His cockers were of cordiwin,
His hood of menivere.
His rule and lingell in a thong,
His tar-boxe on his broad belt hong,
His breech of cowyne blew:
Full crisse and curled were his lockes,
His browes as white as Albion rocks;
So like a lover true.

And pyping still he spent the day,
So merry as the popingay;
Which liked Dowsabel:
That would she ought, or would she nought,
This lad would never from her thought;
She in love-longing fell.

At length she tucked up her frocke,
White as a lilly was her smocke,
She drew the shepheard nye;
But then the shepheard pyp'd a good,
That all his sheepe forsooke their foode,
To heare his melody.

Thy sheepe, quoth she, cannot be leane,
That have a jolly shepheardes swayne,
The which can pipe so well:
Yea but, sayth he, their shepheard may,
If pyping thus he pine away
In love of Dowsabel.

Of love, fond boy, take thou no keepe,
Quoth she; looke thou unto thy sheepe,
Lest they should hap to stray,
Quoth he, So I had done full well,
Had I not seen fiayre Dowsabell
Come forth to gather maye.

With that she gan to vaile her head,
Her cheeks were like the roses red,
But not a word she sayd:
With that the shepheard gan to frown,
He threw his pretie pypes adowne,
And on the ground him layd.

Sayth she, I may not stay till night,
And leave my summer-hall undight,
And all for long of thee,
My conte, sayth he, nor yet my foudle
Shall neither sheepe nor shepheard hould,
Except thou favour mee.

Sayth she, Yet lever were I dead,
Then I should lose my mayden-head,
And all for love of men.
Sayth he, Yet are you too unkind,
If in your heart you cannot finde
To love us now and then.

And I to thee will be as kinde
As Colin was to Rosalinde,
Of curtesie the flower.
Then will I be as true, quoth she,
As ever mayden yet might be
Upto her paramour.

With that she bent her snow-white knee,
Downe by the shepheard kneeld she,
And him she sweetely kist:
With that the shepheard whoop'd for joy,
Quoth he, Ther's never shepheardes boy
That ever was so blist.
IX.

ULYSSES AND THE SYREN

—affords a pretty poetical contest between Pleasure and Honour. It is found at the end of "Hymen's Triumph: a pastoral tragicomedia," written by Daniel, and printed among his works, 4to, 1623. — Daniel, who was a contemporary of Drayton's, and is said to have been poet laureate to Queen Elizabeth, was born in 1562, and died in 1619. Anne Countess of Dorset, Pembroke, and Montgomery (to whom Daniel had been Tutor), has inserted a small portrait of him in a full-length picture of herself, preserved at Appleby Castle, in Cumberland.

This little poem is the rather selected for a specimen of Daniel's poetical powers, as it is omitted in the later edition of his works, 2 vols. 12mo. 1718.

SYREN.

COME, worthy Greeke, Ulysses come,
Possesse these shores with me,
The windes and seas are troublesome,
And here we may be free.

Here may we sit and view their toyle,
That travaile in the depe,
Enjoy the day in mirth the while,
And spend the night in sleepe.

ULYSSES.

Faire nymph, if fame or honour were
To be attain'd with ease,
Then would I come and rest with thee,
And leave such toiles as these:
But here it dwells, and here must I
With danger seek it forth;
To spend the time luxuriouly
Becomes not men of worth.

SYREN.

ULYSSES, O be not deceit'd
With that unreall name:
This honour is a thing conceiv'd,
And rests on others' fame.
Begotten only to molest
Our peace, and to beguile
(The best thing of our life) our rest,
And give us up to toyle!

ULYSSES.

Delicious nymph, suppose there were
Nor honor, nor report,
Yet maunlinesse would scorne to weare
The time in idle sport:

For toyle doth give a better touch
To make us feele our joy;
And ease findes tediousnes, as much
As labour yeelds annoy.

SYREN.

Then pleasure likewise seemes the shore,
Whereto tendes all your toyle;
Which you forego to make it more,
And perish of the while.
Who may disport them diversely,
Find never tedious day;
And ease may have variety,
As well as action may.

ULYSSES.

But natures of the noblest frame
These toyles and dangers please;
And they take comfort in the same,
As much as you in ease:
And with the thought of actions past
Are recreatid still:
When pleasure leaves a touch at last
To shew that it was ill.

SYREN.

That doth opinion only cause,
That's out of custom bred;
Which makes us many other laws
Than ever nature did.
No widdowes waile for our delights,
Our sports are without blood;
The world we see by warlike wights
Receiveth more hurt then good.

ULYSSES.

But yet the state of things require
These motions of unrest,
And these great spirits of high desire
Seem borne to turne them best;
To pururge the mischiefes, that increase
And all good order mar:
For oft we see a wicked peace
To be well chang'd for war.

SYREN.

Well, well, Ulysses, then I see
I shall not have thee here;
And therefore I will come to thee,
And take my fortune there.
I must be wonne that cannot win,
Yet lost were I not wonne:
For beauty hath created bin
T' undo or be undone.

X.

CUPID'S PASTIME.

Thus beautiful poem, which possesse a classical elegance hardly to be expected in the age of James L, is printed from the 4th edition of Davison's

Poems, &c. 1621. It is also found in a later miscellany, entitled, "Le Prince d'Amour," 1660, 8vo. Francis Davison, editor of the poems above referred to, was son of that unfortunate secretary of state, who suffered so much from the affair of Mary Queen of Scots. These poems, he tells us in his preface, were written by himself, by his brother [Walter],
who was a soldier in the wars of the Low Countries, and by some dear friends "anonymo." Among them are found some pieces by Sir J. Davis, the Countess of Pembroke, Sir Philip Sidney, Spenser, and other wits of those times.
In the fourth vol. of Dryden's Miscellanies, this poem is attributed to Sydney Godolphin, Esq.; but erroneously, being probably written before he was born. One edit. of Davison's book was published in 1608. Godolphin was born in 1610, and died in

Ir chanc'd of late a shepherd swain,
That went to seek his straying sheep,
Within a thicket on a plain
Espied a dainty nymph asleep.

Her golden hair o'erspread her face;
Her careless arms abroad were cast;
Her quiver had her pillows place;
Her breast lay bare to every blast.

The shepherd stood and gaz'd his fill;
Nought durst he do; nought durst he say;
Whilst chance, or else perhaps his will,
Did guide the god of love that way.

The crafty boy that sees her sleep,
Whom if she wak'd he durst not see;
Behind her closely seeks to creep;
Before her nap should end bee.

There come, he steals her shafts away,
And puts his own into their place;
Nor dares he any longer stay,
But, ere she wakes, hies thencepace.

Scarce was he gone, but she awakes,
And spies the shepherd standing by:
Her bended bow in haste she takes,
And at the simple swain lets flye.

Forth flew the shaft, and pierc'd his heart,
That to the ground he fell with pain:
Yet up again forthwith he start,
And to the nymph he ran amain.

Amazed to see so strange a sight,
She shot, and shot, but all in vain;
The more his wounds, the more his might,
Love yielded strength amidst his pain.

Her angry eyes were great with tears,
She blemishes her hand, she blemishes her skill;
The bluntness of her shafts she fears,
And try them on herself she will.

Take heed, sweet nymph, trye not thy shaft,
Each little touch will pierce thy heart:
Alas! thou know'st not Cupids craft;
Revenge is joy; the end is smart.

Yet try she will, and pierce some bare;
Her hands were glov'd but next to hand
Was that fair breast, that breast so rare,
That made the shepherd senseless stand.

That breast she pierc'd; and through that breast
Love found an entry to her heart;
At feeling of this new-come guest,
Lord! how this gentle nymph did start?

She runs not now; she shoots no more;
Away she throws both shaft and bow:
She seeks for what she shum'd before,
She thinks the shepherds haste too slow.

Though mountains meet not, lovers may:
What other lovers do, did they:
The god of love sate on a tree,
And taught that pleasant sight to see.

XI.

THE CHARACTER OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This little moral poem was writ by Sir Henry
Wotton, who died Provost of Eaton in 1639, Æt.
72. It is printed from a little collection of his pieces, entitled, "Reliquiae Wottonianæ;"
1631, 12mo.; compared with one or two other copies.

How happy is he born or taught,
That serveth not others will;
Whose armour is his honest thought,
And simple truth his highest skill:

Whose passions not his masters are,
Whose soul is still prepar'd for death;
Not ty'd unto the world with care
Of princes ear, or vulgar breath:

Who hath his life from. rumours freed;
Whose conscience is his strong retreat:
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruine make oppressors great:

Who envies none, whom chance doth raise;
Or vice: Who never understood
How deepest wounds are given with praise;
Nor rules of state, but rules of good:

Who God doth late and early pray
More of his grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmless day
With a well-chosen book or friend,

This man is freed from servile bands
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall;
Lord of himself, though not of lands;
And having nothing, yet hath all.
XII.

GILDEROY

—was a famous robber, who lived about the middle of the last century, if we may credit the histories and story-books of highwaymen, which relate many improbable feats of him, as his robbing Cardinal Richlgen, Oliver Cromwell, &c. But these stories have probably no other authority, than the records of Grub-street: At least the "Gilderoy," who is the hero of Scottish Songsters, seems to have lived in an earlier age; for, in Thomson's Orpheus Caledonius, vol. ii. 1733, 8vo, is a copy of this ballad, which, though corrupt and interpolated, contains some lines that appear to be of genuine antiquity: in these he is represented as contemporary with Mary Queen of Scots: ex. gr.

"The Queen of Scots possessed nought,
That my love let me want:
Forcow and ew to me he brought,
And ein when they were scant."

These lines perhaps might safely have been inserted among the following stanzas, which are given from a written copy, that appears to have received some modern corrections. Indeed the common popular ballad contained some indecent luxuriences that required the pruning-hook.

GILDEROY was a bonnie boy,
Had roses tull his shoonie,
His stockings were of silken soy,
Wi' garteries hanging dounie:
It was, I weene, a comelie sight,
To see sae trim a boy;
He was my joy and hearts delight,
My handsome Gilderoy.

Oh! sike twa charming een he had,
A breath as sweet as rose,
He never wore a Highland plaid,
But costly silken clothes;
He gain'd the luve of ladies gay,
Nane eir tull him was coy:
Ah! wae is mee! I mourn the day
For my dear Gilderoy.

My Gilderoy and I were born,
Baith in one town together,
We scant were seven years befor,
We gan to luve each other;
Our ladys and our mammys thay,
Were fill'd wi' mickle joy,
To think upon the bridal day,
Twixt me and Gilderoy.

For Gilderoy that luve of mine,
Gude faith, I freely bought
A wedding sark of holland fine,
Wi' silken flowers wrought:
And he gied me a wedding ring,
Which I receiv'd wi' joy,
Nae lad nor lassie eir could sing,
Like me and Gilderoy.

Wi' mickle joy we spent our prime,
Till we were both sixteen,
And aft we past the langsome time,
Among the leaves sae green;
At on the banks we'd sit us thair,
And sweetly kiss and toy,
Wi' garlands gay wad deck my hair
My handsome Gilderoy.

Oh! that he still had been content,
Wi' me to lead his life;
But, ah! his manfu' heart was bent,
To stir in feates of strife:
And he in many a venturous deed,
His courage bauld wad try;
And now this gars mine heart to bleed,
For my dear Gilderoy.

And when of me his leave he tuik,
The tears they wat mine ee,
I gve tull him a parting luik,
"My benison gang wi' thee;"
God speed thee weel, mine ain dear heart
For gane is all my joy;
My heart is rent sith we maun part,
My handsome Gilderoy."

My Gilderoy baith far and near,
Was fear'd in every town,
And bauldly bare away the gear,
Of many a lawlaid loun:
Nane eir durst meet him man to man,
He was sae brave a boy;
At length wi' numbers he was tane,
My winsome Gilderoy.

Wae worth the loun that made the laws,
To hang a man for gear,
To 'reave of live for ox or ass,
For sheep, or horse, or mare:
Had not their laws been made sae strick,
I neir had lost my joy,
Wi' sorrow neir had wat my cheek,
For my dear Gilderoy.

Giff Gilderoy had done amisse,
Herought hae banisht been;
Ah! what sair cruelty is this,
To hang sike handsome men:
To hang the flower o' Scottish land,
Sae sweet and fair a boy;
Nae lady had saw white a hand,
As thee my Gilderoy.

Of Gilderoy sae fraud they were,
They bound him mickle strong,
Tull Edinburrow they led him thair,
And on a gallows hung:
They hung him high aboon the rest,
He was sae trim a boy;
Thair dyed the youth whom I lued best,
My handsome Gilderoy.
Thus having yielded up his breath,
I bare his corpse away,
W't tears, that trickled for his death,
I washt his comelye clay;
And siker in a grave sae deep,
I laid the dear-lued boy,
And now for evir maun I weep,
My winsome Gilderoy.

XIII.
WINIFREDA

This beautiful address to conjugal love, a subject too much neglected by the libertine muse, was, I believe, first printed in a volume of Miscellaneous
Poems, by several hands, published by D. [David]
Lewis, 1726, Bvo.
It is there said, how truly I know not, to be a translation "from the ancient British language."

Away; let nought to love displeasing
My Winifreda, move your care;
Let nought delay the heavenly blessing,
Nor squeamish pride, nor gloomy fear.

What tho' no grants of royal donors
With pompous titles grace our blood;
We'll shine in more substantial honors,
And to be noble we'll be good.

Our name, while virtue thus we tender,
Will sweetly sound where-e'er 'tis spoke:
And all the great ones, they shall wonder
How they respect such little folk.

What though from fortune's lavish bounty
No mighty treasures we possess;
We'll find within our pittance plenty,
And be content without excess.

Still shall each returning season
Sufficient for our wishes give;
For we will live a life of reason,
And that's the only life to live.

Through youth and age in love excelling,
We'll hand in hand together tread;
Sweet-smiling peace shall crown our dwelling,
And babes, sweet-smiling babes, our bed.

How should I love the pretty creatures,
While round my knees they fondly clung;
To see them look their mothers features,
To hear them lisp their mothers tongue.

And when with envy time transported,
Shall think to rob us of our joys,
You'll in your girls again be courted,
And I'll go a wooing in my boys.

XIV.
THE WITCH OF WOKEY

—was published in a small collection of poems, entitled, "Euthenia, or the Power of Harmony; &c."
1756, written, in 1738, by the ingenious Dr. Harrington, of Bath, who never allowed them to be published, and withheld his name till it could no longer be concealed. The following copy was furnished by the late Mr. Shenstone, with some variations and corrections of his own, which he had taken the liberty to propose, and for which the Author's indulgence was intreated. In this edition it was intended to reprint the Author's own original copy; but, as that may be seen correctly given in Perch's Collection,
vol. 1. 1783, p. 161, it was thought the reader of taste would wish to have the variations preserved; they are therefore still retained here, which it is hoped the worthy author will excuse with his wonted liberality.

Wokey-hole is a noted cavern in Somersetshire, which has given birth to as many wild fanciful stories as the Sybil's Cave, in Italy. Through a very narrow entrance, it opens into a very large vault, the roof whereof, either on account of its height, or the thickness of the gloop, cannot be discovered by the light of torches. It goes winding a great way under ground, is crost by a stream of very cold water, and is all horrid with broken pieces of rock; many of these are evident petrifactions: which, on account of their singular forms, have given rise to the fables alluded to in this poem.

In anciiente days tradition showes
A base and wicked elfe arose,
The Witch of Wokey bight:
Oft have I heard the fearfull tale
From Sue, and Roger of the vale,
On some long winter's night.

Deep in the dreary dismall cell,
Which seem'd and was yeiled hell,
This blear-eyed bag did hide:
Nine wicked elves, as legends sayne,
She chose to form her guardian trayne,
And kennel near her side.

Here screeching owls oft made their nest,
While wolves its craggly sides possett,
Night-howling thro' the rock:
No wholesome herb could here be found;
She blasted every plant around,
And blister'd every flock.
Her haggard face was foul to see;
Her mouth unmeet a mouth to see;
Her eye on deadly leer,
She sought devis'd, but neighbour's ill;
She wreak'd on all her wayward will,
And marr'd all goodly cheer.

All in her prime, have poets sung,
No gaudy youth, gallant and young,
'Ere bless her longing armes;
And hence arose her spight to vex,
And blast the youth of either sex,
By dint of hellish charms.

From Glaston came a lerned wight,
Full bent to marr her fell despight,
And well he did, I ween:
Sich mischief never had been known,
And, since his mickle lerninge shown,
Sich mischief ne'er has been.

He chaunted o'er his godlie books,
He crost the water, blest the brooke,
Then—pater noster done,—
The ghastly lag he sprinkled o'er:
When lo! where stood a lag before,
Now stood a ghastly stone.

Full well 'tis known adown the dale,
Tho' passing strange indeed the tale,
And doubtfull may appear,
I'm bold to say, there's never a one,
That has not seen the witch in stone,
With all her household gear.

But tho' this lernede clerke did well;
With grievde heart, alas! I tell,
She left this curse behind:
That Wokey-nymphs forsaken quite,
Tho' sense and beauty both unite,
Should find no leman kind.

For lo! even, as the fiend did say,
The sex have found it to this day,
That men are wondrous scant:
Here's beauty, wit, and sense combin'd,
With all that's good and virtuous join'd,
Yet hardly one gallant.

Shall then sich maids unpitied moane?
They might as well, like her, be stone,
As thus forsaken dwell.
Since Glaston now can boast no clerks;
Come down from Oxenford, ye sparks,
And, oh! revoke the spell.

Yet stay—nor thus despond, ye fair:
Virtue's the gods' peculiar care:
I hear the gracious voice:
Your sex shall soon be blest agen,
We only wait to find sich men,
As best deserve your choice.

... the late ingenious travellers, and the manner in which they were struck at the first sight of those magnificent ruins by break of day.*

The north-wes. wind did shortly blow,
The ship was safely moor'd;
Young Bryan thought the boat's-crew slow,
And so leapt over-board.

Pereene, the pride of Indian dames,
His heart long held in thrill;
And whose his impatience blames,
I wot, ne'er lov'd at all.

A long long year, one month and day,
He dwelt on English land,
Nor onco in thought or deed would stray,
Tho' ladies sought his hand.

For Bryan he was tall and strong,
Right blythesome roll'd his e'en,
Sweet was his voice whene'er he sung,
He scent had twenty seen.

But who the countless charms can draw,
That grac'd his mistress true;
Such charms the old world seldom saw,
Nor oft I ween the new.

* Author of a poem on the "Culture of the Sugar-Cane," &c. published by Means. Wood and Dawkins.

* So in page 233, it should be, 'Turn'd her magic eye.
Her raven hair plays round her neck,
Like tendrils of the vine;
Her cheeks red dewy rose buds deck,
Her eyes like diamonds shine.

Soon as his well-known ship she spied,
She cast her weeds away,
And to the palmy shore she bier,
All in her best array.

In sea-green silk so neatly clad
She wore impatient stood;
The crew with wonder saw the lad
Repell the foaming flood.

Her hands a handkerchief display'd,
Which he at parting gave;
Well pleas'd the token he survey'd,
And manlier beat the wave.

Her fair companions one and all,
Rejoicing crowd the strand;

For now her lover swam in call,
And almost touch'd the land.

Then through the white surf did she haste,
To clasp her lovely swim;
When, ah! a shark bit through his waste:
His heart's blood dy'd the main!

He shriek'd! his half sprang from the wave,
Streaming with purple gore,
And soon it found a living grave,
And ah! was seen no more.

Now haste, now haste, ye maids, I pray,
Fetch water from the spring:
She falls, she swoons, she dies away,
And soon her knell they ring.

Now each May morning round her tomb,
Ye fair, fresh flow'rets strew,
So may your lovers scape his doom,
Her hapless fate scape you.

XVI.

GENTLE RIVER, GENTLE RIVER.
TRANSLATED FROM THE SPANISH.

Although the English are remarkable for the number and variety of their ancient ballads, and retain, perhaps, a greater fondness for these old simple rhapsodies of their ancestors than most other nations, they are not the only people who have distinguished themselves by compositions of this kind. The Spaniards have great multitudes of them, many of which are of the highest merit. They call them in their language Romances, and have collected them into volumes under the titles of El Romanero, El Cancionero, &c. Most of them relate to their conflicts with the Moors, and display a spirit of gallantry peculiar to that romantic people. But, of all the Spanish ballads, none exceed in poetical merit those inserted in a little Spanish History of the Civil Wars of Granada, describing the dissensions which raged in that last seat of Moorish empire before it was conquered in the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, in 1491. In this history (or perhaps romance) a great number of heroic songs are inserted, and appealed to as authentic vouchers for the truth of facts. In reality, the prose narrative seems to be drawn up for no other end, but to introduce and illustrate those beautiful pieces.

The Spanish editor pretends—how truly I know—not—that they are translations from the Arabic or Morisco language. Indeed, from the plain unadorned nature of the verse, and the native simplicity of the language and sentiment, which runs through these poems, one would judge them to have been composed soon after the conquest of Granada above mentioned; as the prose narrative in which they are inserted was published about a century after. It should seem, at least, that they were written before the Castilians had formed themselves so generally, as they have done since, on the model of the Tuscan poets, or had imported from Italy that fondness for conceit and refinement, which has for near two centuries past so much infected the Spanish poetry, and rendered it so frequently affected and obscure.

As a specimen of the ancient Spanish manner, which very much resembles that of our old English bards and minstrels, the reader is desired candidly to accept the two following poems. They are given from a small collection of pieces of this kind, which the Editor some years ago translated for his amusement, when he was studying the Spanish language. As the first is a pretty close translation, to gratify the curious it is accompanied with the original. The metre is the same in all these old Spanish ballads: it is of the most simple construction, and is still used by the common people in their extemproaneous songs, as we learn from Baretti's Travels. It runs in short stanzas of four lines, of which the second and fourth alone correspond in their terminations; and in these it is only required that the vowels should be alike; the consonants may be altogether different, as

\[
\text{pone, caus, meten, arcos, noble, cañas, muere, gamma}.
\]

Yet has this kind of verse a sort of simple harmonious flow, which atones for the imperfect nature of the rhyme, and renders it not unpleasing to the ear. The same flow of numbers has been studied in the following versions. The first of them is given from two different originals, both of which are printed in the Hist. de las Civiles Guerras de Granada, Madrid 1694. One of them hath the rhymes ending in a, the other in a. It is the former of those that is here reprinted. They both of them begin with the same line:

\[
\text{Rio verde, rio verde *},
\]

which could not be translated faithfully:

\[
\text{Vertant river, vertant river,}
\]

would have given an affected stiffness to the verse; the great merit of which is easy simplicity; and therefore a more simple epithet was adopted, though less poetical or expressive.

* Literally, Green river, green river. Rio Verde is said to be the name of a river in Spain; which ought to have been attended to by the translator had he known it.
"Río verde, río verde,
Quanto cuerpo en ti se baño
De Christianos y de Moros
Muertos por la dura espada!

"Y tus ondas cristalinas
De roxa sangre se esmaltan:
Entre Moros y Christianos
Muy gran batalla se traza.

"Murieron Duques y Condes,
Grandes señores de salva:
Murio gente de valía,
De la nobleza de España.

"En ti murió don Alonso,
Que de Aguilar se llamaba;
El valeroso Urdiales,
Con don Alonso acababa.

"Por un ladera arriba
El buen Sayavedra marcha;
Naturèl es de Sevilla,
De la gente mas granada.

"Tras el iba un Renegado,
Desta manera le habla;
Date, date, Sayavedra,
No hayas de la batalla.

"Yo te conozco muy bien,
Gran tiempo estuve en tu casa;
Y en la Plaça de Sevilla
Bien te vide jugar cañas.

"Conozco a tu padre y madre,
Y a tu muger doña Clara;
Siete años fui tu cautivo,
Malamente me tratabas.

"Y ora lo seras mio,
Si Mahoma me ayudara;
Y también te trate,
Como a mi me tratabas.

"Sayavedra que lo oyer,
Al Moro bolvio la cara;
Tirele el Moro una flecha,
Pero nunca le acertaba.

"Hiriolo Sayavedra
De una herida muy mala :
Muerto cayo el Renegado
Sin poder hablar palabra.

"Sayavedra fue cercado
De mucha Mora canalla,
Y al cabo cayo allí muerto
De una muy mala lanceada.

"Don Alonso en este tiempo
Bravamente peleava,
Y el cavalo le avian muerto,
Y le tiene por muralla."

"Mas cargaron tantos Moros
Que mal le bieren y tratan :
De la sangre, que perdin,
Don Alonso se desmaya.

Gentle river, gentle river,
Lo, thy streams are stain'd with gore,
Many a brave and noble captain
Floats along thy willow'd shore.

All beside thy limpid waters,
All beside thy sands so bright,
Moorish chiefs and Christian warriors
Join'd in fierce and mortal fight.

Lords, and dukes, and noble princes
On thy fatal banks were slain:
Fatal banks that gave to slaughter
All the pride and flower of Spain.

There the hero, brave Alonzo
Full of wounds and glory died:
There the fearless Urdiales
Fell a victim by his side.

Lo! where yonder Don Saavedra
Thro' their squadrons slow retires;
Proud Seville, his native city,
Proud Seville his worth admires.

Close behind a renegade
Loudly shouts with taunting cry;
Yield thee, yield thee, Don Saavedra,
Dost thou from the battle fly?

Well I know thee, haughty Christian,
Long I liv'd beneath thy roof;
Oh I've in the lists of glory
Seen thee win the prize of proof.

Well I know thy aged parents
Well thy blooming bride I know;
Seven years I was thy captive,
Seven years of pain and woe.

May our prophet grant my wishes,
Haughty chief, thou shalt be mine;
Thou shalt drink that cup of sorrow,
Which I drank when I was thine.

Like a lion turns the warrior,
Back he sends an angry glare:
Whizzing came the Moorish javelin,
Vainly whizzing thro' the air.

Back the hero full of fury
Sent a deep and mortal wound:
Instant sunk the Renegado,
Mute and lifeless on the ground.

With a thousand Moors surrounded,
Brave Saavedra stands at bay:
Weeped out but never daunted,
Cold at length the warrior lay.

Near him fighting great Alonzo
Stout resists the Paynim bands:
From his slaughter'd steed dismounted
Firm intrench'd behind him stands.

Furious press the hostile squadron,
Furious he repels their rage:
Loss of blood at length enfeebles
Who can war with thousands wage!
“Al fin, al fin cayó muerto
Al pie de un peñas alto,— —— Muerto queda don Alonso, Eterna fama genara.”

Where you rock the plain o’ershadows,
Close beneath its foot retir’d,
Painting sunk the bleeding hero,
And without a groan expir’d.

* In the Spanish original of the foregoing ballad, follow a few more stanzas, but being of inferior merit were not translated.

“Renegado” properly signifies an Apostate; but it is sometimes used to express an Infidel in general; as it seems to do above in ver. 21, &c.
The image of the “Lion” &c. in ver. 37, is taken from the other Spanish copy, the rhymes of which end in “is,” viz.

“Sayavedra, que lo oyera,
Como un león reboblía.”

XVII.

ALCANZOR AND ZAYDA,
A MOORISH TALE,
IMITATED FROM THE SPANISH.

The foregoing version was rendered as literal as the nature of the two languages would admit. In the following a wider compass hath been taken. The Spanish poem that was chiefly had in view, is preserved in the same history of the civil wars of Granada, f. 22, and begins with these lines:

“Por la calle de su dama
Passeando se anda, &c.”

Softly blow the evening breezes,
Softly fall the dews of night;
Yonder walks the Moor Alcanzor,
Shunning every glare of light.

In your palace lives fair Zaida,
Whom he loves with flame so pure:
Loveliest she of Moorish ladies;
He a young and noble Moor.

Waiting for the appointed minute,
Oft he paces to and fro;
Stopping now, now moving forwards,
Sometimes quick, and sometimes slow.

Hope and fear alternate seize him,
Oft he sighs with heart-felt care,—

See, fond youth, to yonder window
Softly steps the timorous fair.

Lovely seems the moon’s fair lustre
To the lost benighted swain,
When all silvery bright she rises,
Gilding mountain, grove, and plain.

Lovely seems the sun’s full glory
To the fainting seaman’s eyes,
When some horrid storm dispersing
O’er the wave his radiance flies.

But a thousand times more lovely
To her longing lover’s sight
Steals half seen the beauteous maiden
Thro’ the glimmerings of the night.

Tip-toe stands the anxious lover,
Whispering forth a gentle sigh.
Alla* keep thee, lovely lady;
Tell me, am I doomed to die?

Is it true the dreadful story,
Which thy damsel tells my page,
That seduce’d by sordid riches
Thou wilt sell thy bloom to age?

An old lord from Antiquera
Thy stern father brings along;
But canst thou, inconstant Zaida,
Thus consent my love to wrong?

If ’tis true now plainly tell me,
Nor thus trifle with my woes;
Hide not then from me the secret,
Which the world so clearly knows.

Deeply sigh’d the conscious maiden,
While the pearly tears descend:
Ah! my lord, too true the story;
Here our tender loves must end.

Our fond friendship is discover’d,
Well are known our mutual vows:
All my friends are full of fury;
Storms of passion shake the house.

Threats, reproaches, fears surround me;
My stern father breaks my heart:
Alla knows how dear it costs me,
Generous youth, from thee to part.

Ancient wounds of hostile fury
Long have rent our house and thine;
Why then did thy shining merit
Win this tender heart of mine?

Well thou know’st how dear I lov’d thee
Spite of all their hateful pride,
Tho’ I fear’d my haughty father
Ne’er would let me be thy bride.

* Alla is the Mahometan name of God.
Well thou know'st what cruel chidings
Oft I've from my mother borne;
What I've suffer'd here to meet thee
Still at eve and early morn.

I no longer may resist them;
All, to force my hand combine;
And to-morrow to thy rival
This weak frame I must resign.

Yet think not thy faithful Zaida
Can survive so great a wrong;
Well my breaking heart assures me
That my woes will not be long.

Farewell then, my dear Alcanzor!
Farewell too my life with thee!
Take this scar'f a parting token;
When thou wear'st it think on me.

Soon, lov'd youth, some worthier maiden
Shall reward thy generous truth;
Sometimes tell her how thy Zaida
Died for thee in prime of youth.

---To him all amaz'd, confounded,
Thus she did her woes impart:
Deep he sigh'd, then cry'd,—O Zaida!
Do not, do not break my heart.

Canst thou think I thus will lose thee?
Canst thou hold my love so small?
No! a thousand times I'll perish!—
My curst rival too shall fall.

Canst thou, wilt thou yield thus to them?
O break forth, and fly to me!
This fond heart shall bleed to save thee,
These fond arms shall shelter thee.

'Tis in vain, in vain, Alcanzor,
Spies surround me, bars secure:
Scare I steal this last dear moment,
While my damsel keeps the door.

Hark, I hear my father storming!
Hark, I hear my mother chide!
I must go: farewell for ever!
Gracious Alla be thy guide!

THE END OF THE THIRD BOOK.

---

SERIES THE SECOND.

BOOK I.

Though some make slight of Libels, yet you may see by them how the wind sits: As, take a straw and throw it up into the air, you may see by that which way the wind is, which you shall not do by casting up a stone. More solid things do not show the complexion of the times so well as Ballads and Libels.

Selden's Table-talk.

---

I.

RICHARD OF ALMAIGNE.

"A ballad made by one of the adherents to Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, soon after the battle of Lewes, which was fought May 14, 1264,"—affords a curious specimen of ancient satire, and shows that the liberty, assumed by the good people of this realm, of abusing their kings and princes at pleasure, is a privilege of very long standing.

To render this antique libel intelligible, the reader is to understand that just before the battle of Lewes, which proved so fatal to the interests of Henry III. the barons had offered his brother Richard King of the Romans 30,000L. to procure a peace upon such terms as would have divested Henry of all his regal power, and therefore the treaty proved abortive. The consequences of that battle are well known: the king, prince Edward his son, his brother Richard, and many of his friends, fell into the hands of their enemies; while two great barons of the king's party, John Earl of Warren, and Hugh Bigot the king's Justiciary, had been glad to escape into France.

In the 1st stanza the aforesaid sum of thirty thousand pounds is alluded to; but, with the usual misrepresentation of party malevolence, is asserted to have been the exhorbitant demand of the king's brother.

With regard to the 2d stanza the reader is to note that Richard, along with the earldom of Cornwall, had the honours of Wallingford and Eyre confirmed to him on his marriage with Sanchia, daughter of the Count of Provence, in 1243—Windsor Castle was the chief fortress belonging to the king, and had been garrisoned by foreigners: a circumstance which furnishes out the burthen of each stanza.

The 3d stanza alludes to a remarkable circumstance which happened on the day of the battle of Lewes. After the battle was lost, Richard King of the Romans took refuge in a windmill, which he barricaded, and maintained for some time against the barons, but in the evening was obliged to surrender. See a very full account of this in the Chronicle of Maitrós. Oxon. 1684, p. 299.

The 4th stanza is of obvious interpretation: Richard, who had been elected King of the Romans in 1256, and had afterwards gone over to take possession of his dignity, was in the year 1259 about to return into England, when the barons raised a popular clamour that he was bringing with him foreigners to over-run the kingdom: upon which he was forced to dismiss almost all his followers, otherwise the barons would have opposed his landing.

In the 5th stanza the writer regrets the escape of the Earl of Warren; and in the 6th and 7th stanzas insinuates, that, if he and Sir Hugh Bigot once fell into the hands of their adversaries, they should never more return home; a circumstance which fixes the date of this ballad; for, in the year 1263, both these noblemen landed in South Wales, and the royal party soon after gained the ascendant. See Holinshed, Rapin, &c.

The following is copied from a very ancient MS, in the British Museum. [Harl. MSS. 2233. a. 23.] This MS. is judged, from the peculiarities of the writing, to be not later than the time of Richard II.; th being every where expressed by the character p; the y is pointed after the Saxon manner, and the i hath an oblique stroke over it.

SITTETH alle stille, an herkethn to me ;
The Kyng of Alenaigne, bi mi leaute,
Thritti thoussent pount askede he
For to make the pees in the countre,
Ant so he dude more,
Richard, thah thou be ever trichard,
Tricthen shalt thou never more.

Richard of Alenaigne, whil that he wes kying,
He spende al is tresour onon swyyvyng,
Haveth he nout of Walingford oferlyng,
Let him habbe, ase he brewe, bale to dryng,
Mangor Wyndesore.
Richard, thah thou be ever, &c.

The kyng of Alenaigne wende do ful wel
He saisede the mulne for a castel,
With hare sharpe swerdes he grounde the stel,
He wende that the dayles wer mongol
To helpe Wyndesore.
Richard, thah thou be ever, &c.

The kyng of Alenaigne gederede ys host,
Makede him a castel of a mulne post,
Wende with is prude, ant is muchele bost,
Brohte from Alenamyn monty sori gost
To store Wyndesore.
Richard, thah thou be ever, &c.

By God, that is aboven ous, he dude muche synne,
That lette passen over see the Eryl of Warynne :
He hath robbed Engelond, the morets, ant th femne,
The gold, ant the selver, and y-horen henne,
For love of Wyndesore.
Richard, thah thou be ever, &c.

Sire Simond de Mountfort hath suore bi ys chyn,
Hevede he nou here the Eryl of Waryn,
Shuld he never more come to is yn,
Ne with sheld, ne with spere, ne with other gyn,
To help of Wyndesore.
Richard, thah thou be ever, &c.

Sire Simond de Mountfort hath suore bi ys cop
Heavede he nou here Sire Hue de Bigot :
Al he shulde grahte here twelfmoneth scot
Shulde he never more with his sot pot
To helpe Wyndesore.
Richard, thah thou be ever, &c.

Be the luf, be the loft, sire Edward,
Thou shalt ride sporeles o thy lyrond
At the ryhte way to Dovere-ward,
Shalt thou never more breke foreward :
Ant that reweth sore
Edward, thou dudest as a shrewad,
Forsoke thyen emes lore
Richard, &c.

" This ballad will rise in its importance with the reader, when he finds that it is even believed to have occasioned a law in our Statute Book, viz. "Against slanderous reports or tales, to cause discord betwixt king and people." (Westm. Primer, c. 34, anno 3. Edw. I.) That it had this effect, is the opinion of an eminent writer: See "Observations upon the Statutes, &c." 4to, 2d edit. 1766, p. 71.

However, in the Harl. Collection may be found other satirical and defamatory rhymes of the same age, that might have their share in contributing to this first law against libels.

II.

ON THE DEATH OF KING EDWARD THE FIRST.

We have here an early attempt at elegy. Edward I. died July 7, 1307, in the thirty-fifth year of his reign, and sixty-ninth of his age. This poem appears to have been composed soon after his death. According to the modes of thinking peculiar to those times, the writer dwells more upon his devo-

Ver. 2, kyn, MS.

tion than his skill in government; and pays less attention to the martial and political abilities of this great monarch, in which he had no equal, than to some little weaknesses of superstition, which he had in common with all his contemporaries. The
ON THE DEATH OF KING EDWARD THE FIRST.

Knyg of Frauncce, thou bevedest 'sinne,'
That thou the counsell woldest fonde,
To latte the wille of 'Edward kng'
To wende to the holy londe:
That oure kng he do take on honde
All Engeland to zene ant wyse,
To wenden in to the holy londe
To wynnen us hereriche blisse.

The messager to the pope com,
And seyde that our kng was ded:
Ys oune honde the lettre he nom,
Ywis his herte was full gret:
The Pope him selfe the lettre redde,
Ant spe a word of gret honour.
Alas! he seid, is Edward ded!
Of Christendome he ber the flour."

The Pope to is chaumber wende,
For del ne milhte,he speke na more;
Ant after cardinals he sende,
That muche comthun of Criates lore,
Both the lasse, ant eke the more,
Bed hem bothe rede ant syngle:
Gret deol me myhte se thore,
Mony mon is honde wyngyn.

The Pope of Peyters stod at masse
With ful gret solemnety,
Ther me con the soule blesse:
" Kyng Edward honoured thou be:
God love thi sone comm after the,
Bringe to ende that thou hast bygonne,
The holy crois y-mad of tre,
So fain thou wouldest hit hav y-wonne.

Jerusalem, thou hast i-lore
The flour of al chivalrie
Now kng Edward liveth na more:
Alas! that he zet shulde deye!
He wolde ha rered up full heze
Oure banners, that brith broht to grounde;
Wel! longe we mowe clepe and eerie
Er we a such kyng lan y-founde."

Nou is Edward of Carnarvvn
King of Engelond al aplyth,
God lete him ner be worse man
Then his fader, ne lasse of myht,
To holden is pore men to ryht,
And understonde good counsail,
Al Engelond for to wyssse ant dyht;
Of gode knyhtes darh him nout fail.

Thah mi tonge were mad of stel,
Ant min herte yzote of bras,
The godness myht y never telle,
That with kng Edward was:
Kyng, as thou art cleped conquereour,
In uch bataille thou hasted pys;
God bringe thi soule to the honour,
That ever wes, ant ever yss.

* * Here follow in the original three lines more,
which, as seemingly redundant, we chuse to throw to the bottom of the page, viz.
That lasteth ay withouten ende,
Bidde we God ant oure Ledy to thilke blisse
Jesus us sende. Amen.

Ver. 33, sunne, MS. Ver. 39, Kyng Edward, MS. Ver. 43, ys is probably a contraction of in hys or yu his. Ver 53, 59, Me, i.e. Men; so in Robert of Gloucester passy.
III.

AN ORIGINAL BALLAD BY CHAUCER.

Chaucer's works, is now printed for the first time from an ancient MS. in the Pepysian library, that contains many other poems of its venerable author. The versification is of that species, which the French call Rondeau, very naturally Englished by our honest countrymen Round O. Though so early adopted by them, our ancestors had not the honour of inventing it: Chaucer picked it up, along with other better things, among the neighbouring nations. A fondness for laborious trifles hath always prevailed in the dark ages of literature. The Greek poets have had their wings and axes: the great father of English poesy may therefore be pardoned one poor solitary rondeau.—Geoffrey Chaucer died Oct. 25, 1400, aged 72.

1. I.

Youre two eyn will sle me sodely,
May the beaute of them not sustene,
So wendeth it thorrowout my herte kene.

2.

And but your words will helen hastely
My hertis wound, while that it is grene,
Youre two eyn will sle me sodely.

3.

Upon my trouth I sey yow feithfully,
That ye ben of my life and deth the quene,
For with my deth the trouth shal be sene.
Youre two e

IV.

THE TURNAMENT OF TOTTENHAM:

"OR THE WOOING, WINNING, AND WEDDING OF TIBBY, THE REEFS Daughter THERE."

It does honour to the good sense of this nation, that while all Europe was captivated with the bewitching charms of Chivalry and Romance, two of our writers in the rudest times could see through the false glare that surrounded them, and discover whatever was absurd in them both. Chaucer wrote his Rhyme of Sir Thopas in ridicule of the latter; and in the following poem we have a humorous burlesque of the former. Without pretending to decide whether the institution of chivalry was upon the whole useful or pernicious in the rude ages, a question that has lately employed many good writers*, it evidently encouraged a vindictive spirit, and gave such force to the custom of duelling, that there is little hope of its being abolished. This, together with the fatal consequences which often attended the diversion of the Turnament, was sufficient to render it obnoxious to the graver part of mankind. Accordingly the church early denounced its censure against it, and the state was often prevailed on to attempt its suppression. But fashion and opinion are superior to authority: and the proclamations against tilting were as little regarded in those times, as the laws against duelling are in these. This did not escape the discernment of our poet, who easily perceived that inveterate opinions must be attacked by other weapons, besides proclamations and censures; he accordingly made use of the keen one of Ridicule. With this view he has here introduced with admirable humour a parcel of clowns, imitating all the solemnities of the Tourney. Here we have the regular challenge—the appointed day—the lady for the prize—the formal preparations—the display of armour—the scuchoens and devices—the oaths taken on entering the lists—the various accidents of the encounter—the victor leading off the prize—and the magnificent feasting—with all the other solemn fopperies that usually attended the pompous Turnament. And how acutely the sharpness of the author's humour must have been felt in those days,

* See [Mr. Hard's] Letters on Chivalry, Svo. 1762. Memoirs de la Chevalerie, par M. de la Cerne des Palais, 1759, 2 tom. 12mo. &c.

* This, MS.
we may learn from what we can perceive of its keenness now, when time has so much blunted the edge of his ridicule.

The Tournament of Tottenham was first printed from an ancient MS in 1631, 4to, by the Rev. Whilhem Bedwell, rector of Tottenham, who was one of the translators of the Bible, and afterwards Bishop of Kilmore in Ireland, where he lived and died with the highest reputation of sanctity, in 1641. He tells us, it was written by Gilbert Pilkington, thought to have been some time parson of the same parish, and author of another piece, intitled Passio Domini Jesu Christi. Bedwell, who was eminently skilled in the oriental and other languages, appears to have been but little conversant with the ancient writers in his own; and he so little entered into the spirit of the poem he was publishing, that he contends for its being a serious narrative of a real event, and thinks it must have been written before the time of Edward III, because Turnaments were prohibited in that reign. "I do verily believe," says he, "that this Turnament was acted before this proclamation of King Edward. For how durst any to attempt to do that, although in sport, which was so strictly forbidden, both by the civil and ecclesiastical power? For although they fought not with lances; yet, as our author sayth, 'It was no childrens game. And what would have become of him, think you, which should have slayne another in this manner of jesting? Would he not, trow you, have been hang'd for it in earnest? yes, and have bene buried like a dogge?" It is, however, well known that Turnaments were in use down to the reign of Elizabeth.

In the first editions of this work, Bedwell's copy was reprinted here, with some few conjectural emendations; but as Bedwell seemed to have reduced the orthography at least, if not the phraseology, to the standard of his own time, it was with great pleasure that the Editor was informed of an ancient MS, copy preserved in the Museum [Harl. MSS. 5396.] which appeared to have been transcribed in the reign of King Hen. VI. about 1456. This obliging information the Editor owed to the friendship of Thomas Tyrwhit, Esq., and he has chiefly followed that more authentic transcript, improved however by some readings from Bedwell's Book.

Or all thse kene conquerours to carpe it were kynde; Of fele feystyng folk ferly we fynde, The Turnament of Totenham have we in mynde; It were harme saych hardynes were holden hybynde, In story as we rede  Of Hawky, of Herre, Of Tomky, of Turry, Of them that were dyghty And stalworth in deds.

It befel in Totenham on a dere day, Ther was mad a shurtynge be the hy-wyn. Therder com al the men of the contray, Of Hyssylton, of Hy-gate, and of Hakenay, And all the swete stynkwyrs, Ther hoppyd Hawky, Ther danddend Tomky, Ther trumped Tomkyhyn, And all were trewe drykynrs.

Tyth the day was gon and evyn-song past, [cast; That thay schuld reckyn ther scot and ther counts Perkyn the potter into the press past, And sayd Randol the refa, a dozter thou hast, Tyb the dere: Therfor faine wyt wold I, Whych of all thysh bachelery Were best worthye To wyd hur to hys fere.

Upstyrr thos gadelyngys wyth ther lang staves, And sayd, Randol the refa, lo! thysh lad raves; Boldely amang us thy doxter he craves: We er rycher men than he, and mor gode haves Of cattell and corn; Then sayd Perkyn, To Tybbe I have hyzt That I schal be alway redy in my ryzt, If that it schuld be thys day seventlyz, Or elles zet to morn.

Then sayd Randolf the refa, Ever be he warid, That about thya carpyng lenger wold be taryd: I wold not my doxter, that scho were miscaryd, But at hur most worschip I wold scho were maryd; Therfor a Turnament schal begynne Thys day seventlyz,— Wyth a flayl for to fytz: And 'he,' that is most of nyght Schal brouke hur wyth wynne.

Whoso berys hym best in the turnament, Hym schal he granted the gre be the comon assent, For to wynne my dozter wyth 'doughtynesse' of dent, And 'coppell' my brolde-henne 'that' was broxt out of Kent: And my dunnyn kowe For no spens wyll I spare, For no cattell wyll I care, He schall have my gray mare, And my spottyd sowe.

Ther was many 's bolde lad ther bodys to bede: Than thay toke thay layd, and hordward they zede; And all the weke afterward gruythed ther wede, Tyll il it come to the day, that thay suld do ther dede. They armed ham in matts; They set on ther nollys, For to kepe ther pollys, Gode blake bollys, For batryng of bats.

Thay sowed than in schepeskyyns, for thay schuld not brest: Ilk-on toke a blak hat, insted of a crest: 'A basset or a panyer before on ther brest,' And a flayle in ther hande; for to fyght prest, Furth gon thay fare: Ther was kyd mekly fors Who schuld best fend hys cors: He that had no gode hors, He gat hym a mare.

Sych another gadryng have I not sene of, When all the gret company com ryndand to the croft Tyb on a gray mare was set up on loft On a sek ful of fedryrs, for schoch schuld ayat soft, Ver. 20. It is not very clear in the MS. whether it should be cont or conters. Ver. 48. dosty, MS. V. 49. copied. We still use the phrase, "a couple-crowned here." Ver. 57. gayed, PC. Ver. 60, is wanting in MS. and suppleid from PC. Ver. 72. He borrowed him, PC. V. 78. The MS. had once sedys, i.e. seeds, which appear to have been altered to fedryrs, or feathers. Bedwelle sopv ha Staty, i.e. Mustard-seed.
And led "till the gap."
For cryeng of the men
Forther wold not Tyb then,
Tyl scho had hur brode hen
Set in hur Lop.

A gay gydyly Tyb had on, borowred for the nonys,
And a garbnd on hur hed ful of ronde bones,
And a broche on hur brest ful of "sapphire" stony,
Wyth the holy-rode tokyngyn, was wrotyyn for the nonys; 85
For no ' spendings' thyad spared.
When joly Gyb saw hur thare,
He gyrd so hya gray mare,
'Th at scho lete a fowkin' fare
At the rereward. 90

I wos to God, quoth Herry, I schal not lese behnde,
May I mete wyth Bernard on Bayard the blynde,
Ich myght lyse out of my wynde,
For whatsoever that he be, before me I fynde,
I wot I schall hym greve.
Wele sayd, quoth Hawkyn.
And I wos, quoth Dawkyn,
May I mete wyth Tomkyn,
Hys flayle I schal hym reve.

I make a vow, quoth Hud, Tyb, son schal thon se,
Whych of all thyss bachelery ' granted ' is the gre:
I schal scomfet thy on, all for the love of;
In what place so I come they schal have dout of me,
My nyms armes ar so cler:
I bere a redyly, and a rake,
Pondred wyth a brennd drake,
And three canteells of a cake
In ycha cornere.

I vow to God, quoth Hawkyn, yf ' I ' have the gowt,
Al that I fynde in the felde ' trustrand here aboute,
Have I tywses or thryes redyn thurgh the route,
In ych yelde ther thy my se, of me thysh schal have
When I begyn to play. [doute.
I make avowe that I ne schall,
But yf Tybbe wyly me call,
Or I be thryes don fal,
Ryzt onya com away.

Then sayd Terry, and swore be hys crede;
Saw thou never yong boy forthar hys boddy bede,
For when they fyzt fastest and most ar in drede, 120
I schall take Tyb by the hand, and hur away lele:
I ne armed at the full;
In my nyms armes I bere wele
A doz troth, and a pele,
A sadyl wythout a panell.
Wyth a flax of wold.

I make a vow, quoth Dulman, and swore be the stra,
Whyls me ys lef my ' mare,' thou gets hurre not swa;
For scho ys wele schupen, and lizt as the rue,
Ther is no capul in thyss myle befor hur schal ga; 130

Sche wul ne nozt begyle.
Sche wyl me bere, I dar say,
On a lang somerays day,
Fro Hyssylton to Hakenny,
Nozt other halfr myle.

I make a vow, quoth Perkyn, thow speks of cold rost,
I schal wyrsy ' wyselyer' without any host:
Five of the best capulys, that ar in thyss ost, [cost,
I wot I schal thaym wyne,
And here I grant thaym Tybbe. 140
Wele boyes here ya he,
That wyl fyzt, and not fle,
For I am in my jolyte,
Wyth so forth, Gysbye.

When thay had ther vowes made, furth can thay hie,
145
Wyth flayles, and horseys, and trumpes mad of tre:
Icher were all the bachelerys of that centre;
Thay were dyzt in ary, as thaymselfes wold be:
Thayr baners were ful bryzt
Of an old rotten fell;
The cheveron of a plow-mell;
And the schadow of a bell,
Poudred wyth the mone lyzt.

I wot yf ' was ' ne chylder game, when thay togedyr
When icha freke in the feld on hys felty bet, 155
And lound on styly, for nothyng wold thyat let,
And focht ferly fast, tyllh their horses awet,
And few wordys spoken.
Thay were flayles al to slutred,
Thay were scholdys al to flatred,
Bollys and dyschies al to schatred,
And many leddys broky.

There was clynkyng of cart-sadie lys, and clatterynge of cannes;
Of fele frekys in the feld brokyyn were their fannes;
Of sum were the hedys brokyyn, of cum the bryn-pannes,
And yll were thay besene, or thay went thannes, 166
Wyth swyppyng of swyold:
Thay were so very for-foght,
Thay myzt not fyzt mare oloft,
But creped about in the ' croft,'
As thay were croked crepyls.

Perkyn was so very, that he began to loute;
Help, Hud, I am ded in thyss ylky rowte:
An hors for forty pens, a godé and a stoute!
That I may lyzly come of my noye oute,
For no cost wyly I spare.
He styrt up as a snale,
And hent a capul be the tayle,
And ' reft ' Dawkyn hys thayle,
And wan there a mare. 180

Perkyn wan five, and Hud wan twa:
Glad and blythe thay ware, that they had don sa;
Thay wold have tham to Tyb, and present hur with th\nThe Capullus were so very, that thay myzt not ga;

Ver. 77, And led hur to cap, MS. V. 83, Bedwell's P. C. bas. 'Ried-Beau.' V. 84, saier stous, MS. V. 85, wrotyyn, i.e. wrught; P. C. reads, written. V. 86, No etch [perhaps etchel] they had spared, MS. V. 89. Then . . . facon, MS. V. 101, grant, MS. V. 120, yf he have, MS. V. 119, the MS. literally has thr. sand here V. 128 merth, MS.
FOR THE VICTORY AT AGINCOURT.

That our plan and martial ancestors could wield their swords much better than their pens, will appear from the following homely rhymes, which were drawn up by some poet laureat of those days to celebrate the immortal victory gained at Agincourt, Oct. 25, 1415. This song or hymn is given merely as a curiosity, and is printed from a MS copy in the Pepys collection, vol. I. folio.

Deo gratias Anglia reddo pro victoria!

Owre kynge went forth to Normandy,
With grace and myzt of chivalry;
The God for hym wrouzt marvellously,
Wherefore Englonde may calle, and cry

Deo gratias:

Deo gratias Anglia reddo pro victoria.

He sette a sege, the sothe for to say,
To Harflue toune with ryal aray;
That toune he wan, and made a fray,
That Franuce shall rywe tyd domes day.

Deo gratias: &c.

Then went owre kynge, with alle his oste,
Thorowe Franuce for all the Fresyne hoste;
He spared for 'for drede of leste, ne most,
Tyl he come to Agincourt coste.

Deo gratias, &c.

Ver. 185, stand, MS. V. 189, sand, MS. V. 199, Thys MS. V. 204, bom for to fetch, MS. V. 208, about every side, MS. V. 209, the gre, is wanting in MS. V. 210, mothe, MS.

And thay ' to church went:

So wele wysedys he has sped,
That dero Tyb he 'hath' wed;
The prayse-folk, that hur led,
Were of the Turnament.

To that ylk feast com many for the nones;
Some come hyphalte, and some tripped 'thither' on the stony:
Sum a stat in hys hand, and sum two at onys;
Of sum where the hedes broken, of some the schulder bonys;
With sorrow come that thedyr.
Wo was Hawyn, wo was Herry,
Wo was Tomyne, wo was Tery,
And so was all the bachelary,
When thay met togedy.

*At that fest that wer servyyd with a ryche aray,
Every fyve & fyve hath a cokenay;
And so thay sat in jolye at the lung day;
And at the last thay went to bed ful gret de-ray;
Mekyl myrth was them among;
In every corner of the hous
Was melody deleyous
For to here precyus
Of six menys song.

Deo gratias:
Deo gratias Anglia reddo pro victoria.

Than for sothe that knyzt comely
In Agincourt felde he faunt manly,
Thorow grace of God most myzt
He bad bothe the felde, and the victory:

Deo gratias, &c.

Ther dukys, and erlys, lorde and barone,
Were take, and slayne, and that wel sone,
And some were ledde in to Lundone
With joye, and merthe, and grete renone.

Deo gratias, &c.

Now gracious God he save owre kynge,
His pepel, and all his wyldyne,
Gef hym gode lyfe, and gode endygne,
That we with merth mowe savel synge

Deo gratias:
Deo gratias Anglia reddo pro victoria.

Ver. 218, And they liffe assent, MS. V. 214, had wed, MS. V. 215, The chevesmen, PC. V. 218, tripped on, MS.

* In the former impressions, this concluding stanza was only given from Bedwell's printed edition; but it is here copied from the old MS. wherein it has been since found separated from the rest of the poem, by several pages of a money-account, and other heterogeneous matter.

† Six-men's song, i. e. a song for six voices. So Shakespeare uses Three-men song-men, in his Winter's Tale, A. III. sc. 3, to denote men that could sing catchs composed for three voices. Of this sort are Weelke's Madrigals mentioned below, Book II. Song 9. So again Shakespeare has Three-men Beetle; i. e. a licele or Rammer worked by three men. 2 Hen. IV. A.I. Sc. 3.
VI.

THE NOT-BROWNE MAYD.

The sentimental beauties of this ancient ballad have always recommended it to readers of taste, notwithstanding the rust of antiquity which obscures the style and expression. Indeed, if it had no other merit than the having afforded the ground-work to Prior's "Iffrey and Emma," this ought to preserve it from oblivion. That we are able to give it in so correct a manner, is owing to the great care and exactness of the accurate Editor of the "Prolusions," 8vo, 1760; who has formed the text from two copies found in two different editions of Arnold's Chronicle, a book supposed to be first printed about 1521. From the copy in the Prolusions the following is printed, with a few additional improvements gathered from another edition of Arnold's book preserved in the Public Library at Cambridge. All the various readings of this copy will be found here, either received into the text, or noted in the margin. The references to the Prolusions will show where they occur. In our ancient folio MS. described in the preface, is a very corrupt and defective copy of this ballad, which yet afforded a great improvement in one passage. See v. 310.

It has been a much easier task to settle the text of this poem, than to ascertain its date. The ballad of the "Nutbrowne Mayd" was first revived in "The Muses Mercury for June, 1707."

It was being prefixed with a little "Essay on the old English Poets and Poetry:" in which this poem is concluded to be "near 300 years old," upon reasons which, though they appear inconclusive to us now, were sufficient to determine Prior; who there first met with it. However, this opinion had the approbation of the learned Wanley, an excellent judge of ancient books. For that whatever related to the reprinting of this old piece was referred to Wanley, appears from two letters of Prior's preserved in the British Museum [Harl. MSS. No 3777.]. The Editor of the Prolusions thinks it cannot be older than the year 1500, because, in Sir Thomas More's Tale of "The Serjeant," &c. which was written about that time, there appears a sameness of rhythmus and orthography, and a very near affinity of words and phrases, with those of this ballad. But this reasoning is not conclusive; for if Sir Thomas More made this ballad his model, as is very likely, that will account for the sameness of measure, and in some respect for that of words and phrases, even though this had been written long before: and, as for the orthography, it is well known that the old printers reduced that of most books to the standard of their own times. Indeed, it is hardly probable that an antiquary like Arnold would have inserted it among his historical collections, if it had been then a modern piece; at least, he would have been apt to have named its author. But to show how little can be inferred from a resemblance of rhythmus or style, the editor of these volumes has in his ancient folio MS. a poem on the victory of Floddenfield, written in the same numbers, with the same alliterations, and in orthography, phraseology, and style nearly resembling the Visions of Pierce Plowman, which are yet known to have been composed above 160 years before that battle. As this poem is a great curiosity, we shall give a few of the introductory lines:

"Grant gracious God, grant me this time,
That I may say, or I cease, thy selven to please;
And Mary his mother, that maketh this world;
And all the seemlie saints, that sitten in heaven;
I will carse of kings, that conquered full wide,
That dwelle in this land, that was alyes noble;
Henry the seventh, that soveraine lord, &c."

With regard to the date of the following ballad, we have taken a middle course, neither placed it so high as Wanley and Prior, nor quite so low as the editor of the Prolusions: we should have followed the latter in dividing every other line into two, but that the whole would then have taken up more room than could be allowed it in this volume,

Be it ryght, or wrong, these men among
On women do complain";
Affyrmyng this, how that it is
A labour spent in vayne,
To love them wele; for never a dele 5
They love a man agayne:
For late a man do what he can,
Theyr favour to attayne,
Yet, yt a newe do them persue,
Thyer first true lover than
Laboureth for nought: for from her thought
He is a banyshed man.

I say nat nay, but that all day
It is bothe writ and sayd
That womenes faith is, as who sayth,
All utterly decayd;
But, nevertheless ryght good wyntësse
In this case might be layd,
That they love true, and continue:
Reccorde the Not-browne Mayde:
Which, when her love came, her to prove,
To her to make his mone,
Wolde nat depart; for in her hart
She loved but lym alone.

Than betwayne us late us dyscus
What was all the manere
Betwayne them two: we wyll also Tell all the payne, and fere,
That she was in. Now I begun,
So that ye me answere;

Ver. 2, woman. Prolusions, and Mr. West's copy. V. 11, her, I. e. their.

* My friend, Mr. Farmer, proposes to read the first lines thus, as a Lytton:

* This (which my friend Mr. Farmer supposes to be the first edition) is in folio: the folio are numbered at the bottom of the leaf; the Song begins at folio 73. The poem has since been collated with a very fine copy that was in the collection of the late James West, Esq.; the readings extracted there are denoted thus, 'Mr. W.'
LORD.

Shall never be sayd, the Not-browne Mayd
Was to her love unkynde:
Make you redy, for so am I,
Although it were anone;
For, in my mynde, of all mankynde
I love but you alone,

HE.

Yet I you rede to take good hede
What men wyll thynke, and say:
Of yonge, and olde it shal be tolde,
That ye be gone away,
Your wants wyll for to fulfill,
In grene wode you to play;
And that ye myght from your delyght
No longer make delay.
Rather than ye sholde thus for me
Be called an yll woman,
Yet wolde I to the grene wode go,
Alone, a banyshed man.

SHE.

Though it be songe of old and yonge,
That I sholde be to blame,
Theyrs be the charge, that speke so large
In hurtynge of my name:
For I wyll prove, that faythfulle love
It is devout of shame;
In your dystress, and hevynesse,
To part with you, the same:
And sure all that, that do not so,
True lovers are they none;
For, in my mynde, of all mankynde
I love but you alone.

HE.

I counseyle you, remember howe,
It is no maydens lawe,
Nothynge to doute, but to renne out
To wode with an outlawe:
For ye must there in your hand bere
A bowe, redy to drawe;
And, as a thefe, thus must you lyve,
Ever in drede and awe;
Whereby to you grete harme myght growe:
Yet had I leuer than,
That I had to the grene wode go,
Alone, a banyshed man.

SHE.

I thinke nat nay, but as ye say,
It is no maydens lore:
But love may make me for your sake,
As I have sayd before
To come on fote, to hunt, and shote
To gete us mete in store;
For so that I your company
May have, I ask no more:
From which to part, it maketh my hart
As colde as ony stone;
For, in my mynde, of all mankynde
I love but you alone.

HE.

For an outlawe this is the lawe,
That men hym take and bynde;
Without pyté, hanged to be,
And waver with the wynde,

Ver. 91. Shall it never, Prof. and Mr. W. V. 94, Although Mr. W. V. 117, To shewe all. Prof. and Mr. W. Y. 133, I say nat, Prof. and Mr. W. V. 138, and more, Camb. copy.
If I had rede, (as God forbeide!)
What resouces coode ye fynde?
Forsoth, I trove, ye and your bowe
For fere wolde drawe behynde:
And no mervayle; for lytell avayle
Were in your counceyle than:
Wherfore I wyll to the grene wode go,
Alone, a banished man.

SHE.
Ryght wele knowe ye, that women be
But feble for to fyght;
No womanhede it is indeede
To be holde as a knygth:
Yet, in such fere ye that ye were
With enemies day or nyght,
I wolde withstande, with bowe in hande,
To greve them as I myght,
And you to save; as women have
From deth 'men' many one:
For, in my mynde, of all mANKynde
I love but you alone.

HE.
Yet take good heede; for ever I drede
That ye coude nat sustayne
The thorny wayes, the depe valles,
The snowe, the frost, the rayne,
The colde, the hete: for dry, or wete,
We must lodge on the playne;
And, us above, none other rofe
But a brake bush, or twayne:
Which some shold geve you, I believe;
And ye wolde gladly than
That I had to the grene wode go,
Alone, a banished man.

SHE.
Syth I have here bene partynére
With you of joy and bylyss,
I must also parte of your wo
Endure, as reson is;
Yet am I sure of one plesúre;
And, shortly, it is this:
That, where ye be, me semeth, pardé,
I coude nat fare amyssse,
Without more speche, I you besche
That we were sone acoué;
For, in my mynde, of all mANKynde
I love but you alone.

HE.
If ye go thyster, ye must consyder,
What ye have lust to dyne,
There shall no mete be for you gete,
Nor drinke, here, ale, ne wyne.
No shetés clene, to lye betwene,
Made of thred and twayne;
None other house, but leves and bowes,
To cover your hed and myyne,
O myne harte sweete, this evyl dycte
Wherfore I wyll to the grene wode go,
Alone, a banished man.

Ver. 150, socours, ProL and Mr. W. V. 162, and night,
Camb. Copy. V. 161, to helpe ye with my myght, ProL and Mr. W. V. 173, frost and rayne Mr. W. V. 173. Ye must, ProL. V. 196, shortly gone, ProL and Mr. W. V.
196, Neyther here ProL and Mr. W. V. 201, Lo myn,
Mr. W.

SHE.
Amonge the wylde dere, such an archère,
As men say that ye be,
Ne may nat fayle of good vitaye,
Where is so grete plente:
And water clere of the ryyere
Shall be full sweete to me;
With which in hele I shall ryght wele
Endure, as ye shall see;
And, er we go, a bedde or two
I can provyde anone;
For, in my mynde, of all mANKynde
I love but you alone.

HE.
Lo yet, before, ye must do more,
Ye wyll go with me:
As cut your here up by your ere,
Your kyrtel by the kne;
With bowe in hande, for to withstande
Your enemies yf nede be:
And this same nyght before day-lygth,
To wode-warde wyll I fle.
Yf that ye wyll all this fulfill,
Do it shortly as ye can:
Els wyll I to the grene wode go,
Alone, a banished man.

SHE.
I shall as nowe do more for you
Than longeth to womanhede;
To shote my here, a bowe to bere,
To shote in tymé of nede.
O my swete mother, before all other
For you I have most drede:
But nowe, adue! I must ensue,
Where fortune doth me ledé.
All this make ye: Now let us fle;
The day cometh fast upon;
For, in my mynde, of all mANKynde
I love but you alone.

HE.
Nay, nay, nat so; ye shall nat go,
And I shall tell ye why——
Your appetyght is to be lyght
Of love, I wele espy:
For, lyke as ye have sayed to me,
In lyke wyse hardly
Ye wolde answére whosoever it were,
In way of company.
It is sayd of olde, Sone hote, sone colde;
And so is a womyn.
Wherfore I to the wode wyll go,
Alone, a banished man.

SHE.
Yf ye take hede, it is no nede
Such wordes to saye by me;
For oft ye prayed, and longe assayed,
Or I you loved, pardé:
And though that I of ancestrée
A barons daughter be,
Yet have ye proved howe I you loved
A squeeuer of lowe degré;
THE NOT-BROWNE MAYD.

And ever shall, whatsoever befall;
To dy therfore* anone;
For, in my mynde, of all mankynde
I love but you alone.

HE.
A barons chylde to be begyde!
It was a cursed dede;
To be felawe with an outlawe!
Almighty God forbeide!
Yet hester were, the pore squyere
Alone to forest yede,
Than ye shold say another day,
That, by my cursed dede,
Ye were betray’d: Wherfore, good mayd,
The best rede that I can,
Is, that I to the grene wode go,
Alone, a banished man.

SHE.
Whatever befall, I never shall
Of this thyng you upbryad:
But yf ye go, and leve me so,
Than have ye me betrayd.
Remember you wele, howe that ye dele;
For, yf ye, as ye sayd,
Be so unkynde, to leve behynde,
Your love, the Not-browne Mayd,
Trust me truly, that I shall dy
Some after ye be gone;
For, in my mynde of all mankynde
I love but you alone.

HE.
Yf that ye went, ye shold repent;
For in the forest nowe
I have purvyayed me of a mayd,
Whom I love more than you;
Another fayrere, than ever ye were,
I dare it welwe avowe;
And of you bothe echel sholde be wrothe
With other, as I crowe:
It were myne ese, to lyve in pese;
So wyll I, yf I can;
Wherfore I to the wode wyll go,
Alone, a banished man.

SHE.
Though in the wode I undyrstode
Ye hadd a paramour,
All this may nought remove my thought,
But that I wyll be your:
And she shall fynde me soft, and kynde
And courteys every hour;
Glad to fulfyll all that she wyll
Commaunde me to my power:
For had ye, lo, an hundred mo,
‘Of them I wolde be one’;
For, in my mynde, of all mankynde
I love but you alone.

Ver. 262, dy with him. Editor's MS. V. 278, cutbrayed, Prol. and Mr. W. V. 282, ye be as, Prol. and Mr. W. V. 283, Ye were unkynde to lev me behynde, Prol. and Mr. W. Ver. 310. So the Editor's MS. All the printed copies read:
Yet wold I be that one.
* i. e. for this cause; though I were to die for having loved you.

HE.
Myne owne dere love, I se the prove
That ye be kynde, and true;
Of mayde, and wyfe, in all my lyfe,
The best that ever I knewe.
Be mery and glad, be no more sad,
The case is changed nowe:
For it were ruth, that, for your truthe,
Ye shold have cause to rewe.
Be nat dismayed; whateuer I sayd
To you, when I began;
I wyll nat to the grene wode go,
I am no banished man.

SHE.
These tydings be more gladd to me,
Than to be made a quene,
Yf I were sure they shold endure:
But it is often sene,
When men wyll breke promysye, they speke
The wordes on the sphe.
Ye shape some wyll to begyle,
And stele from me, I wene;
Than were the case worse than it was,
And I more wo-begone:
For, in my mynde, of all mankynde
I love but you alone,

HE.
Ye shal nat nede further to drede;
I wyll nat dysparage
You, (God defend!) syth ye descend
Of so grete a lynage.
Nowye undyrstanke; to Westmarlende,
Which is myne herytage,
I wyll you brynge; and with a rynge
By waye of marynge
I wyll you take, and lady make,
As shortlye as I can;
Thus have you won an erlys son
And not a banished man.

AUTHOR.
Here may ye se, that women be
In love, meke, kynde, and stable;
Late never man reproove them than,
Or call them variable;
But, rather, pray God, that we may
To them be egefteable;
Which sometime proveth such, as he loveth,
If they be charytably.
For synth men wolde that women sholde
Be meke to them each one,
Mochte more ought they to God obey,
And serve but hym alone.

Ver. 315, of all, Prol. and Mr. W. V. 325, gladder, Prol. and Mr. W. V. 330, grete lynyage, Prol. and Mr. W. V. 347, Then have, Prol. V. 358, and no banished, Prol. and Mr. W. V. 352, This line wanting in Prol. and, Mr. W. V. 355, proved—loved, Prol. and Mr. W. 1b. as loveth, Camb. V. 357, Forsoth, Prol. and Mr. W.
CUPID'S ASSAULT: BY LORD VAUX.

VII.

A BALET BY THE EARL RIVERS.

The amiable light in which the character of Anthony Widville the gallant Earl Rivers has been placed by the elegant Author of the Catalogue of Noble Writers, interested us in whatever fell from his pen. It is presumed therefore that the insertion of this little Sonnet will be pardoned, though it should not be found to have much poetical merit. It is the only original Poem known of that nobleman's: his more voluminous works being only translations. And if we consider that it was written during his cruel confinement in Pomfret castle a short time before his execution in 1483, it gives us a fine picture of the composure and steadiness with which this stout Earl beheld his approaching fate.

This ballad we owe to Rous a contemporary historian, who seems to have copied it from the Earl's own hand writing: In tempore, says this writer, incarceracionis apud Pontem-fraetum editit unum Balet in anglicis, ut mihi monstratum est, quod subsequitur sub his verbis: Sum what Musing, &c. In Rous the 2d Stanza, &c. is imperfect, but the defects are here supplied from a more perfect copy printed in "Ancient Songs, from the time of King Henry III. to the Revolution," page 87.

This little piece, which perhaps ought rather to have been printed in stanzas of eight short lines, is written in imitation of a poem of Chaucer's, that will be found in Urry's Edit. 1721, p. 553, beginning thus:

"Alone walkyng, In thought plainyng,
And sore sighyng, All desolate.
My remembrance Of my luyng
My death wishing Bothely and late.

Infortunate Is so my fate
That wote ye what, Out of mesure
My life I hate; Thus desperate
In such pore estate, Doe I endure, &c."

SUMWHAT musing, And more mornyng,
In remembering The unstydfastnes;
This world-Being Of such whelyng,
Me contrarieng, What may I gesse?

I fere dowtles, Remedilies,
Is now to seye Woeful chaunce,
[For unkyndness, Withouten less,
And no redress, Me doth avaunce,
With displeasance, To my grevance,
And no suraunce Of remedy.]

Lo in this trauence, Now in substaunce,
Such is my dawnce, Wyllynge to dye.

Me thynks truly, Bowndyn am I,
And that grely, To be content;
Syng playlyng, Fortune doth wry
All contrary From my entent.

My lyff was lent Me to on intent,
Hytt is my spent. Welcome fortune!
But I ne went Thus to be shent,
But sho hit ment; such is hur won.

VIII.

CUPID'S ASSAULT: BY LORD VAUX.

The Reader will think that infant Poetry grew space between the times of Rivers and Vaux, though nearly contemporaries; if the following Song is the composition of that Sir Nicholas (afterwards Lord) Vaux, who was the shining ornament of the court of Henry VII. and died in the year 1523.

And yet to this Lord it is attributed by Puttenham in his "Art of Eng. Poesie, 1589. 4to." a writer commonly well informed: take the passage at large.

"In this figure [Counterfeit Action] the Lord Nicholas Vaux, a noble gentleman and much delighted in vulgar making, and a man otherwise of no great learning, but having herein a marvelous facility, made a dittie representing the Battayle and Assault of Cupide, so excellently well, as for the gallant and proper application of his fiction in every part I cannot choose but set downe the greatest part of his ditty, for in truth it cannot be amended. When Cupid Sealed, &c." p. 200.—For a farther account of Nicholas Lord Vaux, see Mr. Walpole's Noble Authors, Vol. I.

The following Copy is printed from the first Edit. of Surrey's Poems, 1557, 4to.—See another Song of Lord Vaux's in the preceding Vol. Book II. No. II.

When Cupide scaled first the fort,
Wherein my hart lay wounded sore;
The batry was of such a sort,
That I must yelde or die therefor.

There sawe I Love upon the wall,
How he his banner did display:
Alarne, alarne, he gan to call:
And bad his souldeiours kepe aray.

The armes, the which that Cupide bare,
Were pearded hartes with teares besprent
In silver and sable to declare
The stedfast love, he alwayes ment.

Ver. 15, That fortune Ross Hist. V. 19, went, i.e. wenened.
There might you see his hand all drest
In colours like to white and blacke,
With Powder and with pelletes prest
To bring the fort to spole and sacke.

Good-wyll, the master of the shot,
Stode in the rampire brave and proudre,
For spence of powder he spared not
Assault! assault! to crye aloude.

There might you heare the cannons roar;
Eche pece discharged a lovers loke;
Which had the power to rent, and tore
In any place whereas they toke.

And even with the trumpettes sowne
The scaling ladders were up set,
And Beatite walked up and downe,
With bow in hand, and arrows whet.

Then first Desire began to scale,
And shrouded him under 'his targe;
As one the worthiest of them all,
And aspet for to give the charge.

Then pushed souldiers with their pikes,
And halberdes with handy strokes;
The argabashe in fleche it lightes,
And sans the ayre with misty smokes.

And, as it is the souldiers use
When shot and powder gins to want,
I hanged up my flagge of truce,
And pleaded up for my livés grant.

When Fance thus had made her breche,
And Beatite entred with her band,
With bagge and bagagge, selwy wretch,
I yelded into Beatites hand.

Then Beatite bad to blow retrete,
And every souldier to retire,
And mercy wyll'd with spede to fet
Me captive bound as prisoner.

Madame, quoth I, sith that this day
Hath served you at all assayes,
I yeld to you without delay
Here of the fortresse all the kayes.

And sith that I have ben the marke,
At whom you shot at with your eye;
Nedes must you with your handy warke
Or salve my sore, or let me die.

IX.

SIR ALDINGAR.

This old fabulous legend is given from the editor's folio MS. with conjectural emendations, and the insertion of some additional stanzas to supply and complete the story.

It has been suggested to the editor, that the author of this poem seems to have had in his eye the story of Gunhilda, who is sometimes called Eleanor, and was married to the emperor (here called King) Henry.

* i. c. Compositions in English.
† In the Paradise of Dainty Devices, 1596, he is called simply "Lord Vaux the elder."
O'ER our king he kept a false stewärde,
Sir Aldingar they him call;
A falser steward than he was one,
Serv'd not in bower nor hall.

He wolde have layne by our comelye queene, 5
Her deere worshippe to betraye:
Our queene she was a good woman,
And evermore said him naye.

Sir Aldingar was wrethe in his mind,
With her hee was never content.
Till traitorous meane he colde devyse,
In a fyer to have her brest.

There came a lazar to the kings gate,
A lazar both blinde and lame:
He toke the lazar upon his backe,
Him on the queenes bed has layne.

"Lye still, lazar, wheras thou lyest,
Looke thou goe not hence away;
Ile make thee a whole man and a sound
In two howers of the day.*"

Then went him forth sir Aldingar,
And hyed him to our king
"If I might have grace, as I have space, Sad tydings I could bring."

Say on, say on, sir Aldingar,
Saye on the sooth to me,
"Our queene hath chosen a new love,
And shee will have none of thee.

"If shee had chosen a right good knight,
The lesse had beene her shame;
But she hath chose her a lazar man,
A lazar both blinde and lame."

If this be true, thou Aldingar,
The tyding thou tellest to me,
Then will I make thee a rich rich knight,
Rich both of golde and fee.

But if it be false, sir Aldingar,
As God nowe grant it bee!
Thy body, I swear by the holye rood,
Shall hang on the gallowes tree.

He brought our king to the queenes chamber,
And opend to him the dore.
A lodlye love, king Harry says,
For our queene dame Elinore!

If thou were a man, as thou art none,
Here on my sword thoust dye;
But a payre of newe gallowes shall be built,
And there shalt thou hang on yre.

Forth then hyed our king, I wysse,
And an angry man was hee;
And soone he found queene Elinore,
That bride so bright of blee.

Now God you save, our queene, madame,
And Christ you save and see;
If thee you have chosen a newe newe love,
And you will have none of mee.

* He probably insinuates that the king should head him by his power of touching for the King's Evil.

If you had chosen a right good knight,
The lesse had been your shame:
But you have chose you a lazer man,
A lazer both blinde and lame.

Therefore a fyer there shall be built,
And brest all shalt thou bee.

"Now out alacke! said our comlye queene,
Sir Aldingar's false to mee.

Now out alacke! sayd our comlye queene,
My heart with griefe will brast,
I had thought swevans had never been true;
I have proved them true at last.

I dreamt in my sweven on Thursday eve,
In my bed whereas I laye,
I dreamt a Grype and a grimlie beast
Had caried my crowne awaye.

My gorgett and my kirtle of golde,
And all my faire head-geere;
And he wold worrie me with his tush
And to his nest y-beare:

saving there came a little 'gray' hauke,
A merlin him they call
Which untill the grounde did strike the Grype,
That dead he downe did fall.

Giffe I were a man, as now I am none,
A battell wold I prove,
To fight with that traitor sir Aldingar;
Att him I cast my glove.

But seeing Ime able noe battell to make,
My liege, grant me a knight
To fight with that traitor sir Aldingar,
To maintaine me in my right."

"Now forty dayes I will give thee
To secke thee a knight therin:
If thou find not a knight in forty dayes
Thy bodye it must brenn."

Then shee sent east, and shee sent west,
By north and south beleeue;
But never a champion colde she finde,
Wolde fight with that knight soe keene.

Now twenty dayes were spent and gone,
Nee helpe there mighte be had;
Many a teare shed our comelye queene
And aye her hart was sad.

Then came one of the queenes damselfes,
And knelt upon her knee,
"Cheere up, cheere up, my gracious dame,
I trust yet helpe may finde:
And here I will make mine avowe,
And with the same me bine;
That never will I return to thee,
Till I some helpe may finde."

Then forth she rode on a faire palfraye
Oer hill and dale about:
But never a champion colde she finde,
Wolde fighte with that knight so stout.

Ver.77, see below, ver. 137.
And nowe the daye drewe on a pace,
When our good queene must dye;
All woe-begone was that faire damselle,
When she found no helpe was nye.

All woe-begone was that faire damselle,
And the salt teares fell from her eye:
When lo! as she rode by a rivers side,
She met with a tynye boye.

A tynye boye she mette, God wot,
All clad in mantle of golde;
He seemed noe more in mans likenesse,
Then a childe of four yeere olde.

Why grieve you, damselle faire, he sayd,
And what doth cause you moane?
The damselle scant wolde deigne a looke,
But fast she pricked on.

Yet turne againe, thou faire damselle,
And greete thy queene from mee:
When hale is att hyest, boote is nyest,
Nowe helpe enoughe may bee.

Bid her remember what she dreamt
In her bodd, wheras shee lays;
How when the grype and the grimly beast
Wold have carrie her crowne awaye,

Even then there came the little gray hauke,
And saved her from his clawes:
Then bidd the queene be merry at hart,
For heaven will fende her cause.

Back then rode that faire damselle,
And her hart it left for glee:
And when she told her gracious dame
A glad wil woman then was shee.

But when the appointed day was come,
No helpe appeared nye:
Then woeful, woeful was her hart,
And the teares stood in her eye.

And nowe a fyer was built of wood;
And a stake was made of tree;
And nowe Queene Elinor forth was led,
A sorrowful sight to see.

Three times the herault he waved his hand,
And three times spake on lyve:
Giff any good knight will fende this dame,
Come forth, or shee must dye.

No knight stood forth, no knight there came,
No helpe appeared nye:
And now the fyer was lighted up,
Queen Elinor she must dye.

And now the fyer was lighted up,
As hot as hot might bee;
When riding upon a little white steed,
The tynye boye they see.

"Away with that stake, away with those brands,
And loose our comelye queene:
I am come to fight with Sir Aldingar,
And prove him a traitor keene."
Tradition informs us that the author of this song was King James V. of Scotland. This prince (whose character for wit and libertinism bears a great resemblance to that of his gay successor Charles II.) was noted for strolling about his dominions in disguise*, and for his frequent gallantries with country girls. Two adventures of this kind he hath celebrated with his own pen, viz. in this ballad of "The Gaberlunzie Man," and in another, entitled "The Jolly Beggar," beginning thus:

"Thair was a jollie beggar, and a begging he was boun,
And he tuik up his quarters into a land'art town.
Fa, la, la, &c."

It seems to be the latter of these ballads (which was too licentious to be admitted into this collection) that is meant in the Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors†, where the ingenious writer remarks, that there is something very ludicrous in the young woman's distress when she thought her first favour had been thrown away upon a beggar.

Bishop Tanner has attributed to James V. the celebrated ballad of "Christ's Kirk on the Green," which is ascribed to King James I. in Bannatyne's MS. written in 1568: and notwithstanding that authority, the editor of this book is of opinion that Bishop Tanner was right.

King James V. died Dec. 13th, 1542, aged 33.

The pawkie auld Carle came ovir the lea
Wi' mony good-eens and days to mee,
Saying, Goodwife, for zour courtesie,
Will ze lodge a silly poor man?
The night was cauld, the carle was wat,
And down about the ingle he sat;
My dochters shoulders he gan to clap,
And caugily ranted and sang.

O wow! quo he, were I as free,
As first when I saw this country,
How blyth and merry wad I bee!
And I wad nevir think lang.
He grew canty, and she grew fain;
But little did her auld minny ken
What thir slee twa togethre were say'n,
When wooing they were sa thrang.

And O! quo he, ann ze were as black,
As evir the crown of your dailyes hat,
Tis I wad lay thee by my back,
And awa wi' me thou soul gang.
And O! quoth she, ann I were as white,
As evir the suaw lay on the dike,
I'd clead me braw, and lady-like,
And awa with thee I'd gang.

Between the twa was made a plot;
They raise a wee before the cock,
And wililye they shot the lock,

* sc. of a tinker, beggar, &c. Thus he used to visit a smith's daughter at Niddry, near Edinburgh.
† Vol. II. p. 293.

And fast to the bent are they gane.
Up the morn the auld wife raise,
And at her leisure put on her clathes,
To speir for the silly poor man.

She gaed to the bed, whair the beggar lay,
The strawe was cauld, he was away,
She clapt her hands, cryd, Dulefu' day!
For some of our geir will be gane.
Some ran to coffer, and some to kist,
But naught was stown that could be mist.
She dancid her lane, cryd, Praise be blest,
I have lodgd a leal poor man.

Since naithings awa, as we can learn,
The kins to kirk, and milk to earn,
Gae butt the house, lass, and waken my bairn,
And bid her come quickly ben.
The servant gaed where the dochter lay,
The sheets was cauld, she was away,
And fast to her goodwife can say,
Shes aff with the gaberlunzie-man.

O fy gar ride, and fy gar rin,
And hast ze, find these traitors azen;
For shees be burnt, and hees be sleen,
The weerryou gaberlunzie-man,
Some rade upo horse, some ran a fit,
The wife was wood, and out o' her wit;
She could na gang, nor yet could she sit,
But ay did curse and did ban.

Mean time far hind out owre the lee,
For snug in a glen, where nane could see,
The twa, with kindle sport and glee,
Cut frue a new cheese a whang.
The priving was gude, it pleas'd them baith,
To lo'e her for ay, he gae her his aith.
Quo she, to leave thee, I will be laith,
My winsome gaberlunzie-man.

O kend my minny I were wi' zou,
I'llardly wad she crook her mou,
Sic a poor man sheld nevir trow,
A'fir the gaberlunzie-mon.
My dear, quo he, zee're zet owre zonga;
And hae na learnt the beggars tonge,
To follow me free toun to toun,
And carrie the gaberlunzie on.

Wi' lauk and keel, Ill win zour bread,
And spindlees and whorles for them wha need
Whilk is a gentil trade indeed
The gaberlunzie to carrie—o.
Ill bow my leg and crook my knee,
And draw a black clout owre my ee,
A trickle or blind they will cau me:
While we sall sing and be merrie—o.

Ver. 29, The Carline. Other copies.
ON THOMAS LORD CROMWELL.

It is ever the fate of a disgraced minister to be forsaken by his friends, and insulted by his enemies, always reckoning among the latter the giddy inconstant multitude. We have here a spurn at fallen greatness from some angry partisan of declining Popery, who could never forgive the downfall of their Diana, and loss of their craft. The ballad seems to have been composed between the time of Cromwell’s commitment to the Tower, June 11, 1540, and that of his being beheaded July 28, following. A short interval! but Henry’s passion for Catharine Howard would admit of no delay. Notwithstanding our libeller, Cromwell had many excellent qualities: his great fault was too much obscuriousness to the arbitrary will of his master; but let it be considered that this master had raised him from obscurity, and that the high-born nobility had shewn him the way in every kind of mean and servile compliance.—The original copy printed at London in 1540, is intitled, “A newe ballade made of Thomas Cruwmel, called Trolle on away.” To it is prefixed this distich by way of burthen,

Trolle on away, trolle on away.
Syng heave and hove rombelowe trolle on away.

Born man and chylde is glad to here tell
Of that false traytoure Thomas Cruwmel,
Now that he is set to learne to spell,
Syng trolle on away.

When fortune lokyd the in thy face,
Thou haddest fayre tyne, but thou lackedydst grace;
Thy cofers with golde thou fyllyst a pace.
Syng, &c.

Both plate and chalys came to thy fyst,
Thou lockydst them vp where no man wast,
Tyll in the kynges treasoure suche thinges were myst.
Syng, &c.

Both crust and crumme came thorowe thy handes, 10
Thy marchaundyse sayled over the sandes,
Therfore nowe thou art hyde fast in handes.
Syng, &c.

Fyrste when kyng Henry, God saue his grace!
Perceyed myscyde kyndlyd in thy face,
Then it was tyne to purchase the a place.
Syng, &c.

Hys grace was euuer of gentyll nature,
Moudyd with petye, and made the hys servyture;
But thou, as a wretche, suche thinges dyd procure.
Syng, &c.

Thou dyd not remembre, false heretyke,
One God, one fayth, and one kyngge catholyke,
For thou hast bene so long a scysmatyke.
Syng, &c.

“Thou woldyst not learne to knowe these thre;
But euers was full of iniquite;
Wherfore all this lande hath the ben troubled with the.”
Syng, &c.

All they, that were of the new trycke,
Agaynst the churche thou baddest them stycke;
Wherfore nowe thou haste touched the quycke.
Syng, &c.

Bothe sacramentes and sacramtalles
Thou woldyst not suffre within thy wallses;
Nor let vs praye for all chrysten soules.
Syng, &c.

Of what generacyon thou were no tonge can tell,
Whynyther of Chayme, or Syschmell,
Or else sent vs frome the deuyll of hell.
Syng, &c.

Tho woldest neuer to vertue applye,
But couetuyd euers to clymme to hye,
And nowe haste thou trodden thy shoo awrye.
Syng, &c.

Who-so-euer dyd winne thou woldt not lose;
Wherfore all Englynde doth hate the, as I suppose
Bycause thou wast false to the redolent rose.
Syng, &c.

Tho myghtest have learned thy cloth to flocke
Upon thy gresy fullers stocke;
Wherfore lay downe thy heade vpon this blocke.
Syng, &c.

Yet saue that soule, that God hath bought,
And for thy careas care thou nought,
Let it suffice payne, as it hath wrought.
Syng, &c.

God saue kyng Henry with all his power,
And prynce Edwarde that goodly flowre,
With al hys lordes of great honoure.
Syng trolle on awaye, syng trolle on away.
Hervye and howe rombelowe trolle on awaye.

†† The foregoing Piece gave rise to a poetick controversy, which was carried on through a succession of seven or eight Ballads written for and against Lord Cromwell. These are all preserved in the archives of the Antiquarian Society, in a large folio Collection of Proclamations, &c., made in the reigns of King Henry VIII., King Edward VI., Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, King James I, &c.

Ver. 32, i. e. Cain or Ishmael. V. 41. Cromwell’s father is generally said to have been a blacksmith at Putney: but the author of this Ballad would insinuate that either he himself or some of his ancestors were Fullers by trade.
XII.

HARPALUS.

AN ANCIENT ENGLISH PASTORAL.

This beautiful poem, which is perhaps the first attempt at pastoral writing in our language, is preserved among the "Songs and Sonnettes" of the Earl of Surrey, &c. 4to, in that part of the collection, which consists of pieces by "Uncertain Authors." These poems were first published in 1557, ten years after that accomplished nobleman fell a victim to the tyranny of Henry VIII, but it is presumed most of them were composed before the death of Sir Thomas Wyatt in 1541. See Surrey's Poems, 4to, fol. 19, 49.

Though written perhaps near half a century before the "Shepherd's Calendar," this will be found far superior to any of those Elogues, in natural unaffected sentiments, in simplicity of style, in easy flow of versification, and all other beauties of pastoral poetry. Spenser ought to have profited more by so excellent a model.

Phylida was a faire mayde,
As fresh as any flowre;
Whom Harpalus the Herdman prayde
To be his paramour.

Harpalus, and eke Corin,
Were herdmen both yfere:
And Phylida could twist and spinne,
And thereto sing full elere.

But Phylida was all to caye,
For Harpalus to winne:
For Corin was her onely joye,
Who forst her not a pinne.

How often would she flowers twine?
How often garlandes make
Of cousinps and of colombine?
And al for Corin's sake.

But Corin, he had haukes to lure,
And forced more the field:
Of lovers lawe he toke no cure;
For once he was begilde.

Harpalus prevailed nought,
His labour all was lost;
For he was fardest from her thought,
And yet he loved her most.

Therefore waxtte he both pale and leane,
And drye as clot of clay:
His fleshe it was consumed cleane,
His colour gone away.

His beard it lind not long be shave;
His heare hong al unkempt:
A man most fit even for the grave,
Whom spitefull love had spent.

His eyes were red, and all ' forswacht';
His face besprent with teares:
It sente unhap had him long ' hatcht',
In mids of his dispaires.

His clothes were blakke, and also bare;
As one forlorne was he;
Upon his head awayes he ware
A wreath of wyllow tree.

His beastes he kept upon the hyll,
And he sate in the dale,
And thus with sighes and sorrowes shril,
He gan to tell his tale.

Oh Harpalus! (thuss would he say)
Unhappiest under sunne!
The cause of thine unhappy day,
By love was first begunne.

For thou wentest first by sute to seeke
A tigre to make tume,
That settes not by thy love a lecke;
But makes thy griefe her game.

As easy it were for to convert
The frost into 'a' flame;
As for to turne a frowarde hert,
Whom thou so faine wouldst frame.

Corin he liveth carlessesse:
He leapes among the leaves:
He eutes the frutes of thy redesse:
Thou ' reapst ', he takes the sheaves.

My beastes, a whyle your foodre refraine,
And harke your herdmen sounde;
Whom spitefull love, alas! hath shine,
Through-girt with many a wounde.

O happy be ye, beastes'se wilde,
That here your pasture takes:
I se that ye be not begilde
Of these your faithfull makes.

The hart he feedeth by the hinde:
The bucke harde by the do:
The turtle dove is not unkinde
To him that loves her so.

The ewe she hath by her the ramme;
The young cow hath the bull:
The calf with many a lusty lambe
Do fede their hunger full.

But, wel-away! that nature wrought
The, Phylida, so faire:
For I may say that I have bought
Thy beauty all to deare.

* First published in 1579.

Ver. 33, &c. The Corrections are from Ed. 1574.
What reason is that crueltie 85
With beautie should have part?
Or els that such great tyranny
Should dwell in womans hart?

I see therefore to shape my death
She crueltie is prest;
To th' ends that I may want my breath:
My dayes been at the best.

O Cupide, graunt this my request,
And do not stoppe thine eares,
That she may feele within her brest
The paines of my dispaire:

Of Corin 'who' is carlessse,
That she may crave her see:
As I have done in great distresse,
That loved her faithfully.

But since that I shal die her slave;
Her slave, and eke her thall:
Write you, my frendes, upon my grave
This chance that is befall.

"Here beith unhappy Harpalus
By cruel love now slaine:
Whom Phyllida unjustly thus Hath murdred with disdaine."

XIII.

ROBIN AND MAKYNE.

AN ANCIENT SCOTTISH PASTORAL.

The palm of pastoral poesy is here contested by a contemporary writer with the author of the foregoing. The critics will judge of their respective merits; but must make some allowance for the preceding ballad, which is given simply, as it stands in the old editions: whereas this, which follows, has been revised and amended throughout by Allan Ramsay, from whose "Ever-Green," Vol. I. it is here chiefly printed. The curious Reader may however compare it with the more original copy, printed among "Ancient Scottish Poems, from the MS. of George Bannatyne, 1568, Edinb. 1770, 12mo." Mr. Robert Henryson (to whom we are indebted for this Poem) appears to so much advantage among the writers of elegoe, that we are sorry we can give little other account of him besides what is contained in the following eloge, written by W. Dunbar, a Scottish poet, who lived about the middle of the 16th century:

"In Dumferling, he [Death] hath tane Broun,
With gude Mr. Robert Henryson."

Indeed some little further insight into the history of this Scottish bard is gained from the title prefixed to some of his poems preserved in the British Museum; viz. "The morall Fabillis of Esop compylit be Maister Robert Henrisoun, Scolemaister of Dumferling, 1571." Harleian MSS. 3865. § 1.

In Ramsay's "Ever-Green," Vol. I. whence the above distich is extracted, are preserved two other little Doric pieces by Henryson; one intitled "The Lyon and the Mouse;" the other "The Garment of Gude Ladys." Some other of his Poems may be seen in the "Ancient Scottish Poems printed from Bannatyne's MS." above referred to.

Robyn sat on the gude grene hill,
Keipand a flock of shee,
Quhen mirry Makyne said him till,
"O Robyn rew on me:
I haif thee liuvit baith loud and still,
Thir townmonds two or thre;
My dule in dern bot gift thou dill,
Doubtless but dreed Ille dill."

Robyn replied, Now by the rude,
Naithing of luve I knew,
But kep my sheep undir you wod:
Lo quhair they raik on raw.

Qhat can have mart thee in thy mude,
Thon Makyne to me schew;
Or qhat is luve, or to be lude?
Fain wald I leir that law.

"The law of luve gin thou wald leir,
Tak thair an A, B, C:
Be heynid, courtes, and fair of feir,
Wyse, hardy, kind and free,
Sae that nae danger do the deir,
Qhat dule in dern thou drie;
Press ay to pleis and blyth appeir,
Be patient and privie."

Robin, he aanswerst her againe,
I wat not qhat is luve;
But I haif marvel in certaine
Qhat makes thee thus wanrufe.
The wedder is fair, and I am fain;
My sheep gais hail abuve;
And sould we pley us on the plain,
They walid baith repruve.

"Robin, tak tent unto my tale,
And wirk all as I reid;
And thou sall, haif my heart all bale,
Eik and my maiden-heid:
Sen God, he sendis bute for bale,
And for murnig remeid,
I' dern with thee bot gif I dale,
Doubtless I am but deid."

Makyne, to-morn be this ilk tyde,
Gif ye will meit me heir,
Maybe my sheep may gane bessyde,
Qhywe ye have ligg'd full neir;
But mak'g haie I, gif I byde,
Fae thy begin to steir.
Qhat ives on heart I will nocht byd,
Then Makyne mak gude ceir.

Ver. 19, Bannatyne's MS. reads as above, heynid, not keynd, as in the Edinb. editt. 1770. V. 21, So that no dan got. Bannatyne's MS.
"Robin, thou reivs me of my rest;
I luve bot thee alone."
Makyne, adieu! the sun goes west,
The day is neir-hand gane.
"Robin, in dule I am so drest,
That luve will be my bane."
Makyne, gae luve quhair-eir ye list,
For leman I huid nane.

"Robin, I stand in sic a style,
I sich and that full sair."
Makyne, I have bene here this quyle;
At hame I wish I were.
"Robin, my hinny, talk and smyle,
Gif thou will do nae mair."
Makyne, som other man beguyle,
For hameord I will fare.

Syne Robin on his ways he went,
As light as leif on tree;
But Makyne murnt and made lament,
Scho trow’d him neir to see.
Robin he brayd attowre the bents:
Then Makyne cried on hie,
"Now may thou sing, for I am shent!
Qahat alis luve at me!"

Makyne went hame without fail,
And weirlye could weip;
Then Robin in a full fair dale
Assembleit all his sheip,
Be that some part of Makyne’s aal,
Out-throw his heart could creip;
Hir fast he followt to assail,
And till her tuke gude keip.

Abvd, abvd, thou fair Makyne,
A word for ony thing;
For all my luve, it saill be thyne,
Without departin.
All hale thy heart for till have myne,
Is all my coveting;
My sheip to morn quhyle houiris nyne,
Will need of nae keipin.

"Robin, thou hast heard sung and say,
In gests and storry auld,
The man that will not when he may,
Sail have nocht when he wald.
I pray to heaven bathe nichit and day,
Be eiked their cares sae cauld,
That presses first with thee to play
Be forest, firil, or fauld."

Makyne, the nich is soft and dry,
The wether warm and fair,
And the grene wool richt neir-hand by,
To walk attowre all where:
There may nae janglers us espy,
That is in luve contrair;
Therin, Makyne, baith you and I
Unseen may mak repair.

"Robin, that waird is now away,
And quyt brocht till an end:
And nevir again thereto, perfay.
Sail it be as thou wend;
For of my pain thou made but play;
I words in vain did spend:
As thou hast done, sae saill I say,
Murn on, I think to mend."

Makyne, the hope of all my heil,
My heart on thee is set;
I’ll evermair to thee be leif,
Quhyle I may live but lett,
Never to fail as uthers feill,
Qahat grace so eir I get.
Robin, with thee I will not deill;
Adieu, for this we met."

Makyne went hameward blyth enough,
Outowre the holts hair;
Pure Robin murnt, and Makyne leugh;
Scho sang, and he sight sair:
And so left him bayth wo and wretch,
In dolor and in care,
Keipand his herd under a heuch,
Aman the rushy gair.

XIV.
GENTLE HERDSMAN, TELL TO ME.

The scene of this beautiful old ballad is laid near Walsingham, in Norfolk, where was anciently an image of the Virgin Mary, famous over all Europe for the numerous pilgrimages made to it, and the great riches it possessed. Erasmus has given a very exact and humorous description of the superstitious practised there in his time. (See his account of the "Virgo Paranthussia," in his coloquy, intitled, "Peregrinatio Religionis Erigo." He tells us, the rich offerings in silver, gold, and precious stones, that were there shewn him, were incredible, there being scarce a person of any note in England, but what some time or other paid a visit, or sent a present to "Our Lady of Walsingham*. At the disso-

* See at the end of this Ballad an account of the annual offerings of the Earls of Northumberland.

Lution of the monasteries in 1538, this splendid image, with another from Ipswich, was carried to Chelsea, and there burnt in the presence of commissioners; who, we trust, did not burn the jewels and the finery.

This poem is printed from a copy in the editor's folio MS. which had greatly suffered by the hand of time; but vestiges of several of the lines remaining, some conjectural supplements have been attempted, which, for greater exactness, are in this one ballad distinguished by italics.

Ver. 99. Bannatyne's MS. has wold, not word, as in Ed. 1770. V. 117. Bannatyne's MS. reads as above feill, no fall, as in Ed. 1770.
GENTLE HERDSMAN.

Gentle heardsman, tell to me, 5
Of curtesy I thee pray,
Unto the towne of Walsingham 10
Which is the right and ready way.

"Unto the towne of Walsingham 15
The way is hard for to be gon;
And very crooked are those pathes 20
For you to find out all alone."

Weere the miles doubled thrisce, 25
And the way never see ol. 26
Itt were not enough for mine ofence; 30
Itt is soe grievous and soo ill.

"Thy yeares are young, thy face is faire, 35
Thy witts are weake, thy thoughts are greene;
Time hath not given thee leave, as yett, 40
For to commit so great a sinne."

Yes, heardsman, yes, soe woldest thou say, 45
If thou knewest soe much as I;
My witts, and thoughts, and all the rest, 50
Have well deserved for to dye.

I am not what I seeme to bee, 55
My clothes and sexe doo differ farr.
I am a woman, woe is me! 60
Born to greefe and irksome care.

For my beloved, and well-beloved, 65
My wayward crueltie could kill:
And though my teares will nought avail, 70
Most dearely I bewail him still.

He was the flower of noble wights, 75
None ever more sincere colde bee;
Of comely mien and shape bee was, 80
And tenderly bee loved mee.

When thus I saw he loved me well, 85
I grove so proud his pains to see,
That I, who did not know myselfe, 90
Thought scorn of such a youth as bee.

"And grew soe coy and nice to please, 95
As women's lookes are often soe,
He might not kisse, nor hand forsooth, 100
Unless I willed him soe to doe.

Thus being wearyed with deluyes 105
To see I pitied not his greefe,
He gott him to a secret place, 110
And there he dyed without releefe.

And for his sake these weeds I weare, 115
And sacrifice my tender age;
And every day Ile begg my bread, 120
To undergo this pilgrimage.

Thus every day I fast and pray, 125
And ever will doe till I dye;
And get me to some secret place, 130
For soe did bee, and soe will I.

Now, gentle heardsman, aske no more, 135
But kepe my secretts I thee pray:
Unto the towne of Walsingham 140
Show me the right and ready way.

"Now goe thy wayes, and God before! 145
For he must ever guide thee still:
Tyme downe that dalle, the right hand path, 150
And soe, faire pilgrim, fare thee well!"

* * * To show what constant tribute was paid to 155
"Our Lady of Walsingham," I shall give a few extracts from the "Household-Book of Henry Algernon Percy, 5th Earl of Northumberland." Printed 1770, 8vo.

Sect. XLIII. page 337, &c.

Item, My Lorde usith yerly to send afore-Michaelsons for his Lordschip's Offerynge to our Lady of Walsyngeham.—iiij d.

Item, My Lorde usith and accustomyth to sende yerly for the uphaldynge of the Light of Wax which his Lordschip fyndith birynge yerly before our Lady of Walsyngham, containyng ij lb. of Wax in it after viij d. ob. for the fyndynge of every lb. redy wrought by a covenant maid with the Channon by grasy, for the hole yere, for the fyndynge of the said Lyght byrmynge.—vi s. viijij d.

Item, My Lord usith and accustomyth to ayende yerly to the Channon that kepith the Light before our Lady of Walsyngham, for his reward for the hole yere, for kepyng of the said Light, lightynge of it at all service tymes dayly thorowt the yere,—viij d.

Item, My Lord usith and accustomyth yerly to send to the Prest that kepith the Light, lightynge of it at all service tymes daily thorowt the yere,—viij s. viij d.

But mine the sorrow, mine the fault, 170
And well my life shall pay;
I'll seek the solitude he sought, 175
And stretch me where he lay.

And thereforl despairing he, 180
I'll lay me downe and die:
'Twas soe for mee that Edwin did, 185
And so for him will I.
XV.

KING EDWARD IV. AND THE TANNER OF TAMWORTH.

Was a story of great fame among our ancestors. The author of the "Art of English Poesie," 1599, 4to, seems to speak of it as a real fact—Describing that vicious mode of speech, which the Greeks called Acruxos, i.e. "When we use a dark and obscure word, utterly repugnant to that we should express;" he adds, "Such manner of uncouth speech did the Tanner of Tamworth use to king Edward the Fourth; which Tanner, having a great while mistaken him, and used very bold tattle with him, at length perceiving by his traine that it was the king, was afraide he should be punished for it, [and] said thus, with a certain rude repentance, "I hope I shall be hanged to-morrow, "for [I fear me] I shall be hanged; whereat the king laughed a good*, not only to see the Tanner's vaine feare, but also to heare his illshapen terme: and gave him for recompense of his good sport, the inheritance of Plumpton-parke, 'I am afraid,"' concludes this sagacious writer, "'t the poets of our times that speake more finely and correctly, will come too short of such a reward,"' p. 214.—The phrase here referred to, is not found in this ballad at present, but occurs with some variation in another old poem, intitled "John the Reeve," described in the following volume, (see the Preface to "the King and the Miller," viz.:

"Nay, sayd John, by Gods grace, And Edward wer in this place, Hee shold not touch this tonne: Hee would be wrath with John I hope, Therefore I beasht the soupe, That in his mouth shold come," Pt. 2. st. 24.

The following text is selected (with such other corrections as occurred) from two copies in black letter. The one in the Bodleian library, intitled, "A merrie, pleasant, and delectable historie betweene King Edward the Fourth, and a Tanner of Tamworth, &c. printed at London, by John Danter, 1596." This copy, ancient as it now is, appears to have been modernized and altered at the time it was published; and many vestiges of the more ancient readings were recovered from another copy, (though more recently printed,) in one sheet folio, without date, in the Pepys collection.

But these are both very inferior in point of antiquity to the old Ballad of "The King and the Barker," reprinted with other "Pieces of Ancient Popular Poetry from Authentic Manuscripts, and old Printed Copies, &c. Lond. 1791, 8vo. As that very antique Poem had never occurred to the Editor of the Reliques, till he saw it in the above collection, he now refers the curious Reader to it, as an imperfect and incorrect copy of the old original Ballad.

In summer time, when leaves grow greene,
And blossoms bedecke the tree,
King Edward wolde a hunting ryle,
Some pastime for to see.

With hawke and hounde he made him bowne, 5
With horne, and eke with bowe;
To Drayton Basset he tooke his waye,
With all his lordses a rowe.

And he had ridden ore dale and downe
By eight of clocke in the day,
When he was ware of a bold tanner,
Come ryding along the wyne.

A fayre russett coat the tanner had on Fast buttoned under his chin,
And under him a good cow-hide,
And a mare of four shilling*.

Nowe stand you still, my good lordses all,
Under the grene wood spraye;
And I will wend to yonder fellowe,
To weet what he will saye. 20

God speede, God speedee thee, sayd our king. Thou art welcome, sir, sayd hee.
"TheCatchiest wanye to Drayton Basset I praye thee to shewe to mee." 25
"To Drayton Basset woldat thou goe, Fro the place where thou dost stand? The next payre of gallowes thou comest unto,
'Turne in upon thy right hand." 30

That is an unreadye wanye, sayd our king, Thou dost but jest I see;
Nowe shewe me out the nearest wanye, And I praie the wend with mee.

Awaie with a vengeance! quoth the tanner: I hold thee out of thy witt:
All dayes have I rydden on Brocke my mare, 35
And I am fasting yett.

"Go with me downe to Drayton Basset,
No daynties we will spare;
All daye shalt thou eate and drinke of the best,
And I will paye thy fare."

Gramercye for nothing, the tanner replyde,
Thou payest no fare of mine:
I trowe I have more nobles in my purse,
Than thou hast pence in thine. 40

God give thee joy of them, sayd the king,
And send them well to priewe.
The tanner wolde faune have beeue away,
For he weende he had beene a thieve.

* In the reigne of Edward IV. Dame Cecilli, lady of Torboke, in her will, dated March 7, A.D. 1466, among many other bequests, has this, "Also I will that my sonne Thomas of Torboke have 13s. 4d. to buy him an horse." Vind. Harleian Catalog. 2176. 27.—Now if 13s. 4d. would purchase a steed fit for a person of quality, a Tanner's horse might reasonably be valued at four or five shillings.
What art thou, hee syade, thou fine fellowe,
Of thee I am in great feare,
For the clothes, thou wearest upon thy backe,
Might becomme a lord to weare.

I never stole them, quoth our king,
I tell you, sir, by the roode.
"Then thou playest, as many an unfrith doth, 55
And standest in midde of thy goods?"

What tydinges heare you, sayd the kyng,
As you ryde farre and neare?
"I heare no tydinges, sir, by the masse,
But that cowe-hides are deare."

"Cowe-hides! cowe-hides! what things are those?
I marvell what they be?"
What art thou a foule? the tanner reply'd;
I carry one under mee.

What craftsman art thou, said the king,
I praye thee tell me trowe.
"I am a barked, sir, by my trade;
Nowe tell me what art thou?"

I am a poore courtier, sir, quoth he,
That am forth of service worse;
And faine I wold thee prentise bee,
Thy cunnings for to leare.

Marrie heaven forfend, the tanner replyde,
That thou my prentise were;
Thou woldst spend more good than I solde winne
By fortye shilling a yere.

Yet one thing wold I, sayd our king,
If thou wilt not seeme strange;
Thoghhe my horse be better than thy mare,
Yet with thee I faue wold change.

"Why if with me thou faune wilt change,
As change full well may wee,
By the faith of my bodye, thou proude fellowe,
I will have some boot of thee."

That were against reason, sayd the king,
I swere, so mote I thee:
My horse is better than thy mare,
And that thou well mayst see.

"Yea, sir, but Brocke is gentle and mild,
And softly she will fare:
Thy horse is unrulye and wild, I wiss;
Aye skipping here and there."

What bootes wilt thou have? our king reply'd;
Now tell me in this stound.
"Noe pence, nor half pence, by my faye,
But a noble in gold so round."

"Here's twentye groates of white moneye,
Sith thou wilt have it of mee."
I would have sworne now, quoth the tanner,
Thou ladsad not had one peenny.

But since we two have made a change,
A change we must abide,
Although thou hast gotten Brocke my mare,
Thou gettest not my cow-hide.

I will not have it, sayd the kyng,
I swere, so mote I thee;
Thy foule cowe-hide I wolde not beare,
If thou woldst give it to mee.

The tanner hee tooke his good cowe-hide,
That of the cow was hilt;
And threwe it upon the king's saddelle,
That was soe fayrelye gilt.

"Now help me up, thou fine fellowe,
'Tis time that I were gone:
When I come home to Gyllian my wife,
Sheel say I am a gentleman."

The king he toke him up by the legge;
The tanner a fott fall.
Nowe marrie, good fellowe, sayd the kyng,
Thy courtesye is but small.

When the tanner he was in the kinges saddelle,
And his foote in his stirrup was;
He marvellde greatlie in his minde,
Whether it were golde or brass.

But when his steede saw the cowe tailed wagge,
Eke the blackes cowe-horne;
He stamped, and stared, and awaye he ranne,
As the devil had him borne.

The tanner he pulld, the tanner he sweat,
And held by the pummil fast:
At length the tanner came tumbling downe;
His necke he had well-nye brast.

Take thy horse again with a vengeance, he sayd,
With mee he shall not byde.
"My horse wold have borne thee well enoue,
But he knewe not of thy cowe-hide."

"Yet if agayne thou faune woldst change,
As change full well may wee,
By the faith of my bodye, thou jolly tanner,
I will have some boote of thee."

What bootes wilt thou have, the tanner replyd,
Nowe tell me in this stounde?
"Noye pence nor halfpence, sir, by my faye,
But I will haue twentye pound."

Here's twentye groates out of my purse;
And twentye I have of thine:
And I have one more, which we will spend Together at the wine."

The king set a bugle borne to his mouth,
And blew the loude and shrille:
And soone came lords, and soone came knights,
Fast ryding over the hille.

Nowe, out alas! the tanner he cryde,
That ever I sawe this daye:
Thou art a strong thiefe, you come thy fellowes
Will beare my cowe-hide away.

They are no thieves, the king replyde,
I swere, so mote I thee:
But they are the lords of the north countrey,
Here come to hunt with mee.

* i.e. has no other wealth, but what thou carriest about thee.
† i.e. a dealer in Bark.
And soone before our king they came,
And knelt downe on the grounde:
Then might the tanner have beene awaye,
And had lever than twentie pounde.

A coller, a coller, here: sayd the king,
A coller he loud gan crye:
Then wolde he lever then twentie pound,
He had not beene so nigh.

A coller, a coller, the tanner he sayd,
I trowe it will beed sowre:
After a coller commeth a halter,
I trrow I shall be hang'd to-morrowe.

Be not afraid tanner, said our king;
I tell thee, so mought I thee,
Lo here I make thee the best esquire
That is in the North country*

For Plumpton-parke I will give thee,
With tenements faire beside:
'Tis worth three hundred markes by the yeare,
To maintaine thy good cowe-hide.

Gramereye, my liege, the tanner replyde,
For the favour thou hast me shewne;
If ever thou comest to merry Tamworth,
Neetes leather shall clout thy shoen.

XVI.

AS YE CAME FROM THE HOLY LAND.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN A PILGRIM AND TRAVELLER.

The scene of this song is the same as in Num. XIV. The pilgrimage to Walsingham suggested the plan of many popular pieces. In the Peppys collection, vol. I. p. 226, is a kind of interlude in the old ballad style, of which the first stanza alone is worth reprinting.

As I went to Walsingham,
To the shrine with speede,
Met I with a jolly palmer
In a pilgrimes weede.

Now God you save, you jolly palmer!
"Welcome, lady gay,
Oft have I sued to thee for love."
—Oft have I said you nay.

The pilgrimages undertaken on pretence of religion, were often productive of affairs of gallantry, and led the votaries to no other shrine than that of Venus*. The following ballad was once very popular; it is quoted in Fletcher's "Knight of the burning pestle," Act II. sc. ult. and in another old play, called, "Hans Beer-pot, his invisible Comedy," 4to. 1618: Act I. The copy below was communicated to the Editor by the late Mr. Shenstone as corrected by him from an ancient copy, and supplied with a concluding stanza.

We have placed this, and "Gentle Herdsman," &c. thus early in the works, upon a presumption that they must have been written, if not before the dissolution of the monasteries, yet while the remembrance of them was fresh in the minds of the people.

As ye came from the holy land
Of blessed Walsingham,
O met you not with my true love
As by the way ye came?

"How should I know your true love,
That have met many a one,
As I came from the holy land,
That have both come, and gone?"

My love is neither white*, nor browne,
But as the heavens faire;
There is none hath her form divine,
Either in earth, or ayre.

"Such an one did I meet, good sir,
With an angelike face;
Who like a nympha, a queene appeard
Both in her gait, her grace."

Yes: she hath cleane forsaken me,
And left me all alone;
Who some time loved me as her life,
And called me her owne.

"What is the cause she leaves thee thus,
And a new way doth take,
That some times loved thee as her life,
And thee her joy did make?"

I that loved her all my youth,
Grove old now as you see;
Love liketh not the falling fruite,
Nor yet the withered tree.

For love is like a careless child,
Forgetting promise past:
He is blind, or deaf, wherenoe he list;
His faith is never fast.

His fond desire is fickle found,
And yields a trustlease joye;
Wonne with a world of toll and care,
And lost ev'n with a toye.

* This stanza is restored from a quotation of this Ballad in Selden's "Titles of Honour," who produces it as a good authority to prove, that one mode of creating Esquires at that time, was by the imposition of a collar. His words are, "Nor is that old pamphlet of the tanner of Tamworth and King Edward the Fourth so contemptible, but that wee may thence note also an observable passage, wherein the use of making Esquires, by giving collars, is expressed." (Sub Tit. Esquire; & vide in Spaldmann Glossar. Armiger.) This form of creating Esquires actually exists at this day among the Sergeants at Arms, who are invested with a collar (which they wear on Collar Days) by the King himself. This information I owe to Samuel Pegge, Esq. to whom the Public is indebted for that curious work, the "Curialia," 4to.

† i.e. their.
HARDYKNUTE.

As this fine morsel of heroic poetry hath generally past for ancient, it is here thrown to the end of our earliest pieces; that such as doubt of its age, may the better compare it with other pieces of genuine antiquity. For after all, there is more than reason to suspect, that it owes most of its beauties (if not its whole existence) to the pen of a lady, within the present century. The following particulars may be depended on. Mrs. Wardlaw, whose maiden name was Halket (aunt to the late Sir Peter Halket, of Pitferran, in Scotland, who was killed in America, along with General Bradock, in 1755), pretended she had found this poem, written on shreds of paper, employed for what is called the bottom of clues. A suspicion arose that it was her own composition. Some able judges asserted it to be modern. The lady did in a manner acknowledge it to be so. Being desired to shew an additional stanza, as a proof of this, she produced the two last, beginning with "There's nae light," &c. which were not in the copy that was first printed. The late Lord President Forbes, and Sir Gilbert Elliot, of Minto (late Lord Justice Clerk for Scotland) who had believed it ancient, contributed to the expense of publishing the first Edition, in folio, 1719. This account was transmitted from Scotland by Sir David Dalrymple, the late Lord Hailes, who yet was of opinion, that part of the ballad may be ancient; but retouched and much enlarged by the lady above mentioned. Indeed he had been informed, that the late William Thompson, the Scottish musician, who published the "Orpheus Caledonius," 1733, 2 vols. 8vo. declared he had heard Fragments of it repeated in his infancy, before Mrs. Wardlaw's copy was heard of.

The Poem is here printed from the original Edition, as it was prepared for the press with the additional improvements. (See below, page 116.)

I. STATELY step he east the wa',
   And stately step he west,
Full seventy years he now had seen,
Wi' scarce seven years of rest.
He liv'd when Britons breach of faith
Wrought Scotland mickle wey:
And ay his sword tauld to their cost,
He was their deadly fay.

II. High on a hill his castle stood,
   With ha's and tow'rs a height
And goodly chambers fair to se,
Where he lodged mony a knight.
His dame sae peerless a'es and fair,
For chast and beauty deem'd
Nae marow had in all the land,
Save Elenor the queen.

III. Full thirteen sons to him she bare,
   All men of valour stout:
In bloody fight with sword in hand
Nine lost their lives but doubt:
Four yet remain, lang may they live
To stand by liege and land;
High was their fame, high was their might,
And high was their command.

IV. Great love they bare to Fairly fair
   Their sister saft and dear,
Her girdle shaw'd her middle gimp,
And gowden glist her hair.
What waefu' wae her beauty bred?
Waefu' to young and auld,
Waefu' I trow to kyth and kin,
As story ever tauld.

V. The King of Norse in summer tyle, Puff'd up with pow'r and might,
Landed in fair Scotland the isle
With many a hardy knight.
The tydings to our good Scots king
Came, as he sat at dine,
With noble chiefs in brave array,
Drinking the blood-red wine.

VI. "To horse, to horse, my royal liege,
   Your faes stand on the strand;
Full twenty thousand glittering spears
The King of Norse commands;"
Bring me my steed Mage dapple gray,
Our good king rose and cry'd,
A trustier beast in a' the land
A Scots king nevir try'd.

VII. Go little page, tell Hardyknute,
   That lives on bill sae hie,
To draw his sword, the dread of faes,
And haste and follow me.
The little page flew swift as dart
Flung by his master's arm,
"Come, down, come down, lord Hardyknute,
And rid your king frae harm."

VIII. Then red red grew his dark brown cheeks,
   Sae did his dark-brown brow;
His looks grew keen as they were wont
In dangers great to do;
"* sc. Angels.
He's ta'en a horn as green as glass,
And gien five sounds sae shill,
That trees in green wood shook thereat,
Sae loud rang ilka hill.

ix.
His sons in manly sport and glee,
Had past that summer's morn,
When low down in a grassy dale,
They heard their father's horn.
That horn, quo' they, ne'er sounds in peace,
We've other sport to hide.
And soon they hy'd them up the hill,
And soon were at his side.

"Late late the yestreen I ween'd in peace
To end my lengthened life,
My age might well excuse my arm
Fae manly feats of strife,
But now that Norse do's proudly boast
Fair Scotland to intrall,
It's ne'er be said of Hardyknute,
He fear'd to fight or fall.

xi.
"Robin of Rothsay, bend thy bow,
Thy arrows shoot sae leel,
That mony a comely countenance
They've turned to deadly pale.
Brave Thomas take you but your lance,
You need nae weapons mair,
If you fight wi't as you did anes
'Gainst Westmoreland's fierce heir

xii.
"And Malcolm, light of foot as stag
That runs in forest wild,
Get me my thousands three of men
Well bred to sword and shield:
Bring me my horse and harnisine,
My blade of mettall clear.
If foes but ken'd the hand it bare,
They soon hud fled for fear.

xiii.
"Farewell my dame sae peerless good,
(And took her by the hand),
Fairer to me in age you seem,
Than maids for beauty fam'd
My youngest son shall here remain
'To guard these stately towers,
And shut the silver bolt that keeps Sae fast your painted bowers."

xiv.
And first she wet her comely cheiks,
And then her holdice green,
Her silken cords of twirlte twist,
Well plett with silver sheen;
And apron set with mony a dice
Of needle-work sae rare,
Wove by nae hand, as ye may guess,
Save that of Fairly fair.

xv.
And he has ridden o'er muir and moss,
O'er hills and mony a glen,
When he came to a wounded knight
Making a heavy mane;

"Here maun I lye, here maun I dye,
By treacherie's false guiles;
Witless I was that o'er go faith
To wicked woman's smiles."

xvi.
"Sir knight, gin you were in my bower,
To lean on silken seat,
My lady's kindly care you'd prove,
Who ne'er knew deadly hate.
Herself woul'd watch you a' the day,
Her maids a dead of night;
And Fairly fair your heart wou'd chear,
As she stands in your sight.

xvii.
"Arise young knight, and mount your steed
Full lowns the shymand day
Choose frae my menzie whom ye please
To lead you on the way.
With smileless look, and visage wan
The wounded knight reply'd;
"Kind chieftain, your intent pursue,
For here I maun abye.

xviii.
To me nae after day nor night
Can e're be sweet or fair,
But soon beneath some draping tree
Cauld death shall end my care."
With him nae pleading might prevail;
Brave Hardyknute to gain
With fairest words, and reason strong,
Strave courteously in vain.

xix.
Syne he has gane far bynd out o'er
Lord Chattan's land sae wide;
That lord a worthy wight was ay
When faes his courage sey'd;
Of Pictish race by mother's side,
When Piets rul'd Caledon,
Lord Chattan claim'd the princely maid,
When he sav'd Pictish crown.

xx.
Now with his fierce and stalwart train,
He reach'd a rising hight,
Quhair braid encampit on the dale,
Nors menzie lay in sicht.,
"Yonder my valiant sons and feirs
Our raging reviers wait
On the unconquert Scottish sward
To try with us their fate.

xxi.
Make orisons to him that sav'd
Our sauls upon the rude;
Syne bravely shaw your veins are fill'd
With Caledonian blade.
Then furth he drew his trusty glave,
While thousands all around
Drawn frae their sheaths glace'd in the sun;
And loud the bougles sound.

xxii.
To joynt his king adoun the hill
In hast his merch he made,
While, playand pibrochs, minstralls meit
Afore him stately strade.
"Thrice welcome valiant stoup of weir,
Thy nations shield and pride;
Thy king nae reason has to fear
When thou art by his side."

When bows were bent and darts were thrown;
For thrang a scarce cou'd they see;
The darts clove arrows as they met,
The arrows dart the tree.

Lang did they rage and fight fu' fierce,
With little skaith to mon,
But bloody bloody was the field,
Ere that lang day was done.

The King of Scots, that sindle brook'd
The war that look'd like play,
Drew his braid sword, and brake his bow,
Sin bows seem'd but delay.

Quoth noble Rothsay, "Mine I'll keep,
I wat it's bled a score."

Haste up my merry men, cry'd the king
As he rode on before.

The King of Norse he sought to find,
With him to mense the fight,
But on his forehead there did light
A sharp unsosnie shaft:

As he his hand put up to feel
The wound, an arrow keen,
O waes' chance! there pinn'd his hand
In midst between his e'en.

"Revenge, revenge, cry'd Rothsay's heir,
Your mail-coat sha' na bide
The strength and sharpness of my dart:"
Then sent it through his side.

Another arrow well he mar'd,
It pierc'd his neck in twa,
His hands then quat the silver reins,
He low as earth did fa'.

"Sair bleids my liege, sair, sair he bleeds!"
Again wi' might he drew
And gesture dread his sturdy bow,
Fast the braid arrow flew:

Wae to the knight he ettled at;
Lament now Queen Elgreed;
High dames too wail your darling's fall,
His youth and comely meed.

"Take aff, take aff his costly jupe
(Of gold well was it twain'd),
Knit like the Fowler's net, through quhilk,
His steeely harness shin'd)"

Take, Norse, that gift f're me, and bid
Him venge the blood it bears;
Say, if he face my bend bow,
He sure nae weapon fears."

Proud Norse with giant body tall,
Braid shoulders and arms strong,
Cry'd, "Where is Hardyknute sae fam'd
And fear'd at Britain's throne:

Tho' Britons tremble at his name
I soon shall make him wail,
That e'er my sword was made sae sharp,
Sae saft his coat of mail."

That brag his stout heart cou'd na bide,
It lent him youthfu' might:
"I'm Hardyknute; this day, he cry'd,
To Scotland's king I heght
To lay thee low, as horses hoof;
My word I mean to keep."

Syne with the first stroke e'er he strake,
He garr'd his body bleed.

Noras' een like gray gosheawk's sta ir'd wyd,
He sigh'd wi' shame and spito;
"Disgrac'd is now my far-fam'd arm
That left thee power to strike;"
Then ga' his head a blow sae fell,
It made him down to stoup,
As laigh as he to ladies us'd
In courtly guise to lout.

Fu' soon he rais'd his bent body,
His bow he marvell'd sair,
Sin blows till then on him but darr'd
As touch of Fairly fair;

Norse marvell'd too as sair as he
To see his stately look;
Sae soon as e'er he strake a fae,
Sae soon his life he took.

Where like a fire to heather set
Bauld Thomas did advance,
Ane sturdy fas with look enrag'd
Up toward him did prance;

He spurr'd his steid through thickest ranks
The hardy youth to quell,
Wha stood unmov'd at his approach
His fury to repel.

"That short brown shaft sae meanly trimm'd, sae looks like poor Scotland's gear,
But dreadfull seems the rusty point!"
And loud he leugh in jeir;
"Oft Britons bood has dimm'd its shine;
This point cut short their vaunt:"
Syne pierc'd the boasters bearded cheek
Nae time he took to taunt.

Short while he in his saddle swang,
His stirrup was nae stay,
Sae feeble hang his unbent knee
Sure taiken he was fey;
Swith on the harden't clay he fell,
Right far was heard the thud;
But Thomas look't nae as he lay
All waltering in his blud:

With careless gesture, mind unmov't,
On roade he north the plain;
His seem in throng of fiercest strife,
When winner ay the same:
Not yet his heart dames dimplet cheek
Could mease soft leve to bruike,
Till vengefu' Ann return'd his scorn,
Then languid grew his luik.

In thraws of death, with walowit cheik.
All panting on the plain,
The fainting corps of warrours lay,
Ne're to arise again;
Ne're to return to native land,
Nae mair with blithsome sounds
To boast the glories of the day,
And shaw their shining wounds.

On Norways coast the widowit dame
May wash the rocks with tears,
May lang luik ow'r the shipless seas
Before her mate appears.

Cease, Emma, cease to hope in vain;
Thy lord lies in the clay;
The valiant Scots mae revers thole
To carry life away.

Here on a lee, where stands a cross
Set up for monument,
Thousands fu' beree that summer's day
Fellt'ken war's black intent.

Let Scoots, while Scots, praise Hardyknute,
Let Norse the name ay dread,
Ay how he fought, a'ft how he spar'd
Shall latest ages read.

“Theres nae light in my lady's bower,
Theres nae light in my la';
Nae blink shines round my Fairly fair,
Nor ward stands on my wa’
What bodes it? Robert, Thomas, say;”—
Nae answer fits their dread.
“Stand back, my sons, I'll be your guide?”
But by they past with speed.

“As fast I've sped owre Scaldens faes,—
There ceass'd his brag of weir,
Sair sham'd to mind ought but his dame,
And maiden Fairily fair.
Black fear he felt, but what to fear
He wisst nae yet; wi' dread
Sair shook his body, sair his limbs,
And a' the warrior fled.

* * * * *

In an elegant publication, intituled, "Scottish Tragic Ballads, printed by and for J. Nicholls, 1731, 8vo," may be seen a continuation of the Ballad of Hardyknute, by the addition of a "Second Part," which hath since been acknowledged to be his own composition, by the ingenious Editor—To whom the late Sir D. Dalrymple communicated (subsequent to the account drawn up above in p. 113,) extracts of a letter to Sir John Bruce, of Kinross, to Lord Binning, which plainly proves the pretended discoverer of the fragment of Hardyknute to have been Sir John Bruce himself. His words are, "To perform my promise, I send you a true copy of the Manuscript I found some weeks ago in a vault at Dumferrine. It is written on vellum in a fair Gothic character, but so much defaced by time, as you'll find that the tenth part is not legible." He then gives the whole fragment as it was first published in 1719, in one or two stanzas, marking several passages as having perished by being illegible in the old MS. Hence it appears that Sir John was the author of Hardyknute, but afterwards used Mrs. Wardlaw to be the midwife of his Poetry, and suppressed the story of the vault; as is well observed by the Editor of the Tragi-Comical and of Maitland's Scot. Poets, vol. I. p. xxvii.

This gentleman we are indebted for the use of the copy, whence the second edition was afterwards printed. The same was prepared for the press by John Clerk, M.D. of Edinburgh, an intimate companion of Lord President Forbes.

Stanzas not in the first edition are, Nos. 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 34, 35, 36, 37, 41, 42.

In the present impression the orthography of Dr. Clerk's copy has been preserved, and his readings carefully followed, except in a few instances, wherein the common edition appeared preferable: viz. He had in ver. 20, but,—v. 56, of harm.—v. 64, every.—v. 67, lo down.—v. 83, That omitted.—v. 89, And omitted.—v. 143, With argument but vainly strive Lang.—v. 148, say'd.—v. 153, incampt on the plain.—v. 156, Norse squadrons.—v. 158, regard re- vers.—v. 170, his strides he bent.—v. 171, ministrals play and Pibrochs fine.—v. 172, tately went.—v. 182, mon.—v. 196, sharp and fatal.—v. 219, which,—v. 244, stood wyld.—Stanza 39 preceded stanza 38.—v. 303, That, blew wresting.—v. 336, had originally been, He fear'd a' could be fear'd.

The editor was also informed, on the authority of Dr. David Clerk, M.D. of Edinburgh (son of the aforesaid Dr. John Clerk,) that between the present stanzas 36 and 37, the two following had been intended, but were on maturer consideration omitted, and do not now appear among the MS. additions:

Now darts flew waving through slaw speede,
Scarce could they reach their aim;
Or reach'd, scarce blood the round point drew,
'Twas all but shot in vain:
Righ strengthly arms forfeebled grew,
Sair wreck'd wi' that day's toils:
E'en fierce-born minds now lang'd for peace,
And eur'd war's cruel broils.

Yet still wars horns sounded to charge,
Swords clash'd and harness rang;
But saftly sai'k blaster blew
The hills and dales fraemang.
Nae echo heard in double dints,
Nor the lang-windling horn,
Nae pair she blew out brade as she Did eir that summers morn.

THE END OF THE BOOK THE FIRST.
SERIES THE SECOND.

BOOK II.

A BALLAD OF LUTHER, THE POPE, A CARDINAL, AND A HUSBANDMAN.

In the former Book we brought down this second Series of poems as low as about the middle of the sixteenth century. We now find the Muses deeply engaged in religious controversy. The sudden revolution wrought in the opinions of mankind by the Reformation, is one of the most striking events in the history of the human mind. It could not but engross the attention of every individual in that age, and therefore no other writings would have any chance to be read, but such as related to this grand topic. The alterations made in the established religion by Henry VIII., the sudden changes it underwent in the three succeeding reigns within so short a space as eleven or twelve years, and the violent struggles between expiring Popery and growing Protestantism, could not but interest all mankind. Accordingly every pen was engaged in the dispute. The followers of the Old and New Profession (as they were called) had their respective ballad-makers; and every day produced some popular sonnet for or against the Reformation. The following ballad, and that intituled "Little John Nobody," may serve for specimens of the writings of each party. Both were written in the reign of Edward VI.; and are not the worst that were composed upon the occasion. Controversial divinity is no friend to poetic flights. Yet this ballad of "Luther and the Pope," is not altogether devoid of spirit; it is of the dramatic kind, and the characters are tolerably well sustained; especially that of Luther, which is made to speak in a manner not unbecoming the spirit and courage of that vigorous reformer. It is printed from the original black-letter copy (in the Pepys collection, vol. I. folio,) to which is prefixed a large wooden cut, designed and executed by some eminent master.

We are not to wonder that the ballad-writers of that age should be inspired with the zeal of controversy, when the very stage teemed with polemic divinity. I have now before me two very ancient quarto black-letter plays: the one published in the time of Henry VIII., intituled "Every Man;" the other called "Lusty Juvenis," printed in the reign of Edward VI. In the former of these, occasion is taken to incite great reverence for old mother church and her superstitions*: in the other, the poet, (one R. Weller) with great success attacks both. So that the stage in those days literally was, what wise men have always wished it—a supplement to the pulpit:—this was so much the case, that in the play of "Lusty Juvenis," chapter and verse are everywhere quoted as formally as in a sermon; take an instance:

- The Lord by his prophet Ezechiel sayeth in this wise playnye,
  As in the xxxij chapter it doth appere:
  Be converted, O ye children, &c."

From this play we learn that most of the young people were New Gospellers, or friends to the Reformation, and that the old were tenacious of the doctrines imbibed in their youth: for thus the devil is introduced lamenting the downfall of superstition:

- "The olde people would believe stil in my lawes,
  But the yonger sort leadeth them a contrary way,
  They wyl not believe, they playny say,
  In olde traditions, and made by men, &c.”

And in another place Hypocrisy urges,

- "The worlde was never meri
  Since chyldren were so boulde:
  Now every boy will be a teacher,
  The father a foole, the chyld a preacher.”

Of the plays above mentioned, to the first is subjoined the following, Printer's Colophon, ¶ "Thus endeth this moral playe of Every Man. ¶ Imprinted at London in Powles chyrche yarde by me John Skot." In Mr. Garrick's collection is an imperfect copy of the same play, printed by Richard Pynson.

The other is intituled, "An enterlude called Lusty Juvenis:" and is thus distinguished at the end:

* Take a specimen from his high encomiums on the priesthood.

* There is no emperour, kyng, duke, ne baron
  That of God hath commissyon,
  As hath the leest preest in the world beyng.
A BALLAD OF LUTHER, THE POPE, A CARDINAL, AND A HUSBANDMAN.

"Finis, quod R. Wever. Imprinted at London in Paules churche yeard by Abraham Dele at the signe of the Lambe." Of this too Mr. Garrick has an imperfect copy of a different edition.

Of these two plays the reader may find some further particulars in Series the First, Book II. see "The Essay on the Origin of the English Stage;" and the curious reader will find the plays themselves printed at large in Hawthorne's "Origin of the English Drama," 3 vols. Oxford, 1773, 12mo.

The Husbandman.

LET us lift up our harts all,
And praise the Lordes magnificence,
Which hath given the volues a fall,
And is become our strong defence : 5
For they thorowe a false pretens
From Christes bloudye dyd all us leade*,
Gettinge from every man his pence,
As satisfactours for the deade.

For what we with our Flayles coulde get
To kepe our house, and survauentes
That did the Freers from us fet,
And with our soules played the merchantes :
And thus they with their false warrants
Of our sweate had easelye lyved,
That for fatness theyr belyes pantes,
So gretlye have they us decaued.

They spared not the fatherlesse,
The carefull, nor the pore wydowe ;
They wolde have somewhat more or lesse,
If it above the ground did growe : 20
But now we husbandmen do knowe
Al their subteltye, and theyr false caste ;
For the Lorde hath them overthrove
With his sweate word now at the laste.

Doctor Martin Luther.

Thou antichrist, with thy three crownes,
Has usurped kynges powers, 25
As having power over realms and townes,
Whom thou oughtest to serve all howres
Thou thinkest by thy juggling colours
Thou maist lykewise Gods word oppresse :
As do the deceitfull foulers,
When theyr nettes craftelye dresse.

Thou flatterest every prince, and lord,
Threatingen poore men with swearde and fyre ;
All those, thet do followe Gods worde, 35
To make them cleve to thy desire,
Their bokes thou burnest in flaminge fire ;
Cursing with boke, bell, and candel,
Such as to reade them have desyre,
Or with them are wylynge to meddell.

Thy false power wyly I bryng down,
 Thou shalt not raygne many a yere,
I shall dryve the from citye and towne,
Even with this pen that thou seyste here : 40

* i. e. denud us the Cup, see below, ver. 91.

Thou fyghtest with sword shylde, and speare 45
But I wyll fyght with Gods worde ;
Which is now so open and cleare,
That it shall brynge the under the borde *.

The Pope.

Though I brought never so many to hel,
And to utter damnacon ; 50
Through myne example, and conseil,
Or thorow any abominacion,
Yet doth our lawe excuse my fashion.
And thou, Luther, arte accusd ;
For blamyng me, and my condicion,
The holy decres have the condemned.

Thou stryvest against my purgatory,
Because thou findest it not in scripture ;
As though I by myne auctorite
Might not make one for myne honour. 60
Knowest thou not, that I haue power
To make, and mar, in heaven and hell,
In erson, and every creature ?
Whatoever I do it must be well.

As for scripture, I am above it ;
Am not I Gods hye vicaire ? 65
Shulde I be bounde to followe it,
As the carpenter his ruler ?
Nay, nay, hereticks ye are,
That will not obey my auctorite,
With this sorderby I wyll declare,
That ye shal all accusd be.

The Cardinal.

I am a Cardinall of Rome,
Sent from Christes hye vicary, 75
To graunt pardon to more, and sume,
That will Luther resist strongly :
He is a greate heretick treuly,
And regardeth to much the scripture ;
For he thinketh onely thereby:
To subdue the popes high honoure : 80
Receive ye this pardon devotelye,
And lode that ye agaynst him fight ;
Plucke up your herts, and be manlye,
For the pope sayth ye do but ryght :
And this be sure, that at one flyghte, 85
Although ye be overcome by chaunce,
Ye shall to heaven goe with greate myghte ;
God can make you no resistancce.

But these heretikes for their medlyng,
Shall go down to hel every one ;
For they have not the popes blessyng,
Nor regard his holy pardon : 90
They thynke from all destruction
By Christes bloud to be saved,
Fearnge not our excommunicacion,
Therefore shall they al be dampned.

* i. e. Make thee knock under the table.
† i. e. his rulke.
II.

JOHN ANDERSON MY JO.

A SCOTTISH SONG.

While in England verse was made the vehicle of controversy, and Popery was attacked in it by logical argument, or stinging satire; we may be sure the zeal of the Scottish Reformers would not suffer their pens to be idle, but many a pasquill was discharged at the Romish priests, and their enormous encroachments on property. Of this kind perhaps is the following, (preserved in Maitland’s MS Collection of Scottish poems in the Pepysian Library):

"Tak a Wobster, that is leill,
And a Miller, that will not stell,
With ane Priest, that is not gredy,
And lay ane deid corpse thame by,
And, throw virtue of thame three,
That deid corpse sall qwiknit be."

Thus far all was fair: but the furious hatred of Popery led them to employ their rhymes in a still more licentious manner. It is a received tradition in Scotland, that at the time of the Reformation, ridiculous and obscene songs were composed to be sung by the rabble to the tunes of the most favourite hymns in the Latin service. Green sleeves and pudding pies (designed to ridicule the popish clergy) is said to have been one of these metamorphosed hymns: Maggy Lauder was another: John Anderson my jo was a third. The original music of all these burlesque sonnets was very fine. To give a specimen of their manner, we have inserted one of the least offensive. The Reader will pardon the meanness of the composition for the sake of the anecdote, which strongly marks the spirit of the times.

In the present Edition this song is much improved by some new readings communicated by a friend; who thinks by the "Seven Barns," in st. 2d. are meant the Seven Sacraments; five of which were the spurious offspring of Mother Church: as the first stanza contains a satirical allusion to the luxury of the popish clergy.

The adaptation of solemn church music to these ludicrous pieces, and the jumble of ideas, thereby occasioned, will account for the following fact,—From the Records of the General Assembly in Scotland, called "The Book of the Universal Kirk," p. 90, 7th July, 1568, it appears, that Thomas Bas- sendyne, printer in Edinburgh, printed "a psalme buik, in the end whereof was found prinrit ane baudy sang, called 'Welcome Fortunes'".

WOMAN.

John Anderson my jo, cum in as ze gae bye,
And ze sall get a sheips heid weel baken in a pye;
Weel baken in a pye, and the haggis in a pot;
John Anderson my jo, cum in, and ze's get that.

MAN.

And how doe ze, Cummer? and how hae ze threven?
And how mony barns hae ze? Wom. Cummer, I hae seven.

MAN. Are they to zour awin gude man? Wom. Na,
Cummer, na;
For five of tham were gotten, quhan he was awa.

III.

LITTLE JOHN NOBODY.

We have here a witty libel on the Reformation under King Edward VI. written about the year 1550, and preserved in the Pepys collection, British Museum, and Strype’s Memoirs of Cranmer. The author artfully declines entering into the merits of the cause, and wholly reflects on the lives and actions of many of the reformed. It is so easy to find flaws and imperfections in the conduct of men, even the best of them, and still easier to make general exclamations about the profligacy of the present times, that no great point is gained by arguments of that sort, unless the author could have proved that the principles of the reformed religion had a natural tendency to produce a corruption of manners; whereas he indirectly owns, that their Reverend Father [Archbishop Cranmer] had used the most proper means to stem the torrent, by giving the people access to the Scriptures, by teaching them to pray with understanding, and by publishing homilies, and other religious tracts. It must however be acknowledged, that our libeller had at that time sufficient room for just satire. For under the banners of the reformed had enlisted themselves, many concealed papists, who had private ends to gratify; many that were of no religion; many greedy courtiers, who thirsted after the possessions of the church; and many dissolute persons, who wanted to be exempt from all ecclesiastical censures: and as these men were loudest of all others in their cries for Reformation, so in effect none obstructed the regular progress of it so much, or by their vicious lives brought vexation and shame more on the truly venerable and pious Reformers.

The reader will remark the fondness of our satirist for alliteration: in this he was guilty of no affectation or singularity; his versification is that of Pierce Plowman’s Visions, in which a recurrence of similar letters is essential: to this he has only

* See also Biograph. Brian, Int. edit. vol. i p. 177. superadded rhyme, which in his time began to be the general practice. See an Essay on this very peculiar kind of metre, prefixed to Book III. in this Series.

In december, when the dayes draw to be short,
After novermber, when the nights wax noysome and long ;
As I past by a place privily at a port,
I saw one sit by himself making a song ;
His last * talk of trifles, who told with his tongue
That few were fast i' th' faith. I ' freyned † that freake, [wrong,
Whether he wanted wit, or some had done him
He said, he was little John Nobody, that durst not speake.

John Nobody, quoth I, what news? thou soon note and tell
What maner men thou meane, thou are so mad.
He said, These gay gallants, that wil construe the gospel.
As Solomon the sage, with semblance full sad ;
To discourse divinity they nought adread;
More meet it were for them to milk kye at a fleyke.
Thou lyest, quoth I, thou losel, like a leud lad.
He said he was little John Nobody, that durst not
speake.

Its meet for every man on this matter to talk,
And the glorious gospel ghostly to have in mind ;
It is sothe said, that sect but much unseemly skallk,
As boyes babble in books, that in scripture are blind :
Yet to their fancy soon a cause will find;
As to live in lust, in lechery to leyke:
Such caites count to be come of Cain's kind;‡
But that I little John Nobody durst not speake.

For our reverend father hath set forth an order,
Our service to be said in our seigneurs tongue;
As Solomon the sage set forth the scripture ;
Our suffragges, and services, with many a sweet song,
With homilies, and godly books us among,
That no stiff, stubborn stomacks we should freyke:
But wretches here worse to do poor men wrong;
But that I little John Nobody dare not speake.

For bribery was never so great, since born was our Lord,
And whoredom was never les hated, sith Christ har-
And poor men are so sore punished commonly through the world,
That it would grieve any one, that good is, to hear
For al the homilies and good books, yet their hearts be so que,† [wreak;
That if a man do amisse, with mischiefe they wil him
The fashion of these new fellows it is so vile and fell:
But that I little John Nobody dare not speake.

Thus to live after their lust, that life would they
And in lechery to leyke al their long life; [have,
For al the preaching of Paul, yet many a proud wife
Wil move mischiefe in their mind both to maid and
To bring them in advoutry or else they wil strife,
And in brawling about baudery, Gods commandments breake:
But of these frantic il followes, few of them do
Though I little John Nobody dare not speake.

If thou company with them, they wil curribly carp,
and not care [naught:
According to their foolish fantasy; but fast wil they Prayer with them is but prating; therefore they it forbear: [thought:
Both almes deeds, and holiness, they hate it in their Therefore pray we to that prince, that with his bloud us bought, [freyke:
That he wil mend that is amiss: for many a manful
Is sorry for these sects, though they say little or nought: [speak.
And that I little John Nobody dare not once

Thus in no place, this Nobody, in no time I met,
Where no man, ' ne* nought was, nor nothing did appear;
Through the sound of a synagougue for sorrow I swett,
That ' Aeolus † through the eccho did cause me to heare;
Then I drew me down into a dale, whereas the dumb deer
[freyke:
Did shiver for a shower; but I shutted from a
For I would no wight in this world wist who I were,
But little John Nobody, that dare not once speake.

IV.
QUEEN ELIZABETH'S VERSES, WHILE PRISONER AT WOODSTOCK, WRIT WITH CHARCOAL ON A SHUTTER,
—are preserved by Hentzner, in that part of his Travels, which has been reprinted in so elegant a manner at Strawberry-hill. In Hentzner's book they were wretchedly corrupted, but are here given as amended by his ingenious Editor. The old orthography, and one or two ancient readings of Hentzner's copy are here restored.
On, Fortune! how thy restlessse wavering state
Hath fraught with cares my troubled witt.

* Perhaps He left talk. † feigned MSS. and P. C. ‡ Cain's kind.] So in Pierce the Plowman's creed, the proud friars are said to be,
* Or Caymes kind." Vid. Sig. C. ij. b.

Witness this present prisoner, whither fate
Could bear me, and the joys I quit.
Thou causest least the guiltie to be losted
From bandes, wherein are innocents inclosed:
Causing the guilties to be straitly reserved,
And freeing those that death hath well deserved.
But by her envie can be nothing wroughte,
So God send to my foes all they have thought.
A.D. MDLV.

ELIZABETH, PRISONER.

Ver 4, Could bear, is an ancient idiom, equivalent to Did bear or Hath borne. See below the Beggar Bednal
Green, ver. 57, Could say.
* then, MSS. and PC. † Hercules, MS. and PC.
THE HEIR OF LINNE.

V.

THE HEIR OF LINNE.

The original of this Ballad is found in the Editor's folio MS., the breaches and defects in which, rendered the insertion of supplemental stanzas necessary. These it is hoped the Reader will pardon, as indeed the completion of the story was suggested by a modern ballad on a similar subject. From the Scottish phrases here and there discernible in this poem, it would seem to have been originally composed beyond the Tweed. The Heir of Linne appears not to have been a Lord of Parliament, but a Laird, whose title went along with his estate.

PART THE FIRST.

Linne and listen, gentlemen,
To sing a song I will beginne:
It is of a lord of faire Scotland,
Which was the unthriftie heire of Linne.

His father was a right good lord,
His mother a lady of high degree;
But they, alas! were dead, him free,
And he lov'd keeping company.

To spend the dayes with merry cheere,
To drinke and revell every night,
To card and dice from eve to morn,
It was, I ween, his hearts delightes.

To ride, to runne, to rant, to roare,
To alwaye spend and never spare,
I wott, an' it were the king himselfe,
Of gold and fee he mote be bare.

Soe fares the unthriftie Lord of Linne,
Till all his gold is gone and spent;
And he maun sell his landes so broad,
His house, and landes, and all his rent.

His father had a keen stewarde,
And John o' the Scales was called hee:
But John is become a gentel-man,
And John has gott both gold and fee.

Sayes, Welcome, welcome, Lord of Linne,
Let nought disturb thy merry cheere;
If thou wilt sell thy landes soe broad,
Good store of gold Ile give thee heere.

My gold is gone, my money is spent,
My lande nowe take it unto thee:
Give me the golde, good John o' the Scales,
And thine for aye my lande shall bee.

Then John he did him to record draw,
And John he cast him a godd-pennie*;
But for every pounde that John agreed,
The lande, I wis, was well worth three.

He told him the gold upon the borde,
He was right glad his land to winne;
The gold is thine, the land is mine,
And now Ile be the Lord of Linne.

Thus he hath sold his land soe broad,
Both hill and holt, and moore and fenne,
All but a poore and lonesome lodge,
That stood far off in a lonely glenne.

For soe he to his father hight,
My sonne, when I am gone, sayd hee,
Then thou wilt spend thy lande so broad,
And thou wilt spend thy gold so free:

But saue hee me nowe upon the roode,
That lonesome lodge thou'lt never spend;
For when all the world doth frown on thee,
Thou there shal find a faithful freind.

The heire of Linne is full of golde:
And come with me, my frends, sayd hee,
Let's drinke, and rant, and merry make,
And he that spares, ne'er mote he thee.

They ranted, drank, and merry made,
Till all his gold it waxed thinne;
And then his frends they slunk away;
They left the unthriftie heire of Linne.

He had never a penny left in his purse,
Never a penny left but three,
And one was brass, another was lead,
And another it was white money.

Nowe well-aday, sayd the heire of Linne,
Nowe well-adays, and woe is mee,
For when I was the Lord of Linne,
I never wanted gold nor fee.

But many a trustye frend have I,
And why shold I feel dole or care?
Ile borrow of them all by turnes,
Soo neeed I not be never bare.

But one, I wis, was not at home;
Another had payd his gold away;
Another call'd him thriftless loone,
And bade him sharply wend his way.

Now well-aday, sayd the heire of Linne,
Now well-aday, and woe is mee;
For when I had my landes so broad,
On me they liv'd right merrie.

To beg my bread from door to door
I wis, it were a brening shame:
To rob and steal it were a sinne:
To worke my limbs I cannot frame.

---

* A earnest-money : from the French ' Dener et Dieu.' At this day, when application is made to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle to accept an exchange of the tenant under one of their leases, a piece of silver is presented by the new tenant, which is still called a God's-penny.
Now Ile away to lonesome lodge,
For there my father bade me wend:
When all the world should frown on mee
I there should find a trusty friend.

PART THE SECOND.
Away then hyed the heire of Linne
Oer hill and holt, and moor and fenne,
Untill he came to lonesome lodge,
That stood so lowe in a lonely gleene.

He looked up, he looked downe,
In hope some comfort for to winne:
But bare and lonly were the walles.
Here's sorry cheare, quo' the heire of Linne.

The little windowe dim and darke
Was hung with ivy, breere, and yewe;
No shimmering sunne here ever shone;
No halesome breeze here ever blew.

No chair, ne table he mote spyre,
No carefull hearth, ne welcome bed,
Nought save a rope with renning noose,
That dangling hung up o'er his head.

And over it in broad letters,
These words were written so plain to see:
"Ah! gracelesse wretch, hast spent thine all
And brought thyselfe to penury!"

"All this my boding mind misgave,
I therefore left this trusty friend:
Let it now sheeld thy foule disgrace,
And all thy shame and sorrows end."

Sorely shent wi' this rebuke,
Sorely shent was the heire of Linne;
His heart, I wis, was neer to brast
With guilt and sorrowe, shame and sinne.

Never a word spake the heire of Linne,
Never a word he spake but three:
"This is a trusty friend indeed,
And is right welcome unto mee."

Then round his necke the corde he drewe,
And sprang aloft with his bodie:
When lo! the ceiling burst in twaine,
And to the ground come tumbling hee.

Astonyed lay the heire of Linne,
Ne knew he if he were live or dead:
At length he looked, and save a bille,
And in it a key of golde so redd.

He took the bill, and looke it on,
Strait good comfort found he there:
Itt told him of a hole in the wall,
In which there stood three cheasts in-fere*.

Two were full of the beaten golde,
The third was full of white mony;
And over them in broad letters
These words were written so plaine to see:

"Once more, my sonne, I sette thee clere;
Amend thy life and follies past;
For but thou amend thee of thy life,
That rope must be thy end at last."

And let it bee, sayd the heire of Linne;
And let it bee, but if I amend*.
For here I will make mine awow,
This reade † shall guide me to the end."

Away then went with a merry cheere,
Away then went the heire of Linne;
I wis, he neither ceas'd ne blanne,
Till John o' the Scales house he did winne.

And when he came to John o' the Scales,
Upp at the spere ‡ then looked bee;
There sate three lords upon a rowe,
Were drinking of the wine so free.

And John himself sate at the bord-head,
Because now lord of Linne was hee;
I pray thee, he said, good John o' the Scales,
One forty pence for to lend mee.

Away, away, thou thriftlesse loone;
Away, away, this may not bee;
For Christ's curse on my head, he sayd,
If ever I trust thee one pennie.

Then bespake the heire of Linne,
To John o' the Scales wife then spake he:
Madame, some almes on me bestowe,
I pray for sweet saint Charitie.

Away, away, thou thriftlesse loone,
I swear thou gettest no almes of mee;
For if we shold hang any losel heere,
The first we wold begin with thee.

Then bespake a good followe,
Which sat at John o' the Scales his bord;
Sayd, Turn againe, thou heire of Linne;
Some time thou wast a well good lord:

Some time a good fellow thou hast been
And sparedst not thy gold and fee;
Therefore Ile lend thee forty pence
And other forty if need bee.

And ever, I pray thee, John o' the Scales,
To let him sit in thy companie:
For well I wot thou hast his land,
And a good bargain it was to thee.

Up then spake him John o' the Scales,
All wood he answer'd him againe:
Now Christ's curse on my head, he sayd,
But I did lose by that bargain.

And here I proffer thee, heire of Linne,
Before these lords so faire and free,
Thou shalt have it backe again better cheape,
By a hundred markes, then I had of thee.

Ver. 60, an old northern phrase.
* i. e. unless I amend.
† i. e. advice, counsel.
‡ Perhaps the Hole in the door or window, by which it was speered, i. e. spared, fastened, or shut—In Bale's 2d Part of the Acts of Eng. Votaries, we have this phrase, (fol. 88.) "The dore thereof oft tymes opened and speered agayne."
GASCOIGNE'S PRAISE OF THE FAIR BRIDGES.

I drawe you to record, lords, he said.
With that he cast him a gods penny.
Now by my fay, sayd the heire of Linne,
And here, good John, is thy money.

And he pull'd forth three bagges of gold,
And laddy them down upon the bord:
All woe begone was John o' the Scales,
Soe shent he cold say never a word.

He told him forth the good red gold,
He told it forth mickle dinne.
The gold is thine, the land is mine,
And now Ime againe the Lord of Linne.

Sayes, Have thou here, thou good fellowe,
Forty pence thou didst lend mee:
Now I am againe the Lord of Linne,
And forty pounds I will give thee.

Ile make the keeper of my forrest,
Both of the wild deere and the tame;
For but I reward thy bounteous heart,
I wis, good fellowe, I were to blame.

Now welladay! sayth Joan o' the Scales.
Now welladay! and woe is my life!
Yesterday I was Lady of Linne,
Now Ime but John o' the Scales his wife.

Now fare thee well, sayd the heire of Linne; 125
Farewell now, John o' the Scales, said hee:
Christ's curse light on me, if ever again
I bring my hands in jeopardy.

†† In the present edition of this ballad several ancient readings are restored from the folio MS.

VI.

GASCOIGNE'S PRAISE OF THE FAIR BRIDGES, AFTERWARDS LADY SANDIES, ON HER HAVING A SCAR IN HER FOREHEAD.

George Gascoigne was a celebrated poet in the early part of Queen Elizabeth's reign, and appears to great advantage among the miscellaneous writers of that age. He was author of three or four plays, and of many smaller poems; one of the most remarkable of which is a satire in blank verse, called the "Steele-glass," 1576, 4to.

Gascoigne was born in Essex, educated in both universities, whence he removed to Gray's-inn; but, disliking the study of the law, became first a dangler at court, and afterwards a soldier in the wars of the Low Countries. He had no great success in any of these pursuits, as appears from a poem of his, intituled, "Gascoigne's Wodmanship, written to Lord Gray of Wilton." Many of his epistles dedicatory are dated in 1575, 1576, from "his poore house in Walthamstoe:" where he died a middle-aged man in 1578, according to Anth. Wood: or rather in 1577, if he is the person meant in an old tract, intituled, "A Remembrance of the well employed life and godly end of George Gascoigne, Esq. who deceased at Stamford in Lincolnshire, Oct. 7, 1577, by Geo. Whetstone, Gent. an eye-witness of his godly and charitable end in this world," 4to. no date.—[From a MS. of Oldys.]

Mr. Thomas Warton thinks "Gascoigne has much exceeded all the poets of his age, in smoothness and harmony of versification." But the truth is, scarce any of the earlier poets of Queen Elizabeth's time are found deficient in harmony and smoothness, though those qualities appear so rare in the writings of their successors. In the "Paradise of Dainty Devises:" (the Dodaley's Miscellany of those times) will hardly be found one rough, or inharmonious line: whereas the numbers of Jonson Donne, and most of their contemporaries, frequently offend the ear, like the filing of a saw.—Perhaps this is in some measure to be accounted for from the growing pedantry of that age, and from the writers affecting to run their lines into one another after the manner of the Latin and Greek poets.

The following poem (which the elegant writer above quoted hath recommended to notice, as possessed of a delicacy rarely to be seen in that early state of our poetry), properly consists of alexandrines of twelve and fourteen syllables, and is printed from two quarto black-letter collections of Gascoigne's pieces; the first intituled, "A hundred sundrie flowers, bounde up in one small posie, &c. London, printed for Richarde Smith:" without date, but from a letter of H. W. (p. 202.) compared with the printer's epist. to the reader, it appears to have been published in 1572, or 3. The other is intituled, "The Posies of George Gascoigne, Esq. corrected, perfected, and augmented by the author, 1575—Printed at London, for Richard Smith, &c." No year, but the epist. dedicat. is dated 1576.

In the title page of this last (by way of printer's or bookseller's device) is an ornamental wooden cut, tolerably well executed, wherein Time is represented drawing the figure of Truth out of a pit or cavern, with this legend, "Occulta veritus tempore patet" [n. s.] This is mentioned because it is not improbable but the accidental sight of this or some other title page containing the same device, suggested to Rubens that well-known design of a similar kind, which he has introduced into the Luxembourg gallery, and which has been so justly censured for the unnatural manner of its execution.

* The same is true of most of the poems in the "Mirrour of Magistrates," 1563, 4to, and also of "Surrey's Poems," 1557.
† Henrie Binneman.
‡ Le Tems decouvre la Verite.
In court whose demandes
What dame doth most excell;
For my conceit I must needs say,
Fair Bridges bear the bel.

Upon whose lively cheeke,
To prove my judgment true,
The rose and lillie seeme to strive
For equall change of hewe:

And therewithall so well
Hir graces all agree;
No frowning cheere dare once presume
In hir sweet face to bee.

Although some lavish lippes,
Which like some other best,
Will say, the blenishe on hir browe
Disgraceth all the rest.

Thereto I thus replie;
God wotte, they little knowe
The hidden cause of that mishap,
Nor how the harm did growe:

For when dame Nature first
Had framde hir heavenly face,
And thoroughly bedecked it
With goodly gleames of grace;

It lyked hir so well:
Lo here, quod she, a peace
For perfect shape, that passeth all
Appelles' worke in Greece.

This bayt may chauce to catche
The greatest God of love,
Or mightie thundring Jove himself,
That rules the roost above.

But out, alas! those wordes
Were vaunted all in vayne:
And some unseen wer present there,
Pore Bridges, to thy pain.

For Cupide, crafty boy,
Close in a corner stooed,
Not blundfold then, to gaze on hir:
I gesse it did him good.

Yet when he felt the flame
Gan kindle in his brest,
And herd dame Nature boast by hir
To break him of his rest.

His hot newe-chosen love
He changed into hate,
And sodeynly with mightie mace
Gan rap hir on the pate.

It greeved Nature muche
To see the cruel deede:
Mee seemes I see hir, how she wept
To see hir deareling bleede.

Wel yet, quod she, this hurt
Shal have some helpe I trowe:
And quick with skin she coverd it,
That whiter is than snowe.

Wherwith Dan Cupide fled,
For feare of further flame,
When angel-like he saw hir shine,
Whome he had smit with shame.

Lo, thus was Bridges hurt
In cruel of hir kind.
The coward Cupide brake hir browe
To wreke his wounded mynd.

The skar still there remains;
No force, there let it bee:
There is no cloude that can eclipse
So bright a sunne, as she.

 The lady here celebrated was Catharine, daughter of Edmond second Lord Chandos, wife of
i. p. 133, ed. 1779.

VII

FAIR ROSAMOND.

Most of the circumstances in this popular story of King Henry II, and the beautiful Rosamond have been taken for fact by our English Historians; who, unable to account for the unnatural conduct of Queen Eleanor in stimulating her sons to rebellion, have attributed it to jealousy, and supposed that Henry's amour with Rosamond was the object of that passion.

Our old English annalists seem, most of them, to have followed Higden the monk of Chester, whose account, with some enlargements, is thus given by Stow. "Rosamond the fayre daughter of Walter Lord Clifford, concubine to Henry II. (poisoned by Queen Eleanor, as some thought) dyed at Wood-stocke [A. D. 1177.] where King Henry had made for her a house of wonderfull working; so that no man or woman might come to her, but he that was instructed by the King, or such as were right secret with him touching the matter. This house after some was named Labyrinthus, or Dedalus worke, which was wrought like unto a knot in a garden, called a Maze*; but it was commonly said, that lastly the Queene came to her by a clue of thriddle, or silke, and so dealt with her, that she lived not long after; but when she was dead, she was buried at Godstow in an house of nunnes, beside Oxford, with these verses upon her tombe:

"Hic jacit in tumbeb, Rosa mundi, non Rosa munda:
Non redeo, sed olet, quae redolere solet"

Ver. 62. In cradel of hir'kind; i. e. in the cradle of * Consisting of vaults under ground, arched and walled with brick and stone, according to Drayton. See note on his Epistle of Rosamond.
"In English thus:

"The rose of the world, but not the cleanse flowre,
Is now here graven; to whom beauty was lent:
In this grave full darke nowe is her bowre,
That by her life was sweete and redolent:
But now that she is from this life blent,
Though she were sweete, now fouly doth she stinke.
A mirrour good for all men, that on her thinke."

Stowe's Annals, ed. 1631, p. 154.

How the queen gained admittance into Rosamond's bower is differently related. Holinshed speaks of it, as "the common report of the people, that the queene ... founde hir out by a silken thread, which the king had drawne after him out of his chamber with his foot, and dealt with hir in such sharpe and cruel wise, that she lived not long after." Vol. III, p. 115.

On the other hand, in Speede's Hist. we are told that the jealous queen found her out "by a clew of silke, fallen from Rosamund's lappe, as shee sate to take ayre, and suddenly fleeing from the sight of the searcher, the end of her silke fastened to her foot, and the clew still unwinding, remained behinde: which the queene followed, till shee had found what she sought, and upon Rosamund so vented her spleene, as the lady lived not long after." 3d. edit. p. 509.

Our ballad-maker with more ingenuity, and probably as much truth, tells us the clue was gained by surprise, from the knight, who was left to guard her bower.

It is observable, that none of the old writers attribute Rosamond's death to poison, (Stowe, above, mentions it merely as a slight conjecture;) they only give us to understand, that the queen treated her harshly; with furious menaces, we may suppose, and sharp expostulations, which had such effect on her spirits, that she did not long survive it. Indeed on her tomb-stone, as we learn from a person of credit, among other fine sculptures, is engraven the figure of a cup. This, which perhaps at first was an accidental ornament, (perhaps only the Chalice) might in after-times suggest the notion that she was poisoned; at least this construction was put upon it, when the stone came to be demolished after the nunney was dissolved. The account is, that "the tombstone of Rosamund Clifford was taken up at Godstow, and broken in pieces, and that upon it were interchangeable weavings drawn out and decked with roses red and green, and the picture of the cup, out of which she drank the poison given her by the queen, carved in stone."

Rosamond's father having been a great benefactor to the nunery of Godstow, where she had also resided herself in the innocent part of her life, her body was conveyed there, and buried in the middle of the choir; in which place it remained till the year 1191, when Hugh bishop of Lincoln caused it to be removed. The fact is recorded by Hovedon, a contemporary writer, whose words are thus translated by Stowe: "Hugh bishop of Lincolne came to the abbey of nunnys, called Godstow, ... and when he had entred the church to pray, he saw a tomb in the middle of the quire, covered with a pell of silke, and set about with lights of waxe: and demanding whose tomb it was, he was answered, that it was the tomb of Rosamond, that was some time temman to Henry II. ... who for the love of her had done much good to that church. Then quoth the bishop, take out of this place the harlot, and bury her without the church, lest Christian religion should grow in contempt, and to the end that, through the example of her, other women being made afraid may berewe, and keepem themselves from unlawfull and advoutorous company with men." Annals, p. 159.

History farther informs us, that the king John repaired Godstow nunney, and endowed it with yearly revenues, "that these holy virgins might relieve with their prayers, the soules of his father King Henrie, and of Lady Rosamund there interred."

... In what situation her remains were found at the dissolution of the nunery, we learn from Leand, "Rosamundes tumbe at Godstowne nunrye was taken up [of] late; it is a stone with this inscription, TUMBA ROSAMUNDE. Her bones were closed in lede, and withyn that bones were closed yn lede. When it was opened a very sweete smell came owt of it." See Hearne's discourse above quoted, written in 1718; at which time he tells us, were still seen by the pool at Woodstock the foundations of a very large building, which were believed to be the remains of Rosamond's labyrinthe.

To conclude this (perhaps too prolix) account, Henry had two sons by Rosamond, from a computa

 Vid. Reign of Henry II. in Speed's History, writings by Dr. Barcham, Dean of Bocking.

[This would have passed for miraculous, if it had happened in the tomb of any clerical person, and a proof of his being a saint.]

When as King Henry rulde this land,
The second of that name,
Besides the queene, he dearly lovde
A faire and comely dame.

Most peerlesse was her beautye founde,
Her favour, and her face;
A sweeter creature in this worlde
Could never prince embrac.

Her crised lockes like threads of golde
Apperled to each mans sight;
Her sparkling eyes, like Orient pearles,
Did cast a heavenlye light.

The blood within her crystal cheekes
Did such a colour drive,
As though the lillye and the rose
For mastership did strive.

Yea Rosamonde, fair Rosamonde,
Her name was called so,
To whom our queene, dame Ellinor,
Was known a deadlye foe.

The king therefore, for her defence,
Against the furious queene,
At Woodstocke builted such a bower,
The like was never seene.

Most curiously that bower was built
Of stone and timber strong,
An hundered and fiftye doors
Did to this bower belong:

And they so cunninglye contriv’d
With turnings round about,
That none but with a clee of thread,
Could enter in or out.

And for his love and ladies sake,
That was so faire and brighte,
The keeping of this bower he gave
Unto a valiant knighte.

But fortune, that doth often frowne
Where she before did smile,
The kingses delighte and ladies joy
Full soon shee did beguile:

For why, the kingses ungracious sonne,
Whom he did high advance,
Against his father raunced warres
Within the realme of France.

But yet before our comelye king
The English land forsooke,
Of Rosamonde, his lady faire,
His fairewelle thus he tooke:

"My Rosamonde, my only Rose,
That pleases best mine eye:
The fairest flower in all the worlde
To feed my fantasye:

The flower of mine affected heart
Whose sweetness doth excelle
My royal Rose, a thousand times
I bid thee nowe farwelle!

For I must leave my fairest flower,
My sweetest Rose, a space,
And cross the seas to famous France,
Proud rebels to abase.

But yet, my Rose, be sure thou shalt
My coming shortlye see,
And in my heart, when hence I am,
Ile beare my Rose with mee."

When Rosamond, that ladye brighte,
Did heare the king saye soe,
The sorrowe of her grieved heart
Her outward lookes did shewe;

And from her cleare and crystal eyes
The teares gusht out space,
Which like the silver-peard dewe
Ranne down her comelye face.

Her lippes, erst like the corall reede,
Did waxe both wan and pale,
And for the sorrow she conceiv’d
Her vitall spirits faile;

And falling down all in a swoone
Before king Henryes face,
Full oft he in his princelye armes
Her bodye did embrac:

And twentye times, with waterye eyes,
He kist her tender cheeke,
Until he had revivde agayne
Her senses milde and meeke.

Why grieues my Rose, my sweetest Rose?
The king did often say.
Because, quoth shee, to bloodye warres
My lord must part awaye.

But since your grace on forrayne coastes
Amonge your foes unkinde
Must goe to hazarde life and limb,
Why should I staye behinde?

Nay rather, let me, like a page,
Your sworde and target beare,
That on my breast the blowes may lighte,
Which would offend you there.

Or let mee, in your royal tent,
Prepare your bed at nighte,
And with sweete baths refresh your grace,
At your returne from fighte.

So I your presence may enjoy
No toil I will refuse;
But wanting you, my life is death:
Nay, death if rather ch.

[1175.] Elect. in Episc. Lincoln, 28th Henry II.
[1182.] "Vit. Chron. de Kirkstall, (Domitian XII.)
Drake's Hist. of York, p. 422.
The Ballad of Fair Rosamond appears to have been first published in "Strange Histories or Songs and Sonnets, of Kings, Princes, Dukees, Lords, Ladies,
Knights, and Gentlemen. &c. By Thomas Delone.
Lond. 1612." It is now printed (with conjectural emendations) from four ancient copies in black-letter; two of them in the Pepys library.
"Content thy self, my dearest love; Thy rest at home shall bee In Englands sweet and pleasant isle; For travell fits not thee.

Faire ladies brooke not bloodye warres; Soft peace their sexe delights: 'Not rugged camps, but courteyse bowres; Gay feastes, nor cruell fights.'

My Rose shall safely here abide, With musick pass the day; Whilst I, amonge the piercing pikes, My foes seeks far awaye.

My Rose shall shine in pearle, and golde, Whilst Ime in armourd righte; Gay galliards here my love shall dance, Whilst I my foes goe fighter.

And you, Sir Thomas, whom I truste To bee my loves defence; Be careful of my gallant Rose When I am parted hence."

And therewithall he fetcht a sigh, As though his heart would breake:
And Rosamonde, for very griefe, Not one plaine word could speake.

And at their parting well they mighte In heart be grieved more: After that daye faire Rosamonde The king did see no more.

For when his grace had past the seas, And into France was gone; With envious heart, Queene Ellinor, To Woodstocke came anone.

And forth she calls this trustyse knighte In an unhappy houre; Who with his clew of twined thread, Came from this famous bower.

And when that they had wounded him, The queene this thread did gette, And went where ladye Rosamonde Was like an angell sette.

But when the queene with stedfast eye Beheld her beauteous face, She was amazed in her minde At her exceeding grace.

Cast off from thee those robes, she said, That riche and costlye bee, And drinke thou up this deadlye draught, Which I have brought to thee.

Then presentlie upon her knees Sweet Rosamonde did crye; And pardon of the queene she crav'd For her offences all."

"Take pitty on my youthfull yeares, Faire Rosamonde did crye; And let me not with poison stronge Enforced bee to dye.

I will renounce my sinfull life, And in some cloyster bide; Or else be banisht, if you please, To range the world seoe wide.

And for the fault which I have done, Though I was for'd theretoe, Preserve my life, and punish me As you thinke meet to doe."

And with these words, her lillie handes She wrunge full ofte there; And downe along her lovely face Did trickle many a teare.

But nothing could this furious queene In Therewith appenssed bee; The cup of deadly poysen stronge, As she knelt on her knee, Shee gave this comelye dame to drinke; Who tooke it in her hand, And from her bended knee arose, And on her feet did stand: And casting up her eyes to heaven, Shee did for mercy calle; And drinking up the poison stronge, Her life she lost withalle.

And when that death through everye limbe Had showde its greatest spite, Her chiefest foes did plaine confess Shee was a glorious wight.

Her body then they did entomb, When life was fled away, At Godstowe, neare to Oxford towne, As may be seene this day.

VIII.

QUEEN ELEANOR'S CONFESSION.

"Eleanor, the daughter and heiress of William duke of Guine, and count of Poictou, had been married sixteen years to Louis VII, king of France, and had attended him in a croisade, which that monarch commanded against the infidels; but having lost the affections of her husband, and even fallen un-
QUEEN ELEANOR'S CONFESSION.

that time but in his nineteenth year, neither discouraged by the disparity of age, nor by the reports of Eleanor's gallantry, made such successful courtship to that princess, that he married her six weeks after her divorce, and got possession of all her dominions as a dowery. A marriage thus founded upon interest was not likely to be very happy: it happened accordingly. Eleanor, who had disgraced her first husband by her gallantries, was no less offensive to her second by her jealousy: thus carrying to extremity, in the different parts of her life, every circumstance of female weakness. She had several sons by Henry, whom she spirited up to rebel against him; and endeavouring to escape to them disguised in man's apparel in 1173, she was discovered and thrown into a confinement, which seems to have continued till the death of her husband in 1189. She however survived him many years; dying in 1204, in the sixth year of the reign of her youngest son, John." See Hume's History, 4to. vol. I. pp. 260, 507. Speed, Stowe. &c.

It is needless to observe that the following ballad (given, with some corrections, from an old printed copy) is altogether fabulous; whatever gallantries
Eleanor encouraged in the time of her first husband, none are imputed to her in that of her second.

QUEEN Eleanor was a sick woman,
And afraid that she should dye;
Then she sent for two fryars of France
To spake with her speedilye.

The king calld downe his nobles all,
By one, by two, by three; 5
"Earl marshall, Ile goe shrieve the queene,
And thou shalt wend with mee."

A boone, a boone; quoth earl marshall,
And fell on his bended knee;
That whatsoever Queen Eleanor saye,
No barme thereof may bee.

Ile pawne my landes, the king then cryd,
My sceptre, crowne, and all,
That whatsoever Queen Eleanor sayes
No barme thereof shall fall.

Do thou put on a fryars coat,
And Ile put on another;
And we will to Queen Eleanor goe
Like fryr and his brother.

Thus both attired then they goe:
When they came to Whitehall,
The bells did ring, and the quiristers sing,
And the torches did light they all.

When that they came before the queene
They fell on their bended knee;
A boone, a boone, our gracious queene,
That you sent so hostile.

Are you two fryars of France, she sayd,
As I suppose you bee?
But if you are two English fryars,
You shall hang on the gallowes tree.

We are two fryars of France, they sayd,
As you suppose we bee,
We have not been at any masse
Sith we came from the sea.

The first vile thing that ever I did
I will to you unfold;
Earl marshall had my maidenhead,
Beneath this cloth of golde.

That's a vile sinne, then sayd the king;
May God forgive it thee!
Amen, amen, quoth earl marshall;
With a heavy heart spake hee.

The next vile thing that ever I did,
To you Ile not denye;
I made a boxe of payson strong,
To poison King Henrye.

That's a vile sinne, then sayd the king;
May God forgive it thee!
Amen, amen, quoth earl marshall;
And I wish it so may bee.

The next vile thing that ever I did,
To you will I discover;
I payscened fair Rosamonde,
All in fair Woodstocke bower.

That's a vile sinne, then sayd the king;
May God forgive it thee!
Amen, amen, quoth earl marshall;
And I wish it so may bee.

Do you see yonders little boye,
A tossing of the balle?
That is earl marshalls eldest sonne,
And I love him the best of all.

Do you see yonders little boye,
A catching of the balle?
That is king Henryes youngest sonne
And I love him the worst of all.

His head is fashyon'd like a bul;
His nose is like a boare.
No matter for that, king Henry cryd,
I love him the better therfore

The king pulled off his fryars coate,
And appeared all in redde:
She shrieked, and cryd, and wrung her hands, 75
And sayd she was betrayde.

The king lookt over his left shoulder,
And a grimme look looked hee,
Earl marshall, he sayd, but for my oathe
Or hanged thou shouldst bee.

Ver. 63, 67. She means that the eldest of these two was by the Earl Marshall, the youngest by the king
IX.

THE STURDY ROCK.

This poem, subscribed M. T. [perhaps inverted for T. Marshall] is preserved in "The Paradise of daintie Devises," quoted above in page 123. The two first stanzas may be found accompanied with musical notes in "An Howres Recreation in Musick," &c. by Richard Alison, Lond. 1606, 4to; usually bound up with three or four sets of "Madrigals set to Music by Thomas Weelkes, Lond. 1597, 1600, 1608, 4to." One of these madrigals is so complete an example of the Bathos that I cannot forbear presenting it to the reader.

Thule, the period of cosmography,
Doth vaunt of Hecke, whose sulphureous fire
Doth melt the frozen clime, and thaw the skie,
Trinacrian Ætna's flames ascend not hier.

These things seeme wondrous, yet more wondrous I,
Whose heart with fear doth freeze, with love doth fry.

The Andelusian merchant, that returns
Laden with cutchinelle and china dishes,
Reports in Spaine, how strangely Fogo burns
Amidst an ocean full of flying fishes:

These things seeme wondrous, yet more wondrous I,
Whose heart with fear doth freeze, with love doth fry.

Mr. Weelkes seems to have been of opinion with many of his brethren of later times, that nonsense was best adapted to display the powers of musical composure.

The sturdy rock for all his strength
By raging seas is rent in twaine:
The marble stone is pearst at length,
With little drops of drizzling rain:

The ox doth yeld unto the yoke,
The steele obeyeth the hammer stroke.

The stately stagge, that seemes so stout,
By yalping hounds at bay is set:
The swiftest bird, that flies about,
Is caught at length in fowler's net:
The greatest fish, in deepest brooke,
Is soon deceived by subtill hooke.

Yea man himselfe, unto whose will
All things are bounden to obey,
For all his wit and worthie skill,
Doth fade at length and fall away.
There is nothing but time doeth waste;
The heavens, the earth consume at last.

But vertue sits triumphing still
Upon the throne of glorious fame:
Though spitefull death sans body kill,
Yet hurts he not his vertuous name:
By life or death what so betides,
The state of vertue never slides.

X.

THE BEGGAR'S DAUGHTER OF BEDNALL-GREEN.

This popular old ballad was written in the reign of Elizabeth, as appears not only from ver. 23, where the arms of England are called the "Queenes arms;" but from its tune's being quoted in other old pieces, written in her time. See the ballad on "Mary Ambree," in this work. The late Mr. Guthrie assured the editor, that he had formerly seen another old song on the same subject, composed in a different measure from this; which was truly beautiful, if he may judge from the only stanza he remembered. In this it was said of the old beggar, that "down his neck his reverend locks

In comelye curls did wave;
And on his aged temples grewe
The blossomes of the grave."

The following Ballad is chiefly given from the Editor's folio MS. compared with two ancient printed copies: the concluding stanzas, which contain the old Beggar's discovery of himself, are not however given from any of these, being very different from those of the vulgar ballad. Nor yet does the Editor offer them as genuine, but as a modern attempt to remove the absurdities and inconsistencies, which so remarkably prevailed in this part of the song, as it stood before: whereas, by the alteration of a few lines, the story is rendered much more affecting, and is reconciled to probability and true history. For this informs us, that at the decisive battle of Evesham, (fought August 4, 1265,) when Simon de Montfort, the great Earl of Leicester, was slain at the head of the barons, his eldest son, Henry, fell by his side, and, in consequence of that defeat, his whole family sunk for ever, the king bestowing their great honours and possessions on his second son, Edmund, Earl of Lancaster.

PART THE FIRST.

ITT was a blind beggar, had long lost his sight,
He had a faire daughter of bewty most bright:
And many a gallant brave suiter had she,
For none was so comely and prettie Bessee.

* Vid. Athen. Ox. p. 162, 316.
And though shee was of favor most faire, 5
Yett seeing shee was but a poor beggars heyre
Of ancynt housekeepers despised was shee,
Whose sonnes came as suitors to prettie Bessee.

Wherefore in great sorrow faire Bessy did say,
Good father, and mother, let me goe away
To seeke out my fortune, whatever it be.
This suite then they granted to prettie Bessee.

Then Bessy, that was of betwyte soe bright,
All clad in gray russett, and late in the night
From father and mother alone parted shee;
Who sighed and sobbed for prettie Bessee.

Shee went till shee came to Stratford-le-Bow;
Then knew shee not whither, nor which way to goe;
With teares shee lamented her hard destinie,
So sadd and soe heavy was prettie Bessee.

Shee had not been there a month to an end,
But master and mistres and all was her friend:
And every brave gallant, that once did her see,
Was straight-way enamourd of prettie Bessee.

Great gifts they did send her of silver and gold,
And in their songs daylhye her love was extold;
Her betwyte was blazed in every degree;
Soe faire and soe comelye was prettie Bessee.

The young men of Rumford in her had their joy,
Shee shewed herselfe curteous, and modestlye caye;
And at her commandment still wold they bee;
Soo faire and soo comelye was prettie Bessee.

Foure suitors att once unto her did goe;
They craved her favor, but still shee sayd noe;
I wold not wish gentles to marry with mee.
Yett ever they honored prettie Bessee.

The first of them was a gallant young knight,
And he came unto her disguise in the night,
The second a gentleman of good degree,
Who wookd and sued for prettie Bessee.

A merchant of London, whose wealth was not small,
He was the third suiter, and proper withall:
Her masters own sonne the fourth man must bee,
Who swore he would dye for prettie Bessee.

And, if thou wilt marry with mee, quoth the knight,
Ile make thee a lady with joy and delight;
My hart’s so enthralled by thy betwyte,
That soone I shall dye for prettie Bessee.

The gentleman sayd, Come, marry with mee,
As fine as a ladye my Bessy shal bee:
My life is distressed: O heare me, quoth hee;
And grant me thy love, my prettie Bessee.

Let me bee thy husband, the merchant cold say,
Thou shalt live in London both gallant and gay;
My shippes shall bring home rych jewelles for thee,
And I will for ever love prettie Bessee.

Then Bessy shee sighed, and thus shee did say,
My father and mother I meane to obey;
First gett there good will, and be faithfull to mee,
And you shall enjoye your prettie Bessee.

To every one this answer shee made,
Wherefore unto her they joyfullye sayd,
This thing to fullfill wee all doe agree;
But where dwells thy father, my prettie Bessee?

My father, shee sayd, is soone to be seen:
The seely blind beggar of Bednall-green,
That daylhye sits begging for charitie,
He is the good father of prettie Bessee.

His markes and his tokens are known very well;
He alwayes is led with a dogg and a bell:
A seely olde man, God knoweth, is hee,
Yett hee is the father of prettie Bessee.

Nay then, quoth the merchant, thou art not for mee:
Nor, quoth the innholder, my wife thou shal bee:
I lothe, sayd the gentle, a beggars degree,
And therefore, adewe, my prettie Bessee!

Why then, quoth the knight, hap better or worse,
I woughte not true love by the weight of the purse,
And betwyte is betwyte in every degree;
Then welcome unto me, my prettie Bessee.

With thee to thy father forthwith I will goe.
Nay soft, quoth his kinsmen, it must not be soe;
A poor beggars daughter noe ladye shall bee,
Then take thy adew of prettie Bessee.

But soone after this, by breake of the day
The knight had from Rumford stole Bessy away.
90
The younge men of Rumford, as thicke might bee,
Rode after to feith agreeyn prettie Bessee.

As swifte as the wnde to ryde they were seen,
Untill they came neare unto Bednall-green;
And as the knight lighted most courteslye
They all fought against him for prettie Bessee.

But rescue came speedilye over the plaine,
Or else the young knight for his love had been slaine.
This fray being ended, then straitwaye he see
His kinsmen come rayling at prettie Bessee.

Then spake the blind beggar, Although I bee poore,
Yett rayle not against my child at my own doore:
Though shee be not decked in velvet and pearle,
Yett will I dropp angels with you for my girle.

And then, if my gold may better her birth,
And equall the gold that you lay on the earth,
Then neyther rayle nor grudge you to see
The blind beggars daughter a lady to bee.

But first you shall promise, and have it well knowne,
The gold that you drop all shall be your owne.
With that they replied, Contented bee wee.
Then here’s, quoth the beggar for prettie Bessee.

With that an angell he cast on the ground,
And dropped in angels full three thousand pound;
And oftentimes it was proved most plaine,
For the gentlemens one the beggar dropt twayne:

* In the Editor’s folio MS. it is 50L.
THE BEGGAR'S DAUGHTER OF BEDNALL-GREEN.

Soo that the place, wherein they did sit,
With gold it was covered every whit.
The gentlemen then having dropt all their store,
Said, now, beggar, bold, for we have noe more.

They had noe sooner these pleasant words spoke,
But in comes the beggar clad in a silke close;
A faire velvet capp, and a fether had hee,
And now a musician forsooth he wold bee.

He had a dainty lute under his arme,
He touched the strings, which made such a charmee,
Said, please you to heare any musicke of mee,
He sing you a song of pretty Bessee.

With that his lute he twanged straightaway,
And thereon begun to sweetlye to play;
And after that lessons were playd two or three,
He strun'd out this song most delicatellye.

"A poore beggars daughter did dwell on a greene,
Who for her faireness might well be a queene;"
A blithe bonny lasses, and a daintye was shee,
And many one called her pretty Bessee.

"Her father hee had noe goods, nor noe land,
But beggd for a penny all day with his hand;
And yet to her marriage he gave thousands three," 55
And still he hath somewhat for pretty Bessee.

"And if any one here her birth doe disdaine,
Her father is ready, with might and with maine,
To proove shee is come of noble degree:
Therfore never flout att prettye Bessee."

With that the lords and the companye round
With harty laughter were tendye to swound;
Att last said the lords, Full well wee may see,
The bride and the beggar's behoulden to thee.

On this the bride all blushing did rise,
The pearle droppings standing within her faire eyes,
O pardon my father, grave nobles, quoth shee,
That through the blind affection thus dotche on mee.

If this be thy father, the nobles did say,
Well may he be proud of this happy day;
Yett by his countenance well may wee see,
His birth and his fortune did never agree;

And therefore, blind man, we pray thee bewray,
(And looke that the truth thou to us doe say)
Thy birth and thy parentage, what itt may bee;
For the love that thou bestreast to prettye Bessee.

"Then give me leave, nobles and gentle, each one,
One song more to sing, and then I have done;
And if that itt may not winn good report,
Then doe not give me a groat for my sport.

[Sir Simon de Montfort my subject shal be;
Once chiefe of all the great barons was hee,
Yet fortune so cruelle this lorde did abase,
Now loste and forgotten are hee and his race.

"When the barons in armes did King Henrye oppose,
Sir Simon de Montfort their leader they chose;" 86
A leader of courage undaunted was hee,
And oft-times he made his enemies flee.

"At length in the battle on Eyeshame plaines
The barons were routed, and Montfort was slain;
Moste fatall that battel did provey to thee,
Thought thou wast not borne then, my prettye Bessee!"

* See an Essay on the word Fit at the end of the Second Part.
"Along with the nobles, that fell at that tyde,
His eldest son Henry, who fought by his side,
Was felon by a blowe, he receiv'd in the fight! 95
A blowe that deprive him for ever of sight.

"Among the dead bodies all lifelesse he laye,
Till evening drewe on of the following daye,
When by a yong ladye discoverd was hee;
And this was thy mother my prettie Bessee! 100

"A barons faire daughter stept forth in the nighte,
To search for her father, who fell in the fight,
And seeing yong Montfort, where gasping he laye,
Was moved with pitye, and brought him awaye.

"In secrette she nursed him, and swaged his paine, 105
While he throughghe the realme was beleived to be slaine:
At length his faire bride she consented to bee,
And made him glad father of prettie Bessee.

"And nowe lest ourse foes our lives sholde betraye,
We clothed ourselves in beggars arraye; 110
Her jwelles shee solde, and hither came wee:
All our comfort and care was our prettie Bessee."

"And here have wee lived in fortunes despite,
Though poore, yet contented with humkle delighte:
Full forty winters thus have I beene
A silly blind beggar of Bednall-green.

"And here, noble lordes, is ended the song
Of one, that once to your own ranke did belong:
And thus have you learned a secrette from mee,
That ne'er had beene knowne, but for prettie Bessee."

Now when the faire companye everye one,
Had heard the strange tale in the song he had showne,
They all were amazed, as well they might bee,
Both at the blinde beggar, and prettie Bessee.

With that the faire bride they all did embrace,
Saying, Sure thou art come of an honourable race,
Thy father likewise is of noble degree,
And thou art well worthy a lady to bee.

Thus was the feast ended with joye and delighte,
A bridgemoome most happy then was the young knighte,
In joy and felicite long lived hee,
All with his faire laidy, the prettie Bessee.

* * *

** The word fit for part, often occurs in our ancient ballads and metrical romances; which being divided into several parts for the convenience of singing them at public entertainments, were in the intervals of the feast sung by fits, or intermissions. So Puttenham in his Art of English Poesie, 1589, says, "the Epithalamie was divided by breaches into three partes to serve for three several fits, or times to be sung." p. 41.

From the same writer we learn some curious particulars relative to the state of ballad-singing in that age, that will throw light on the present subject: speaking of the quick returns of one manner of tune in the short measures used by common rhymers; these, he says, "*glut the care, unless it be in small and popular musickes, sung by these Cantanbanguie upon benches and barrels heads, where they have none other audience then boys or country fellowes, that passe by them in the streete; or else by blind hurpers, or such like taverne Ministrels, that gave a fit of mirth for a great...their matter being for the most part stories of old time, as the tale of Sir Topas, the reportes of Bevis of Southampton, Guy of Warwick, Adam Bell and Cymme of the Clough, and such other old romances or historical rimes, made purposely for recreation of the common people at Christmass dinner and brideales, and in tavernes and alehous, and such other places of base sorte." p. 69.

This species of entertainment which seems to have been handed down from the ancient bards, was in the time of Puttenham falling into neglect; but that it was not, even then, wholly excluded more genteel assemblies, he gives us room to infer from another passage, "We ourselves," says this courtly* writer, "have written for pleasure a little briefe romance, or historical ditty in the English tong of the Isle of Great Britaine in short and long metrisses, and by breaches or divisions [i. e. fits] to be more commodiously sung to the harpe in places of assembly, where the company shall be desirous to heare of old adventures, and valunces of noble knights in times past, as are those of King Arthur and his knigthes of the Round Table, Sir Berys of Southampton, Guy of Warwick and others like." p. 33.

In more ancient times no grand scene of festivity was complete without one of these reciters to entertain the company with feats of arms, and tales of knighthood, or, as one of these old minstrels says, in the beginning of an ancient romance on Guy and Colbronde, in the Editor's folio MS.

"When meate and drinke is great playetye,
And lords and ladies still will bee,
And sitt and solace + lythe;
Then itt is time for mee to speake
Of keene knigthes, and kempes great,
Such carping for to kythe."

If we consider that a groot in the age of Elizabeth was more than equivalent to a shilling now, we shall find that the old hurpers were even then, when their art was on the decline, upon a far more reputable footing than the ballad-singers of our time. The reciting of one such ballad as this of the Beggar of Bednall-green, in two parts, was rewarded with half a crown of our money. And that they made a very respectable appearance, we may learn from the dress of the old beggar, in the preceding ballad, p. 131, where he comes into company in the habit and character of one of these minstrels, being not known to be the bride's father, till after her speech, ver. 63. The exordium of his song, and his claiming a groat for his reward, ver. 80, are peculiarly characteristic of that profession.—Most of the old ballads begin in a pompous manner, in order to captivate the attention of the audience, and induce them to purchase a recital of the song; and they seldom conclude the first part without large promises of still greater entertainment in the second. This was a necessary piece of art to incline the hearers to be at the expense of a second groot's-worth.—Many of the old

* He was one of Queen Elizabeth's gent. pensioners, at a time when the whole band consisted of men of distinguished birth and fortune. Vid. Ath. Ox. 1. Perhaps "lythe."
romances extend to eight or nine fits, which would afford a considerable profit to the reciter.

To return to the word fit; it seems at one time to have peculiarly signified the pause, or breathing-time, between the several parts (answering to "passus" in the visions of Pierce Plowman): thus in the ancient ballad of "Chevy-Chace," (P. 3,) the first Part ends with this line,

"The first fit here I fynde:" i. e. here I come to the first pause or intermission. (See also p. 5.) By degrees it came to signify the whole part or division preceding the pause. (See the concluding verses of the first and second parts of "Adam Bell, Clym of the Clough, and William of Cloudesly," in this work.) This sense it had obtained so early as the time of Chaucer: who thus concludes the first part of his rhyme of Sir Thopas (writ in ridicule of the old ballad romances):

"Lo! lordis mine, here is a fitt; If ye woll not any more of it, To tell it woll I fonde."

The word fit indeed appears originally to have signified a poetic strain, verse, or poem: for in these senses it is used by the Anglo-Saxon writers. Thus King Ælfred in his Boethius, having given a version of lib. 3, metr. 5, adds, Dæn þirim tæ ðær þær ritæ ærunʒen hæ þæ þæt ritæ verse. 65, i. e. "When wisdom had sung these [fits] verses." And in the Proem to the same book Fon on ritæ, "Put into [fit] verse." So in Cedmon, p. 45. From on ritæ, seems to mean "composed a song," or "poem."—The reader will trace this old Saxon phrase, in the application of the word fond, in the foregoing passage of Chaucer. See Gloss.

Spenser has used the word fit to denote "a strain of music:" see his poem entitled, "Collin Clout's come home again," where he says,

The Shepherd of the ocean [Sir Walt. Raleigh] Provoked me to play some pleasant fit.

And when he heard the music which I made He found himselfe full greatye pleas'd at it, &c.

It is also used in the old ballad of King Estmere, p. 16, v. 243.

From being applied to music, this word was easily transferred to dancing; thus in the old play of "Lusty Juventus" (described in p. 117.), JVentus says,

By the masse I would fayne go daunce a fitte.

And from being used as a part or division in a ballad, poem, &c. it is applied by Dale to a section or chapter in a book, (though I believe in a sense of ridicule or sarcasm,) for thus he entitles two chapters of his "English Dotayres," part 2, viz—fol. 49, "The first fytte of Anselme with Kyngge Wylym Rufus."—fol. 50, "An other fytte of Anselme with Kyngge Wylym Rufus."

XI.

FANCY AND DESIRE.

BY THE EARL OF OXFORD.

Edward Vere, Earl of Oxford, was in high fame for his poetical talents in the reign of Elizabeth; perhaps it is no injury to his reputation that few of his compositions are preserved for the inspection of impartial posterity. To gratify curiosity, we have inserted a sonnet of his, which is quoted with great encomiums for its "excellency and wit," in Puttenham's "Arte of Eng. Poesie," and found entire in the "Garland of Good-will." A few more of his sonnets (distinguished by the initial letters E. O.) may be seen in the "Paradise of Dainty Devises." One of these is entitled, "The Complaint of a Lover, wearing blacke and tawnie." The only lines in it worth notice are these,

A crowne of baies shall that man beare Who triumphs over me; For black and tawnie will I weare, Which mourning colours be.

We find in Hall's Chronicle, that when Queen Catharine of Arragon died, Jan 8, 1556; "Queen Anne [Bullen] ware yellowe for the mourning." And when this unfortunate princess lost her head, May 19, the same year, "on the ascencion day following, the kyng for mourning ware whyte," Fol. 227, 228.

Edward, who was the seventeenth Earl of Oxford, of the family of Vere, succeeded his father in his title and honours in 1562, and died an aged man in 1604. See Mr. Walpole's Noble Authors. Athen. Oxon.

Come hither shepherd's swaye:
"Sir, what do you require?"
I pray thee, shewe to me thy name.
My name is "Fond Desire."

When wert thou borne, Desire?
"In pomp and pryme of may."
By whom, sweet boy, wert thou begot?
"By fond Conceit men say."

Tell me, who was thy nurse?
"Fresh Youth in sugred joy."
What was thy meat and dainty foodes?
"Sad sighes with great annoy."

What hadst thou then to drinke?
"Unsavoury lovers teares."
What cradle wert thou rocked in?
"In hope devoyde of fears."

What lullid thee then asleepe?
"Sweete speech, which likes me best."
Tell me, where is thy dwelling place?
"In gentle hartes I rest."
What thing doth please thee most?
"To gaze on beauty stille."
Whom dost thou think to be thy foe?
"Disdayn of my good will."

Doth company displease?
"Yes, surelye, many one."
Where doth Desire delights to live?
"He loves to live alone.

Doth either tyme or age
Bring him unto decaye?
"No, no, Desire both lives and dyes
"Ten thousand times a daye."

Then, fond Desire, farewell,
Thou art no mate for mee;
I sholde be lothe, methinkes, to dwelle
With such a one as thee.

---

SIR ANDREW BARTON.

I cannot give a better relation of the fact, which is the subject of the following ballad, than in an extract from the late Mr. Guthrie’s Peerage; which was begun upon a very elegant plan, but never finished. Vol. I. 4to. p. 32.

"The transactions which did the greatest honour to the Earl of Surrey* and his family at this time [A.D. 1514.] was their behaviour in the case of Barton, a Scotch sea-officer. This gentleman’s father having suffered by sea from the Portugese, he had obtained letters of marque for his two sons to make reprisals upon the subjects of Portugal. It is extremely probable, that the court of Scotland granted these letters with no very honest intention. The council board of England, at which the Earl of Surrey held the chief place, was daily pestered with complaints from the sailors and merchants, that Barton, who was called Sir Andrew Barton, under pretence of searching for Portugese goods, interrupted the English navigation. Henry’s situation at that time rendered him backward from breaking with Scotland, so that their complaints were but coldly received. The Earl of Surrey, however, could not smother his indignation, but, gallantly declared at the council board, that while he had an estate that could furnish out a ship, or a son that was capable of commanding one, the narrow seas should not be infested.

"Sir Andrew Barton, who commanded the two Scotch ships, had the reputation of being one of the ablest sea officers of his time. By his depredations, he had amassed great wealth, and his ships were very richly laden. Henry, notwithstanding his situation, could not refuse the generous offer made by the Earl of Surrey. Two ships were immediately fitted out, and put to sea with letters of marque, under his two sons, Sir Thomas* and Sir Edward Howard. After encountering a great deal of foul weather, Sir Thomas came up with the Lion, which was commanded by Sir Andrew Barton in person; and Sir Edward came up with the Union, Barton’s other ship, [called by Hall, the Bark of Scotland.] The engagement which ensued was extremely obstinate on both sides; but at last the fortune of the Howards prevailed. Sir Andrew was killed fighting bravely, and encouraging his men with his whistle, to hold out to the last; and the two Scotch ships with their crews, were carried into the River Thames. [Aug. 2, 1514.]

This exploit had the more merit, as the two English commanders were in a manner volunteers in the service, by their father’s order. But it seems to have laid the foundation of Sir Edward’s fortune; for, on the 7th of April 1512, the king constituted him (according to Dugdale) admiral of England, Wales, &c.

"King James ‘insisted’ upon satisfaction for the death of Barton, and capture of his ship: ‘though’ Henry had generously dismissed the crews, and even agreed that the parties accused might appear in his courts of admiralty by their attorneys, to vindicate themselves.” This affair was in a great measure the cause of the battle of Flodden, in which James IV. lost his life.

In the following ballad will be found perhaps some few deviations from the truth of history: to atone for which it has probably recorded many lesser facts, which history hath not condescended to relate. I take many of the little circumstances of the story to be real, because I find one of the most unlikely to be not very remote from the truth. In Part 2, v. 156, it is said, that England laid before “but two ships of war.” Now the “Great Harry” had been built only seven years before, viz. in 1504: which “was properly speaking the first ship in the English navy. Before this period, when the prince wanted a fleet, he had no other expedient but hiring ships from the merchants.” Hume.

This Ballad, which appears to have been written in the reign of Elizabeth, has received great improvements from the Editor’s folio MS, wherein was an ancient copy, which though very incorrect, seemed in many respects superior to the common ballad; the latter being evidently modernized and abridged from it. The following text is however in some places amended and improved by the latter (chiefly from a black-letter copy in the Pepys collection), as also by conjecture.

THE FIRST PART.

"When Flora with her fragrant flowers
Bedezeth the earth so trim and gaye,
And Neptune with his dainty showers
Came to present the month of Maye*;"

King Henrye rode to take the ayre,
Over the river of Thames past hee;
When eighty merchants of London came,
And downe they knelt upon their knee.

---

* From the pr. copy.
"O ye are welcome, rich merchants; Good saylors, welcome unto mee."

They swore by the rood, they were saylors good, But rich merchants they could not bee:

"To France nor Flandres dare we pass:
Nor Bourdeaux voyage dare we fare;
And all for a rover that lyes on the seas,
Who robs us of our merchant ware."

King Henrye frownd, and turned him rounde, And swore by the Lord, that was mickle of might, "I thought he had not beene in the world, Durst have wrought England such unright." The merchants sighed, and said, alas!

And thus did they their answer frame,
He is a proud Scott, that robs on the seas, And Sir Andrewe Barton is his name.

The king lookt over his left shoulder, And an angrely look then looked hee: "Have I never a lorde in all my realme, Will feitch yond traytor unto mee?"

Yes, that dare I; Lord Howard sayes; Yes, that dare I with heart and hand;
If it please you: grace to give me leave,
Myselfe will be the only man.

Thou art but yong; the kyng replied: Yond Scott hath numbred manye a yeare.

"Trust me, my liege, Ile make him quail, Or before my prince I will never appeare."

Then bowemen and gunners thou shalt have, And chuse them over my realme so free; Besides good mariners, and shipp-boyes, To guide the great shipp on the sea.

The first man, that Lord Howard chose, Was the ablest gunner in all the realme, Though he was three score yeeres and ten;
Good Peter Simon was his name.

Peter, saie hee, I must to the sea, To bring home a traytor live or dead:
Before all others I have chosen thee;
Of a hundred gunners to be the head.

If you, my lord, have chosen mee Of a hundred gunners to be the head, Then hang me up on your maine-mast tree, If I miss my marke one shilling bread.

My lord then chose a boweman raw, "Whose active hands had gained fame in Yorkshire was this gentleman borne, And William Horseley was his name."

Horseley, sayde he, I must with speede Go seek a traytor on the sea, And now of a hundred bowemen brave; To be the head I have chosen thee.

If you, quoth hee, have chosen mee Of a hundred bowemen to be the head; On your maine-mast Ile hanged hee, If I misst twelscroscope one penny bread.

With pikes and gunnes, and bowemen bold, This noble Howard is gone to the sea; With a valiant heart and a pleasant cheare, Out at Thames mouth sayled he.

And days he scant had sayled three,
Upon the 'voyage,' he tooke in hand, But there he mett with a noble shipp, And stoutely made itt stay and stand.

Thou must tell me, Lord Howard said,
Now who thou art, and what's thy name; And shewe me where thy dwelling is:
And whither bound, and whence thou came.

My name is Henry Hunt, quoth hee With a heavye heart, and a careful mind; I and my shipp doe both belong To the Newcastle, that stands upon Tyne.

Hast thou not heard, nowe, Henrye Hunt, As thou hast sayled by daye and by night, Of a Scottish rover on the seas; Men call him Sir Andrew Barton, knight?

Then ever he sighed, and sayd alas! With a grieved mind, and well away! But over-well I knowe that wight, I was his prisoner yesterday.

As I was saying uppon the sea, A Burdeaux voyage for to fare; To his hach-borde he clasped me, And robl me of all my merchant ware:

And mickle debts, God wot, I owe, And every man will have his owne;
And I am nowe to London bounde, Of our gracious king to beg a boone.

That shall not need, Lord Howard saies; Let me but once that robber see,
For every penny tane thee froe It shall be doubled shillings three,

Nowe, God fore fend, the merchant said, That you should seek soe far amisse! God kepe you out of that traitors hands! Full lite ye wott what a man hee is.

Hec is brasse within, and steelle without, With beames on his topcastle stronge; And eighteen pieces of ordinance He carries on each side along;

And he hath a pinnace deerly yeight, St. Andrews crosse that is his guide; His pinnace beareth nimescore men, And fifteen canons on each side.

Were ye twentye shippes, and he but one; I sweare by kirke, and bower, and hall;
He wold overcome them everyone, If once his beames they doe downe fall*.

Ver. 70, Journey, MS. V. 91. The MS. has here Arch- borde, but in Part II. ver. 5, Hachborde.
* It should seem from hence, that before our marine artil- lery was brought to its present perfection, some naval com- manders had recourse to instruments or machines, similar in use, though perhaps unlike in construction, to the heavy Dolphins made of lead or iron used by the ancient Greeks; which they suspended from beams or yards fastened to the mast, and which they precipitately let fall on the enemies' ships, in order to sink them, by beating holes through the bottoms of their undecked Triremes, or otherwise damaging them. These are mentioned by Thucydides, lib. 7, p. 256, Ed. 1564, folio, and are more fully explained in Scheffer de Militis Navali, lib. 5, cap. 5, p. 136, Ed. 1653, etc.
N.B. It every where in the MS. seems to be written Beane.
This is cold comfort, sais my lord,
To wellcome a stranger thus to the sea;
Yet Ile bring him and his shipp to shore,
Or to Scotland hee shall carry mee.

Then a noble gunner you must have,
And he must aim well with his ee,
And sink his pinnaece into the sea,
Or else hee never orecome will bee:
And if you chance his shipp to borde,
This counsel I must give withall,
Let no man to his topcastle goe
To strive to let his beams downe fall.

And seven pieces of ordinance,
I pray your honour lend to mee,
On each side of my shipp along,
And I will lead you on the sea.
A glasse Ile set, that may be seene,
Whether you sayle by day or night;
And to-morrow, I swear, by nine of the clocke
You shall meet with Sir Andrew Barton knight.

THE SECOND PART.

The merchant sett my lorde a glasse
Soe well apparent in his sight;
And on the morrowe, by nine of the clocke.
He shewed him Sir Andrew Barton knight.
His hachebord it was ' gilt' with gold,
Soe deelye dight it dazzled the ee:
Nowe by my faith, Lord Howarde sais,
This is a gellant sight to see.

Take in your ancients, standards eke,
So close that no man may theem see;
And put me forth a white willowe wand,
As merchants use to sayle the sea.
But they stirred neither top, nor mast *;
Sotuly they past Sir Andrew by.
What English churles are yonder, he sayd,
That can see little curtseye?

Now by the roode, three yeares and more
I have beene admirall over the sea;
And never an English nor Portingall
Without my leave can passe this way.
Then called he forth his stout pinnaece:
"Fetch backe yond pedlars nowe to mee;
I swearde by the masse, yeo English churles
Shall all hang att my maine-mast tree."

With that the pinnaece itt shott off,
Full well Lord Howard might it ken;
For itt stroke down my lorde's fore mast,
And killed fourteen of his men.
Come hither, Simon, sayes my lord,
Looke that thy word be true, thou said;
For at my maine-mast thou shall hang,
If thou misse thy marke one shilling bread.

Simon was old, but his heart itt was bold,
His ordinance he laid right lowe;
He put in chaine full nine yarde long,
With other great shott lesse, and noe;
And he lette goe his great gunnes shott:
Soe well he settled itt with his ee,
The first sight that Sir Andrew sawe,
He see his pinnace sunke in the see.

And when he saw his pinnace sunke,
Lord, how his heart with rage did swell!
"Nowe cutt my ropes, itt is time to be gon;
Ile fetch yond pedlars backe myself,"
When my Lorde saw Sir Andrewe loose,
Within his heart hee was full faire.
"Nowe spread your ancients, strike up drummes,
Sound all your trumpets out amaine."

Fight on, my men, Sir Andrewe sais,
Weele howsoever this geere will sway;
Itt is my lord admirall of England,
Is come to seeke mee on the sea.
Simon had a sonne, who shott right well,
That did Sir Andrewe mickle scare;
In att his decke he gave a shott,
Killed threescore of his men of warre.

Then Henry Hunt with rigour bitt
Came bravely on the other side,
Soone he drove downe his fore-mast tree,
And killed fourscore men beside.
Nowe, out alas! Sir Andrewe cried,
What may a man now thinke, or say?
Yonder merchant theefe, that pierceth mee,
He was my prisoner yesterday.

Come hither to me, thou Gordon good,
That aye wast readye att my call;
I will give thee three hundred markes,
If thou wilt let my beames downe fall.
Lord Howard thee then calld in haste,
"Horselie see thou be true in stead;
For thou shalt at the maine-mast hang,
If thou misse twelvescore one penny bread.

Then Gordon swarved the maine-mast tree,
He swarved it with might and maine,
But Horselie with a bearing arrowe,
Stroke the Gordon through the braine;
And he fell unto the haches again,
And sore his deadly wounde did bleede:
Then word went through Sir Andrews men,
How that the Gordon hee was dead.

Come hither to mee, James Hamilton,
Thou art my only sisters sonne,
If thou wilt let my beames downe fall,
Six hundred nobles thou hast wonne.
With that he swarved the maine-mast tree,
He swarved it with nimble art;
But Horselie with a broad arrowe
Pierced the Hamilton thorough the heart:

And downe he fell upon the deck,
That with his blood did stremme amaine
Then every Scott cryed, Well-away!
Alas a comely youth is slaine!
All woe begone was Sir Andrew then,
With griefe and rage his heart did swell:
"Go fetch me forth my armour of profe,
For I will to the topecastle myself."
"Goe fetch me forth my armour of profe;
That gilded is with gold soc cleare:
God be with my brother John of Barton!
Against the Portingalls hoe it ware;

Ver. 5, 'hached with gold;' MS. V. 35, i. e. discharged with shot.
* i. e. did not salute.

Ver. 67, 94, pounds, MS. V. 75, bearing, sc. that carries well, &c. But see Gloss.
And when he had on this armour of proove,
He was a gallant sight to see:
Ah! nere didst thou meet with living wight,
My deere brother, could cope with thee."

Come hither Horseley, says my lord,
And looke your shaft that itt goe right,
Shoot a good shoote in time of need,
And for it thou shalt be made a knight.
Ile shoot my best, quoth Horseley then,
Your honour shall see, with might and maine;
But if I were hanged at your maine-mast,
I have now left but arrowes twaine.

Sir Andrew he did swarve the tree,
With right good will he swarved then:
Upon his breast did Horseley hit,
But the arrow bounded back a gen.
Then Horseley spied a privye place
With a perfect eye in a secreete part;
Under the spoile of his right arm
He smote Sir Andrew to the heart.

"Fight on, my men, Sir Andrew sayes,
A little Ine hurt, but yett not slaine;
Ile but lye downe and bleedle a while,
And then Ile rise and fight againe."

"Fight on, my men, Sir Andrew sayes,
And never finche before the foe;
And stand fast by Sir Andrewes crosse,
Untill you hear my whistle blowe."

They never heard his whistle blowe,—
Which made their hearts waxe sore adread:
Then Horseley sayd, Aboard, my lord,
For well I wott Sir Andrewes dead.
They boarded then his noble shipp,
They boarded it with might and maine;
Eighteen score Scots alive they found,
The rest were either maiamed or slaine.

Lord Howard took a sword in hand,
And off he smote Sir Andrewes head,
"I must have left England many a daye,
If thou wert alive as thou art dead."
He caused his body to be cast
Over the hatchbord into the sea,
And about his middle three hundred crownes:
"Wherefore thou land this will bury thee."

Thus from the warres Lord Howard came,
And backe he sayled ore the maine,
With mickle joye and triumphing
Into Thames mouth he came againe.

Lord Howard then a letter wrote,
And sealed it with seale and ring;
"Such a noble prize have I brought to your grace
As never did subject to a king:
Sir Andrewes shipp I bring with mee;
A braver shipp was never none:
Nowe hath your grace two shippes of warr,
Before in England was but one."
King Henryes grace with royall cheere
Welcomed the noble Howard home,
And where, sayd he, is this rover stout,
That I mysselfe may give the doome?

"The rover, he is safe, my leige,
Full many a fadom in the sea;
If he were alive as he is dead,
I must have left England many a day:
And your grace may thank four men i' the ship
For the victory wee have wonne,
These are William Horseley, Henry Hunt,
And Peter Simon, and his sonne."

To Henry Hunt, the king then sayd,
In lieu of what was from thee tane,
A noble a day now thou shalt have,
Sir Andrewes jewels and his chayne.
And Horseley thou shalt be a knight,
And lands and livings shalt have store;
Howard shall be Erle Surrye bight,
As Howards erst have beene before.

Nowe, Peter Simon, thou art old,
I will maintaine thee and thy sonne;
And the men shall have five hundred markes
For the good service they have done.
Then in came the queene with ladies fair
To see Sir Andrewe Barton knight;
They weend that thee were brought on shore,
And thought to have seen a gallant sight.

But when they see his deadly face,
And eyes soe hallow in his head,
I wold give, quoth the king, a thousand markes,
This man were alive as hee is dead:
Yett for the manfull part hee playd,
Which fought soe well with heart and hand,
His men shall have twelvepence a day,
Till they come to my brother kings high land.

---

XIII.

LADY ANNE BOTHWELL’S LAMENT.

A SCOTTISH SONG.

The subject of this pathetic ballad the Editor once thought might possibly relate to the Earl of Bothwell, and his devotion of his wife Lady Jean Gordon, to make room for his marriage with the Queen of Scots: But this opinion he now believes to be groundless; indeed Earl Bothwell’s age, who was upwards of sixty at the time of that marriage, renders it unlikely that he should be the object of so warm a passion as this elegy supposes. He has been since informed,

Ver. 175, 6... Erle of Nettingham, And soe was never, &c. MS.
THE MURDER OF THE KING OF SCOTS.

that it entirely refers to a private story. A young lady of the name of Bothwell, or rather Boswell, having been, together with her child, deserted by her husband or lover, composed these affecting lines herself; which here are given from a copy in the Editor’s folio MS. corrected by another in Allan Ramsay’s Miscellany.

Balow, my babe, lye still and sleipe!
It grieves me sair to see thee weipe:
If houst be silent, lse be glad,
Thy maining mak’s my heart ful sad.
Balow, my boy, thy mothers joy,
Thy father breides me great annoy.
Balow, my babe, ly stil and sleipe,
It grieves me sair to see thee weipe.

When he began to court my luve,
And with his sugred wordes* to move,
His faynings fals, and flattering chere
To me that time did not appeire:
But now I see, most cruel hoo
Cares neither for my babe nor mee.
Balow, &c. 15

Lye still, my darling, sleipe a while,
And when thou wakest, sweetly smile:
But smile not, as thy father did,
To cozen maidis: nay God forbid!
Bot yet I faire, thon wilt gee neire
Thy fathers hart, and face to beire.
Balow, &c.

I cannae chuse, but ever will
Be hauing to thy father still:
Whair-eir he gae, whair-eir he ryde,
My luve with him doth still abyde:
In weil or wae, whair-eir he gae,
Mine hart can neire depart him frae.
Balow, &c. 25

But doe not, doe not, prettie mine,
To faynings fals thine hart incline;
Be loyal to thy luer trew,
And nevir change her for a new:
If gude or faire, of hir hauve care,
For womens banning’s wonderous sair
Balow, &c.

Baire, sin thy cruel father is gane,
Thy winsome smiles maun eise my paine;
My babe and I’ll together live,
He’ll comfort me when cares doe grieve:
My babe and I right saft will ly,
And quite forget man’s crueltie.
Balow, &c. 30

Fareweil, farewell, thou falsest youth,
That evir kist a woman’s mouth!
I wish all maides be warnd by mee
Nevir to trust mans curtesy;
For if we doe not chance to bow,
They’ll use us then they care not bow.
Balow, my babe, ly stil, and sleipe,
It grieves me sair to see thee weipe.

XIV.

THE MURDER OF THE KING OF SCOTS.

The catastrophe of Henry Stewart, Lord Darnley, the unfortunate husband of Mary Queen of Scots, is the subject of this ballad. It is here related in that partial imperfect manner, in which such an event would naturally strike the subjects of another kingdom; of which he was a native. Henry appears to have been a vain capricious worthless young man, of weak understanding, and dissolute morals. But the beauty of his person, and the inexperience of his youth, would dispose mankind to treat him with an indulgence, which the cruelty of his murder would afterwards convert into the most tender pity and regret: and then imagination would not fail to adorn his memory with all those virtues he ought to have possessed. This will account for the extravagant eulogium bestowed upon him in the first stanza, &c.

Henry Lord Darnley was eldest son of the Earl of Lennox, by the Lady Margaret Douglas, niece of Henry VIII., and daughter of Margaret Queen of Scotland by the Earl of Angus, whom that princess married after the death of James IV.—Darnley, who had been born and educated in England, was but in his 21st year, when he was murdered, Feb. 9, 1567-8. This crime was perpetrated by the Earl of Bothwell, not out of respect to the memory of Riccio, but in order to pave the way for his own marriage with the queen.

This ballad, (printed, with a few corrections, from the Editor’s folio MS.) seems to have been written soon after Mary’s escape into England in 1568, see v. 65.—It will be remembered at v. 5, that this princess was Queen Dowager of France, having been first married to Francis II. who died Dec. 4, 1560.

Woe worth, woe worth thee, false Scoteand!
For thou hast ever wrought by sleight;
The worthyeast prince that euer was borne,
You hanged under a cloud by night

The Queene of France a letter wrote,
And sealed it with harte and ringe;
And bade him come Scotland within,
And shee wold marry and crowne him kinge.

To be a king is a pleasant thing,
To bee a prince unto a preere:
But you have heard, and see have I too,
A man may well buy gold too deare

* When sugar was first imported into Europe, it was a very great dainty; and therefore the epithet sugred is used by all our old writers metaphorically to express extreme and delicate sweetness. (See above, No. XI. v. 10.) Sugar at present is cheap and common; and therefore suggests now a coarse and vulgar idea.
There was an Italyan in that place,
Was as well beloved as ever was hee,
Lord David was his name, 15
Chamberlaine to the queen was hee.

If the king had risen forth of his place,
He wold have sate him downe in the cheare,
And tho' it beseeemed him not so well,
The king had beene present there. 20

Some lords in Scotlande waxed wroth,
And quarrelled with him for the nonce;
I shall you tell how it befell,
Twelve daggers were in him at once.

When the queen saw her chamberlaine was shine,
For him her faire cheeks shee did weethe, 26
And made a vowe for a yeare and a day
The king and shee wold not come in one sheete.

Then some of the lords they waxed wroth,
And made their vow all vekemensly; 30
For the death of the queenes chamberlaine,
The king himselfe, how he shall dye.

With gun-powder they strewed his roome,
And layd greene rushes in his way: 35
For the traitors thought that very night
This worthy king for to betray.

To bed the king he made him bowne;
To take his rest was his desire;
He was no sooner cast on sleepe,
But his chamber was on a blazing fire.

Up he looke, and the window brake,
And see had thirteene foote to fall;
Lord Bodwell kept a privy watch,
Underneath his castle wall.

Who have wee here? Lord Bodwell sayd:
Now answer me, that I may know. 45
"King Henry she eighth my uncle was;
For his sweete sake some pitty show."

Who have we here? Lord Bodwell sayd,
Now answer me, when I doe speake. 50
"Ah, Lord Bodwell, I know thee well;
Some pitty on me I pray thee take."

He pity thee as much he sayd,
And as much favor show to thee,
As thou didest to the queenes chamberlaine,
That day thou deemest him to die*.

Through halls and towers the king they ledd,
Through towers and castles that were nye,
Through an arbor into an orchard,
There a pear-tree hanged him bye. 60

When the governor of Scotland heard
How that the worthy king was slaine;
He persued the queen so bitterly,
That in Scotland shee dare not remaine.

But shee is fledde into merry England,
And here her residence hath taine; 65
And through the Queene of Englands grace,
In England now shee doth remaine.

* Pronounced after the northern manner dee.

A SONNET BY QUEEN ELIZABETH.

The following lines, if they display no rich vein of poetry, are yet so strongly characteristic of their great and spirited authoress, that the insertion of them will be pardoned. They are preserved in Puttenham's "Arte of English Poesie: a book in which are many sly addresses to the queen's faible of shining as a poetess. The extraordinary manner in which these verses are introduced shews what kind of homage was exacted from the courtly writers of that age, viz. "I find," says this antiquated critic "none example in English metre, so well maintaining this figure [Exargasia, or the Gorgeous, Lat. Exploitation] as that dittie of her majesties ownne making, passing sweete and harmonical; which figure beyng as his very onginal name purporteth the most bewtifull and gorgeous of all others, it asketh in reason to be reserved for a last complement, and descibred by a ladis penne, herselfe beyng the most bewtiful, or rather bewtiful of queenes*. And this was the occasion; our sovereigne lady perceiving how the Scottish queenes residence within this realm at so great libertie and ease (as were starke meete for so great and dangerous a prisioner) bred secret factions among her people, and made many of the nobilitie incline to favour her partie; some of them desirous of innovation in the state: others aspiring to greater fortunes by her libertie and life: the queene our sovereigne ladie, to declare that she was nothing ignorant of those secret practizes, though she had long with great wisdome and pacience disseemt it, writeth this dittie most sweete and sententious, not hiding from all such aspiring minds the danger of their ambition and disloyalty: which afterwards fell out most truly by the exemplary chastisment of sundry persons, who in favour of the said Scot. Qu. declining from her majestie, sought to interrupt the quiet of the realme by many evil and undutifull practizes."

This sonnet seems to have been composed in 1569, not long before the Duke of Norfolk, the Earls of Pembroke and Arundel, the Lord Lumley, Sir Nich. Throckmorton, and others, were taken into custody. See Hume, Rapin, &c.—It was originally written in long lines or alexandrines, each of which is here di-vided into two.

The present edition is improved by some readings adopted from a copy printed in a collection from the papers of Sir John Harrington, intituled, "Nugæ Antiquæ," Lond. 1769, 12mo. where the verses are

Ver. 15, sic MS.
* She was at this time near three-score.
accommpanied with a very curious letter, in which this sonnet is said to be "of her Highness own initing
... My Lady Willoughby did covertly get it on her Majesties tablet, and had much hazard in so doing; for the Queen did find out the thief, and chid for her spreading evil bruit of her writing such toyes, when other matters did so occupy her employment at this time: and was fearful of being thought too lightly of for so doing." ***

The doubt of future foes
Exiles my present joy;
And wit me warnez to shun such snares,
As threaten mine annoy.

For falsehood now doth flow,
And subjects faith doth ebe:
Which would not be, if reason rul'd,
Or wisdom wove the webe.

But clowns of joyes untried
Do cloke aspiring minds;
Which turn to raine of late repent,
By course of changed windes.

The toppe of hope supposed
The roote of ruthe will be;
And brutlesse all their grated guiles,
As shortly all shall see.

Then dazeld eyes with pride,
Which great ambition blindes,
Shal be unseeld by worthy wights,
Whose foresight falshood finds.

The daughter of debate*,
That discord ay doth sowe,
Shal reape no gaine where former rule Hath taught stil peace to growe.

No foreinne bannishte wight
Shall ancre in this port;
Our realme it brookes no strangers force,
Let them elsewhere resort.

Our rusty swordes with rest
Shall first his edge employ,
To poll the toppes, that seek such change,
Or gape for such like joy.

†† I cannot help subjoining to the above sonnet another distich of Elizabeth's preserved by Puttenham (p. 197.) "which (says he) our sovereigne lady wrote in defiance of fortune."

Never think ou, Fortune can beare the sway,
Where Vertue's force can cause her to obey.
The slightest effusion of such a mind deserves attention.

XVI.

KING OF SCOTS AND ANDREW BROWNE.

This ballad is a proof of the little intercourse that subsisted between the Scots and English, before the accession of James I. to the crown of England. The tale which is here so circumstantially related does not appear to have had the least foundation in history, but was probably built upon some confused hearsay report of the tumults in Scotland during the minority of that prince, and of the conspiracies formed by different factions to get possession of his person. It should seem from ver. 97 to have been written during the regency, or at least before the death, of the Earl of Morton, who was condemned and executed June 2, 1581; when James was in his fifteenth year.

The original copy (preserved in the archives of the Antiquarian Society, London) is intitled, "A new Ballad, declaring the great treason conspired against the young king of Scots, and how one Andrew Browne an English-man, which was the king's chamberlain, prevented the same." To the tune of Milfield, or els to Green-sleeves." At the end is subjoined the name of the author, W. Elderton. "Imprinted at London for Yarathe James, dwelling in Newgate Market, over against Ch. Church," in black-letter folio.

This Elderton, who had been originally an attorney in the sheriffs courts of London, and afterwards (if we may believe Oldys) a comedian, was a facetious fuddling companion, whose tippling and rhymes rendered him famous among his contemporaries. He was author of many popular songs and ballads; and probably other pieces in this work, besides the following, are of his composing. He is believed to have fallen a victim to his bottle before the year 1592. His epitaph has been recorded by Camden, and translated by Oldys.

Hie situs est sitiens, atque ebris Eldertonus,
Quid dico hic situs est? hic potius siti est.
Dead drunk here Elderton doth lie;
Dead as he is, he still is dry:
So of him it may well be said,
Here he, but not his thirst, is laid.

"Our alas! what a griefe is this
That princes subjects cannot be true,
But still the devill hath some of his,
Will play their parts whatsoever ensue;

Forgetting what a grievous thing
It is to offend the anointed king?
Als for woe, why should it be so,
This makes a sorrowful heigh ho.

In Scotland is a bonnie kinge,
As proper a youth as neede to be,
Well given to every happy thing,
That can be in a kinge to see:

Ver. 1, dread, al. ed. V. 9, toyes, al. ed.

* She evidently means here the Queen of Scots.
Yet that unlikie country still,
Hath people given to craftie will,
   Alas for woe, &c. 15
On Whitsun eve it so befell,
A posset was made to give the king,
Whereof his ladie nurse hard tell,
   And that it was a poysoned thing:
   She cryed, and called piteouslie;
   Now help, or els the king shall die!
   Alas for woe, &c.
One Browne, that was an English man,
   And hard the ladies piteous crye,
Out with his sword, and bestir'd him than,
   Out of the doores in haste to flie;
But all the doores were made so fast,
   Out of a window he got at last.
   Alas, for woe, &c.
He met the bishop coming fast,
   Having the posset in his hande:
The sight of Browne made him aghast,
   Who bad him stoutly staie and stand.
With him were two that ranne awa,
For feare that Browne would make a fray.
   Alas, for woe, &c.
Bishop, quoth Browne, what hast thou there?
   Nothing at all, my friend, sayde he;
But a posset to make the king good cheere.
   Is it so? sayd Browne, that will I see,
First I will have thyself begin,
   Before thou go any further in;
Be it weale or woe, it shall be so,
   This makes a sorrowfull heigh ho.
The bishop sayde, Browne I doo know,
   Thou art a young man poore and bare;
Livinges on thee I will bestowe:
   Let me go on, take thou no care.
No, no, quoth Browne, I will not be
   A traitour for all Christiantie:
   Happe well or woe, it shall be so,
   Drink now with a sorrowfull, &c.
The bishop dranke, and by and by
   His belly burst and he fell downe:
A just rewarde for his traitery.
   This was a posset indeed, quoth Brown! He serched the bishop, and found the keyes,
To come to the kinge when he did please.
   Alas for woe, &c.
As soon as the king got word of this,
   He humbly fell uppon his knee,
And prayd God that he did misse,
   To tast of that extremity:
For that he did perceiue and know,
   His erle would betray him so:
   Alas for woe, &c.
   Alas, he said, unhappie realme,
   My father, and grandfather slaine:
   My mother banished, O extreame!
   Unhappy fate, and bitter bayne!
   And now like treason wrought for me,
   What more unhappie realme can be!
   Alas for woe, &c.
The king did call his nurse to his grace,
   And gave her twenty pounds a yeere;
   And trustie Browne too in like case,
   He knighted him with gallant geere:
   And gave him lands and livings great,
   For dooing such a manly feat,
   As he did shewe, to the bishop’s woe, &c.
   Which made, &c.
When all this treason done and past,
   Took no effect of traytery:
Another treason at the last,
   They sought against his majestie:
   How they might make their kinge away,
   By a privie bunket on a daye.
   Alas for woe, &c.
   ‘Another time’ to sell the king
   Beyonde the seas they had decreede:
   Three noble Earls heard of this thing,
   And did prevent the same with speede.
   For a letter came, with such a charmne,
   That they should doo their king no harme:
   For further woe, if they did soe,
   Would make a sorrowfull heigh ho.
The Earle Mortorn told the Douglas then,
   Take heede you do not offend the king;
   But shew yourslyfes like honest men
   Obediently in every thing;
   For his godmother * will not see
   Her noble child misus’d to be
   With any woe; for if it be so,
   She will make, &c.
God graunt all subjects may be true,
   In England, Scotland, every where:
   That no such daunger may ensue,
   To put the prince or state in feare:
   That God the highest king may see
   Obedience as it ought to be,
   In wealth or woe, God graunt it be so
   To avoide the sorrowfull heigh ho.

Ver. 67. His father was Henry Lord Darley. His grandfather the old Earl of Lenox, regent of Scotland, and father of Lord Darnley, was murdered at Stirling, Sept. 5, 1571.

* Queen Elizabeth.
XVII.

THE BONNY EARL OF MURRAY.

A SCOTTISH SONG.

In December 1591, Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell, had made an attempt to seize on the person of his sovereign James VI. but being disappointed, had retired towards the north. The king unadvisedly gave a commission to George Gordon Earl of Huntley, to pursue Bothwell and his followers with fire and sword. Huntley, under cover of executing that commission, took occasion to revenge a private quarrel he had against James Stewart Earl of Murray, a relation of Bothwell's. In the night of Feb. 7, 1592, he beset Murray's house, burnt it to the ground, and slew Murray himself; a young nobleman of the most promising virtues, and the very darling of the people. See Robertson's History.

The present Lord Murray hath now in his possession a picture of his ancestor naked and covered with wounds, which had been carried about, according to the custom of that age, in order to inflame the populace to revenge his death. If this picture did not flatter, he well deserved the name of the "Bonny Earl," for he is there represented as a tall and comely personage. It is a tradition in the family, that Gordon of Bucky gave him a wound in the face: Murray half expiring, said, "you have split a better face than your awin." Upon this, Bucky, pointing his dagger at Huntley's breast, swore, "You shall be as deep as I;" and forced him to pierce the poor defenceless body.

King James, who took no care to punish the murderers, is said by some to have privately countenanced and abetted them, being stimulated by jealousy for some indiscreet praises which his queen had too lavishly bestowed on this unfortunate youth. See the preface to the next ballad. See also Mr. Walpole's "Catalogue of Royal Authors," vol. I. p. 42.

Yr highlands, and ye lawlands,
Oh! quhair hae ye been?
They hae slain the Earl of Murray,
And hae laid him on the green.

Now wae be to thee, Huntley!
And quhairfo re you sae!
I bade you bring him wi' you,
But forbade you him to slay

He was a braw gallant,
And he rid at the ring;
And the bonny Earl of Murray,
Oh! he might hae been a king.

He was a braw gallant,
And he played at the ba';
And the bonny Earl of Murray
Was the flower among them a'.

He was a braw gallant,
And he playd at the glure;
And the bonny Earl of Murray,
Oh! he was the Quenes luve.

Oh! lang will his lady
Lute owre the castle downe*,
Ere she see the Earl of Murray
Cum sounding throw the towne.

XVIII.

YOUNG WATERS.

A SCOTTISH BALLAD.

It has been suggested to the Editor, that this ballad covertly alludes to the indiscriminate partiality, which Queen Anne of Denmark is said to have shewn for the "Bonny Earl of Murray;" and which is supposed to have influenced the fate of that unhappy nobleman. Let the reader judge for himself.

The following account of the murder is given by a contemporary writer, and a person of credit, Sir James Balfour, knight, Lyon King of Arms, whose MS. of the Annals of Scotland is in the Advocate's library at Edinburgh.

"The seventh of Febry, this yeare, 1592, the Earle of Murray was cruelly murthered by the Earle of Huntley at his house in Dunbrisel in Fyffe-shyre, and with him Dunbar, sherife of Murray. It was given out and publickly talkt, that the Earle of Huntley was only the instrument of perpetrating this fact, to satsifie the King's jealouse of Murray, quhun the Queene, more rashly than wisely, some few days before had commendit in the King's hearing, with too many epithets of a proper and gallant man. The reasons of these surmisess proceedit from a proclamation of the Kings, the 13 of Marche following: inhibitie the younge Earle of Murray to persue the Earle of Huntley, for his fathers slaughter, in respect he being waredeit [imprisoned] in the castell of Blacknesse for the same murther, was willing to

* Castle downe here has been thought to mean the Castle of Downe, a seat belonging to the family of Murray.
MARY AMBREE.

In the year 1584, the Spaniards, under the command of Alexander Farnese prince of Parma, began to gain great advantages in Flanders and Brabant, by recovering many strong holds and cities from the Hollanders, as Ghent, (called then by the English Gaunt,) Antwerp, Mechlin, &c. See Stow’s Annals, p. 711. Some attempt made with the assistance of English volunteers to retrieve the former of those places probably gave occasion to this ballad. I can find no mention of our heroine in history, but the following rhymes rendered her famous among our poets. Ben Jonson often mentions her, and calls any remarkable virago by her name. See his Epicaene, first acted in 1609, Act 4, sc. 2. His Tale of a Tub, Act 1, sc. 4. And his masque intitled the Fortunate Isles, 1636, where he quotes the very words of the ballad.

—MARY AMBREE, (Who marched so free) abide a tralyll, avering that he had done nothing but by the King’s majesties commissione; and was neither ait nor part in the murther*.”

The following ballad is here given from a copy printed not long since at Glasgow, in one sheet 8vo. The world was indebted for its publication to the Lady Jean Hume, sister to the Earl of Hume, who died at Gibraltar.

About Zule, quhen the wind blew cule,
And the round tables began,
A’! there is cum to our kings court
Mony a well-favour’d man.

The queen luikt owre the castle wa,
Beheld baith dale and down,
And then she saw zoung Waters
Cum riding to the town.

His footmen they did rin before,
His houmen rade behind,
Ane mantel of the burning gowd
Did keip him frae the wind.

Gowden graith’d his horse before
And siluer shod behind,
The horse zoung Waters rade upon
Was fleeter than the wind.

But than spake a wyllie lord,
Unto the queen said he,
O tell me quha’s the fairest face
Rides in the company.

I’ve sene lord, and I’ve sene laird,
And knights of high degree;
But a fairer face than zoung Waters
Mine eyne did never see.

Out then spack the jealous king,
(And an angry man was he)
O, if he had been twice as fair,
Zou might have excepted me.

Zou’re neither laird nor lord, she says,
Bot the king that wears the crown;
Theris not a knight in fair Scotland
Bot to thee maun bow down.

For a’ that she could do or say,
Appeard he wad nae bee;
Bot for the words which she had said
Zoung Waters he maun dee.

They hae taen zoung Waters, and
Put fetters to his feet;
They hae taen zoung Waters, and
Thowm him in dungeon deep.

Aft I have ridden thro’ Stirling town
In the wind both and the weit;
Bot I neir rade thro’ Stirling town
Wi’ fetters at my feet.

Aft haive I ridden thro’ Stirling town
In the wind both and the rain;
Bot I neir rade thro’ Stirling town
Neir to return again.

They hae taen to the heiding-hill*
His zoung son in his cradle,
And they hae taen to the heiding-hill,
His horse both and his saddle.

They hae taen to the heiding-hill
His lady fair to see.
And for the words the queen had spoke
Zoung Waters he did dee.

XIX.

MARY AMBREE.

To the siege of Gaunt,
And death could not daunt,
As the ballad doth vaunt)
Were a braver wight, &c.

She is also mentioned in Fletcher’s Scornful Lady,
Act 5, sub finem.

“—My large gentlewoman, my “Mary Ambree,” bad I but seen into you, you should have had another bedfellow.”—

It is likewise evident that she is the virago intended by Butler in Hudibras (P. 1. c. 3, v. 365.), by her being coupled with John d’Arc, the celebrated Fucelle de Orleans.

A bold virago stout and tall
As Joan of France, or English Moll.

This ballad is printed from a black-letter copy in the Pepys Collection, improved from the Editor’s

* Heiding-hill; i. e. heading [beheading] hill. The place of execution was anciently an artificial hillock.

* This extract is copied from the Critical Review.
The valourous acts performed at Gaunt by the brave bonnie lass Mary Ambree, who in revenge of her lovers death did play her part most gallantly. The tune is, The blind beggar, &c."

When captaines courageous, whom death cold not daunt,
Did march to the siefe of the city of Gaunt,
They mustred their souldiers by two and by three,
And the formost in battle was Mary Ambree.

When brave Sir John Major was slaine in her sight,
Who was her true lover, her joy, and delight,
Because he was slaine most treacherouslie,
Then vowd to revenge him Mary Ambree.

She clothed herselfe from the top to the toe
In buffe of the bravest, most seemely to shewe; 10
A faire shirt of male then slipped on shee;
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

A helmett of profe shee strait did provide,
A strong arminge sword shee girt by her side,
On her hand a goodly faire gauntlett put shee; 15
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

Then tooke shee her sworde and her targett in hand,
Bidding all such, as wold, bee of her band;
To wayte on her person came thousand and three:
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree? 20

My soldiers, she saith, soe valiant and bold,
Nowe followe your captaine, whom you doe beholde;
Still formost in bataill myselfe will I bee:
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

Then cryed out her souldiers and loude they did say,
Soe well thou becomest this gallant array,
Thy harte and thy weapons so well do agree,
There was none ever like Mary Ambree.

Shee cheared her souldiers, that foughten for life,
With anecent and standard, with drum and with fife,
With brave changling trumpets, that sounded soe free;
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

Before I will see the worst of you all
To come into danger of death, or of thrall,
This hand and this life I will venture soe free:
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

Shee ledd upp her souldiers in bataille array,
Gainst three times thery number by breake of the dayes;
Seven bowers in skirmish continued shee:
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree? 40
She filled the skyes with the smoke of her shott,
And her enemies bodyes with bullets so hott;
For one of her owne men a score killed shee:
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

And when her false gunner, to spoyle her intent, 45
Away all her pellets and powder had sent, [three:
Straight with her keen weapon shee slasht him in
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

Being falseelye betrayed for lucre of lyre,
At length she was forced to make a retyre; 50
Then her souldiers into a strong castle drew shee:
Was not this a brave bonny lass, Mary Ambree?

Her foes they besett her on everye side,
As thinking close siege shee cold never abide;
To beate down the walles they all did decree: 55
But stoutlye defdyd them brave Mary Ambree.

Then tooke shee her sworde and her targett in hand,
And mounting the walles all undaunted did stand,
There daring their captaines to match any three:
O what a brave captaine was Mary Ambree! 60

Now save, English captaine, what woldest thou give
To ransom thy selfe, which else must not live?
Come yield thy selfe quicklye, or slaine thou must bee,
Then smiled sweetelye brave Mary Ambree.

Ye captaines courageous, of valour so bold,
Whom thinke you before you now you doe behold?
A knight, sir, of England, and captaine soe free,
Who shortlye with us a prisoner must bee.

No, captaine of England; behold in your sight
Two brests in my bosome, and threore no knight: 70
Noe knight, sirs, of England, nor captaine you see,
But a poor simple lass called Mary Ambree.

But art thou a woman, as thou dost declare,
Whose valor hath proved so unaunted in warre?
If England doth yield such brave lasses as thee, 75
Full well may they conquer, faire Mary Ambree.

The prince of Great Parma heard of her renowne
Who long had advanced for England's faire crowne;
Hewwoed her, and sued her his mistresse to bee,
And offerd rich presents to Mary Ambree. 80

But this virtuous mayden despised them all,
Hee nere sell my honour for purple nor pall:
A mayden of England, sir, never will bee
The whore of a monarcke, quoth Mary Ambree.

Then to her owne country shee backe did returne,
Still holding the foes of faire England in scorne:
Therfore English captaines of every degree
Sing forth the brave valours of Mary Ambree.

* So M.S. Sergeant Major in PC.
+ A peculiar kind of armour, composed of small rings of iron, and worn under the clothes. It is mentioned by Spencer, who speaks of the Irish Gallowglass or Footsoldier as "armed in a long Shirt of Mayl." (View of the State of Ireland.)
Peregrine Bertie, Lord Willoughby of Eresby had, in the year 1586, distinguished himself at the siege of Zutphen, in the Low Countries. He was the year after, made general of the English forces in the United Provinces, in room of the Earl of Leicester, who was recalled. This gave him an opportunity of signalizing his courage and military skill in several actions against the Spaniards. One of these, greatly exaggerated by popular report, is probably the subject of this old ballad, which, on account of its flattering encomiums on English valour, hath always been a favourite with the people.

"My Lord Willoughbie (says a contemporary writer) was one of the queenes best swordsmen: ....he was a great master of the art military.... I have heard it spoken, that had he not slighted the court, but applied himselfe to the queene, he might have enjoyed a plentiful portion of her grace; and it was his saying, and it did him no good, that he was none of the Reptilia; intimating, that he could not creepe on the ground, and that the court was not his element; for, indeed, as he was a great soul-dier, so he was of suitable magnanimitie, and could not brooke the obsequiousnesse and assiduitie of the court."—(Naunton.)

Lord Willoughbie died in 1601.—Both Norris and Turner were famous among the military men of that age.

The subject of this ballad (which is printed from an old black-letter copy, with some conjectural emendations,) may possibly receive illustration from what Chapman says in the dedication to his version of Homer’s Frogs and Mice, concerning the brave and memorable retreat of Sir John Norris, with only 1000 men, through the whole Spanish army, under the Duke of Parma, for three miles together.

The fifteenth day of July,
With glittering spear and shield,
A famous fight in Flanders
Was foughten in the field:
The most courageous officers
Were English captains three;
But the bravest man in battle
Was brave Lord Willoughbey.

The next was Captain Norris,
A valiant man was he:
The other Captain Turner,
From field would never flee.
With fifteen hundred fighting men,
Alas! there were no more,
They fought with fourteen thousand then,
Upon the bloody shore.

Stand to it noble pikemen,
And look you round about:
And shoot you right you bow-men,
And we will keep them out:
You musquet and calver men,
Do you prove true to me,
I'll be the foremost man in fight,
Says brave Lord Willoughbey.

And then the bloody enemy
They fiercely did assail,
And fought it out most furiously,
Not doubting to prevail:
The wounded men on both sides fell
Most pitious for to see,
Yet nothing could the courage quell
Of brave Lord Willoughbey.

For seven hours, to all men's view,
This fight endured sore,
Until our men so feeble grew
That they could fight no more;
And then upon dead horses,
Full savourly they eat,
And drank the puddle water,
They could no better get.

When they had fed so freely,
They kneeled on the ground,
And praised God devoutly
For the favour they had found;
And beating up their colours,
The fight they did renew,
And turning tow'rd the Spaniard,
A thousand more they slew.

The sharp steel-pointed arrows,
And bullets thick did fly;
Then did our valiant soldiers
Charge on most furiously;
Which made the Spaniards waver,
They thought it best to flee,
They fear'd the stout behaviour
Of brave Lord Willoughbey.

Then quoth the Spanish general,
Come let us march away,
I fear we shall be spoiled all
If here we longer stay;
For yonder comes Lord Willoughbey
With courage fierce and fell,
He will not give one inch of way
For all the devils in hell.

And then the fearful enemy
Was quickly put to flight,
Our men persued courageously,
And caught their forces quite;
But at last they gave a shout,
Which echoed through the sky,
God, and St. George for England!
The conquerers did cry.

This news was brought to England
With all the speed might be,
And soon our gracious queen was told
Of this same victory;
O this is brave Lord Willoughbey,
My love that ever won,
Of all the lords of honour
'Tis he great deeds bath done.
To the soldiers that were maimed,
And wounded in the fray,
The queen allowed a pension
Of fifteen pence a day;
And from all costs and charges
She quit and set them free:
And this she did all for the sake
Of brave Lord Willoughby.

Then courage, noble Englishmen,
And never be dismaid;
If that we be but one to ten,
We will not be afraid
To fight with foreign enemies,
And set our nation free.
And thus I end the bloody bout
Of brave Lord Willoughby.

---

XXI.

VICTORIOUS MEN OF EARTH.

This little moral sonnet hath such a pointed application to the heroes of the foregoing and following ballads, that I cannot help placing it here, though the date of its composition is of a much later period. It is extracted from "Cupid and Death, a masque by J. S. [James Shirley] presented Mar. 26, 1653. London, printed 1653," 4to.

VICTORIOUS men of earth, no more
Proclaim how wide your empires are:
Though you bind in every shore,
And your triumphs reach as far

As night or day;
Yet you proud monarchs must obey,
And mingle with forgotten ashes, when
Death calls ye to the crowd of common men.

Devouring famine, plague, and war,
Each able to undo mankind,
Death's servile emissaries are:
Nor to those alone confin'd,
He hath at will
More quaint and subtle ways to kill;
A smile or kiss, as he will use the art,
Shall have the cunning skill to break a heart.

---

XXII.

THE WINNING OF CALES

The subject of this ballad is the taking of the city of Cadiz, (called by our sailors corruptly Cales) on June 21, 1596, in a descent made on the coast of Spain, under the command of the Lord Howard admiral, and the Earl of Essex general.

The valour of Essex was not more distinguished on this occasion than his generosity: the town was carried sword in hand, but he stopped the slaughter as soon as possible, and treated his prisoners with the greatest humanity, and even affability and kindness. The English made a rich plunder in the city, but missed of a much richer, by the resolution which the Duke of Medina the Spanish admiral took, of setting fire to the ships, in order to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy. It was computed, that the loss which the Spaniards sustained from this enterprise, amounted to twenty millions of ducats. See Hume's History.

The Earl of Essex knighted on this occasion not fewer than sixty persons, which gave rise to the following sarcasm:

A gentleman of Wales, a knight of Cales,
And a laird of the North country;
But a yeoman of Kent with his yearly rent
Will buy them out all three.

The ballad is printed, with some corrections, from the Editor's folio MS. and seems to have been composed by some person, who was concerned in the expedition. Most of the circumstances related in it will be found supported by history.

Long the proud Spaniards had vaunted to conquer us,
Threatening our country with fyer and sword;
Often preparing their navy most sumptuous
With as great plenty as Spain could afford.
Dub a dub, dub a dub, thus strike their drums;
Tantara, tantara, the Englishman comes.

To the seas presentely went our lord admiral,
With knights courageous and captains full good;
The brave Earl of Essex, a prosperous general,
With him prepared to pass the salt flood.
Dub a dub, &c.

At Plymouth speedilye, took they ship valiantlye,
Braver ships never were seen under sayle
With their fair colours spread, and streamers ore their head,
Now bragging Spaniards, take heed of your tayle,
Dub a dub, &c.

Unto Cales cunninglye, came we most speedilye,
Where the kinges navy securelye did ryde;
Being upon their backs, piercing their butts of sacks,
Ere any Spaniards our coming descryde.
Dub a dub, &c.

Great was the crying, the running and ryding,
Which at that season was made in that place;
The beacons were fyred, as need then required;
To hyde their great treasure they had little space.
Dub a dub, &c.
There you might see their ships, how they were fyr'd fast,
And how their men drowned themselves in the sea;
The might you hear them cry, wayle and weep piteously,
When they saw no shift to scape thence away. 30
Dub a dub, &c.

The great St. Phillip, the pryde of the Spaniards,
Was burnt to the bottom, and sunk in the sea;
But the St. Andrew, and eke the St. Matthew,
We took in fight manfullye and brought away. 35
Dub a dub, &c.

The Earl of Essex most valiant and hardye, [town;
With horsemen and footmen marched up to the
The Spaniards, which saw them, were greatly alarmed,
[down. 40
Did fly for their savegard, and durst not come
Dub a dub, &c.

Now, quoth the noble Earl, courage my soldiers all,
Fight and be valiant, the spoil you shall have;
And be well rewarded all from the great to the small;
But looke that the women and children you save.
Dub a dub, &c. 46

The Spaniards at that sight, thinking it vain to fight,
Hung upp flags of truce and yielded the town:

Woe marched in presentlye, decking the walls on hye,
With English colours which purchased renowne. 51
Dub a dub, &c.

Entering the houses then, of the most richest men,
For gold and treasure we searched eche day;
In some places we did find, pyes baking left behind,
Meate at fire rosting, and folke run away. 55
Dub a dub, &c.

Full of rich merchandize, every shop catched our eyes.
Damasks and satins and velvets full fayre;
Which soldiers miasur'd out by the length of their swords;
Of all commodities eche had a share. 60
Dub a dub, &c.

Thus Cales was taken, and our brave general
March'd to the market-place, where he did stand;
There many prisoners fell to our several shares,
Many crav'd mercye, and mercye they found. 65
Dub a dub, &c.

When our brave General saw they delayed all,
And wold not ransom their towne as they said,
With their fair wanscots, their presses and bedsteads,
Their joint-stools and tables a fire we made; 70
And when the town burned all in flame,
With tara, tanta, away wee all came.

---

THE SPANISH LADY'S LOVE.

This beautiful old ballad most probably took its rise from one of these descentes made on the Spanish coasts in the time of Queen Elizabeth; and in all likelihood from that which is celebrated in the foregoing ballad.

It was a tradition in the West of England, that the person admired by the Spanish lady was a gentleman of the Popham family, and that her picture, with the pearl necklace mentioned in the ballad, was not many years ago preserved at Littlecot, near Hungerford, Wiltshire, the seat of that respectable family.

Another tradition hath pointed out Sir Richard Leison, of Trentham, in Staffordshire, as the subject of this ballad; who married Margaret daughter of Charles Earl of Nottingham; and was eminently distinguished as a naval officer and commander in all the expeditions against the Spaniards in the latter end of Queen Elizabeth's reign, particularly in that to Cadiz in 1596, when he was aged 27. He died in 1605, and has a monument, with his effigy in brass, in Wolverhampton church.

It is printed from an ancient back letter copy, corrected in part by the Editor's folio MS.

WILL you hear a Spanish lady,
How shee woood an English man? 5
Garments gay as rich as may be Decked with jewels she had on.
Of a comely countenance and grace was she,
And by birth and parentage of high degree.

As his prisoner there he kept her,
In his hands her life did lye; 10
Cupid's bands did tye them faster
By the liking of an eye.
In his courteous company was all her joy,
To favour him in any thing she was not cov.

But at last there came commandment
For to set the ladys free,
With their jewels still adorned,
None to do them injury.
Then said this lady mild, Full woe is me; 15
O let me still sustain this kind captivity!

Gallant captain, shew some pity
To a ladye in distress;
Leave me not within this city, 20
For to dye in heaviness;
Thou hast set this present day my body free,
But my heart in prison still remains with thee.

"How should'st thou, fair lady, love me. 25
Whom thou knowst thy country's foe?
Thy fair words make me suspect thee:
Serpents lie where flowers grow."
All the harm I wishe to thee, most courteous knight,
God grant the same upon my head may fully light. 30
Blessed be the time and season,
That you came on Spanish ground;
If our foes you may be termed,
Gentle foes we have you found:
ARGENTILE AND CURAN.

With our city, you have won our hearts eche one, 35
Then to your country bear away, that is your owne.

"Rest you still, most gallant lady; 40
Rest you still, and weep no more;
Of fair Argentile there is plenty,
Spain doth yield a wonderous store."

Spaniards fraught with jealousy we often find,
But Englishmen through all the world are counted kind.

Leave me not unto a Spaniard,
You alone enjoy my heart;
I am lovely, young, and tender,
Love is likewise my desert:
Still to serve thee day and night my mind is prest;
The wife of every Englishman is counted blest.

"It wold be a shame, fair lady,
For to bear a woman hence;
English soldiers never carry
Any such without offence."

I'll quickly change myself, if it be so,
And like a page I'll follow thee, where'er thou go.

"I have neither gold nor silver
To maintain thee in this case,
And to travel is great changes,
As you know in every place."

My chains and jewels every one shall be thy own,
And eke five hundred* pounds in gold that lies unknown.

"On the seas are many dangers,
Many storms do there arise,
Which will be to ladies dreadful,
And force tears from watery eyes."

Well in troth I shall endure extremity,
For I could find in heart to lose my life for thee.

XXIV.

ARGENTILE AND CURAN.

—Is extracted from an ancient historical poem in XIII. Books, intitled, "Albion's England, by William Warner:" "An author says a former Editor only unhappy in the choice of his subject, and measure of his verse. His poem is an epitome of the British history, and written with great learning, sense, and spirit; in some places fine to an extraordinary degree, as I think will eminently appear in the ensuing episode [of Argentile and Curan]—a tale full of beautiful incidents in the romantic taste, extremely affecting, rich in ornament, wonderfully various in style; and in short, one of the most beautiful pastorals I ever met with." [Muses library, 1736. 8vo.]

To his merit nothing can be objected, unless perhaps an air lovers there is in some of his expressions, and an indelicacy in some of his pastoral images.

Warner is said, by A. Woolf, to have been a Warwickshire man, and to have been educated in Oxford, at Magdalen-hall: as also in the latter part of his life to have been retained in the service of Henry Cary Lord Hunsdon, to whom he dedicates his poem. However that may have been, new light is thrown upon his history, and the time and manner of his death are now ascertained, by the following extract from the parish register book of Amwell, in Hertfordshire; which was obligingly communicated to the editor by Mr. Hoole, the very ingenious translator of Tasso, &c.

[1608—1609.] "Muster William Warner, a man of good years and of honest reputation; by his profession an Atturny of the Common Pleas; author of Albions England, divide suddenly in the night in his bedde, without any former complaint or sickness, on thursday night beinge the 9th day of March; was buried the saturday following, and lyeth in the church at the corner under the stone of Walter Fleder." Signed Tho. Hassall Vicarbus.

Though now Warner is so seldom mentioned, his Contemporaries ranked him on a level with Spenser, and called them the Homer and Virgil of their age*

* Ver. 65. Well in worth, M.S.
* Ver. 86. So the folio MS. Other editions read his laws.
* So the MS.—10,000l. PC.
* Athen. Oxon.
But Warner rather resembled Ovid, whose Metamorphosis he seems to have taken for his model, having deduced a perpetual poem from the deluge down to the era of Elizabeth, full of lively digressions and entertaining episodes. And though he is sometimes harsh, affected, and obscure, he often displays a most charming and pathetic simplicity: as where he describes Eleanor's harsh treatment of Rosamond:

With that she dash'd her on the lippes
So dyed double red:
Hard was the heart that gave the blow,
Soft were those lippes that bled.

The edition of "Albion's England" here followed was printed in 4to, 1602; said in the title-page to have been "first penned and published by William Warner, and now revised and newly enlarged by the same author." The story of "Argentile and Curan" is, I believe, the poet's own invention; it is not mentioned in any of our chronicles. It was, however, so much admired, that not many years after he published it, came out a larger poem on the same subject in stanzas of six lines, intitled, "The most pleasant and delightful historie of Curan a prince of Danske, and the fayre princess Argentile, daughter and heyre to Adelbright a prince of Northumberland, &c. by William Webster, London 1617," in eight sheets 4to. An indifferent paraphrase of the following poem.

—This episode of Warner's has also been altered into the common Ballad, "of the two young Princes on Salisbury Plain," which is chiefly composed of Warner's lines, with a few contractions and interpolations, but all greatly for the worse. See the collection of Historical Ballads, 1727, 3 vols. 12mo.

Though here subdivided into stanzas, Warner's metre is the old-fashioned alexandrine of fourteen syllables. The reader therefore must not expect to find the close of the stanzas consulted in the pauses.

The Bruton's 'being' departed hence
Seaven kingdoms here begonne,
Where diversely in divers broyles
The Saxons lost and wonne,

King Edel and King Adelbright
In Dyrir jointly raigne;
In loyal concorde during life
These kingly friends remaine.

When Adelbright should leave his life,
To Edel thus he sayes,
By those same bonds of happie love,
That held us friends alwayes;

By our by-parted crowne, of which
The moyetie is mine;
By God, to whom my soule must passe,
And so in time may thine;

I pray thee, say I conjure thee,
To nourish, as thine owne,
Thy niece, my daughter Argentile,
Till she to age be grovne;

And then, as thou receivest it,
Resigne to thy monye.

A promise had for his bequest,
The testator he dies;
But all that Edel undertooke,
He afterwards denies.

Yet well he 'fosters for' a time
The damsell that was growne
The fairest lady under heaven;
Whose beautie being knowne,

A many princes seeke her love;
But none might her obtaine;
For grippell Edel to himselfe
Her kindome sought to gaine;
And for that cause from sight of such
He did his ward restraine.

By chance one Curan, sonne unto
A prince in Danske, did see
The maid, with whom he fell in love,
As much as man might bee.

Unhappie youth, what should he doe?
His saint was kept in mewe;
Nor he, nor any noble-man
Admitted to her veve.

One while in melancholy fits
He pines himselfe awaye:
Anon he thought by force of arms
To win her if he maye:

And still against the kings restraint
Did secretly invay.
At length the high controller Love,
Whom none may disobey,

Imbased him from lordlines
Into a kitchen drudge,
That so at last of life or death
She might become his judge.

Access so had to see and speake,
He did his love bewray,
And tells his birth; her answer was,
She husbands would stay.

Meane while the king did beate his braines,
His booty to achieue,
Nor caring what became of her,
So he by her might thrive;
At last his resolution was
Some peasant should her wife.

And (which was working to his wish)
He did observe with joye
How Curan, whom he thought a drudge,
Scept many an amorous toye *

The king, perceiving such his vein,
Promotes his vassal still,
Lest that the baseness of the man
Should let, perhaps, his will.

Assured therefore of his love,
But not suspecting who
The lover was, the king himselfe
In his behalf did woe.

* The construction is, "How that many an amorous toy, or foolery of love, escaped Curan;" i.e. escaped from him, being off his guard.
The lady resolute from love,
Unkindly takes that he Should barre the noble, and unto
So base a match agree:

And therefore shifting out of doores,
Departed thence by stealth;
Preferring povertie before
A dangerous life in wealth.

When Curan heard of her escape,
The anguish in his hart
Was more than much, and after her
From court he did depart;

Forgetfull of himselfe, his birth,
His country, friends, and all,
And only minding (whom he mist)
The foundresse of his thrall.

Nor meanes he after to frequent
Or court, or stately townes,
But solitarily to live
Amongst the country grownes

A brace of years he lived thus,
Well pleased so to live,
And shepherd-like to feed a flocke
Himselfe did wholly give.

So wasting, love, by worke, and want,
Grew almost to the waine:
But then began a second love,
The worser of the waine

A country wench, a neathers maid,
Where Curan kept his sheepe,
Did feed her drove: and now on her
Was all the sheperds keepe.

He borrowed on the working daies
His holy russets oft,
And of the bacon's fat, to make
His startops blacke and soft.

And least his tarbox should offend,
He left it at the fold.
Sweete growts, or wig, his bottle had,
As much as it might holde.

A sheepe of bread as browne as nut
And cheese as white as snow,
And wildings, or the seasons fruit
He did in scrip bestow.

And whilst his py-bald courte did sleepe,
And sheep-hooke lay him by,
On hollow quilles of oten straw
He piped melody.

But when he spied her his saint,
He wip'd his greysie shoes,
And clear'd the drivell from his beard,
And thus the shepheard woos.

"I have, sweet wench, a peece of cheese,
As good as tooth may chawe,
And bread and wildings souling well,
And therewithall did drawe.

His lardrie) and in 'yeaning' see
"Yon crumpling ewe, quoth he,
Did twinne this fall, and twin shouldst thou,
If I might tup with thee.

"Thou art too elvish, faith thou art,
Too elvish and too coy:"
Am I, I pray thee, beggarly,
That such a flocke enjoy?

"I wis I am not: yet that thou
Doste hold me in diadaine
Is brimme abroad, and made a gybe
To all that keepe this plaine.

"There be as quaint (at least that thinke Themselves as quaint) that crave
The match, that thou, I wot not why,
Maist, but mislik'st to have

"How wouldst thou match? (for well I wot,
"Thou art a female) I,
Her know not here that willingly
With maiden-head would die.

"The plowmans labour hath no end
And he a churl will prove:
The craftsman hath more worke in hand
Then fitthe unto love:

"The merchant, traffiquing abroad,
Suspects his wife at home:
A youth will play the wanton; and
An old man prove a mome.

"Then chuse a shepheard: with the sun
He doth his flocke unfold,
And all the day on hill or plaine
He merrie chat can hold:

"And with the sun doth folde againe;
Then jogging home betime,
He turns a crab, or turns a round,
Or sings some merry ryme.

"Nor lacks he gleefull tales, whilst round
The nut-brown bowl doth trot;
And sitteth singing care away,
Till he to bed be got:

"Theare sleepes he soundly all the night,
Forgetting morrow-cares:
Nor feares he blasting of his corne,
Nor uttering of his wares;

"Or stormes by seas, or stirres on land,
Or cracke of credit lost:
Not spending frankler than his flocke
Shall still defray the cost.

"Well wor I, sooth they say, that say
More quiet nights and und daies
The shepheard sleeps and wakes, than he
Whose cattel he doth graize.

Ver. 112, i.e. holy-day Russets.
ARGENTILE AND CURAN.

"Believe me, lasse, a king is but
A man, and so am I ;
Content is worth a monarchy
And mischiefs hit the bie ;" 190

"As late it did a king and his
Not dwelling far from hence,
Who left a daughter, save thyselfe,
For fair a matchless wench."——
Here did he pause, as if his tongue
Had done his heart offence.

The neatresse, longing for the rest,
Did egge him on to tell
How faire she was, and who she was.
She bore, quoth he, the bell 200

"For beautie : though I clownish am,
I know what beautie is ;
Or did I not, at seeing thee,
I senseles were to mis."

"Her stature comely, tall ; her gate
Well graced ; and her wit
To marvell at, not meddle with,
As matchless I omit."

"A globe-like head, a gold-like haires,
A forehead smooth, and hie,
An even nose ; on either side
Did shine a grayish eie :"

"Two rosie cheeks, round ruddy lips,
White just-set teeth within ;
A mouth in meanes ; and underneathe
A round and dimpled chin.

"Her snowie necke, with blewish veines,
Stood bolt upright upon
Her portly shoulders : beating balles
Her veined breasts, anon 220

"Adde more to beautie. Wand-like was Her middle falling still,
And rising whereas women rise:"
—Imagine nothing ill.

"And more, her long, and limber armes
Had white and azure armes ;
And slender fingers sumwere to
Her smooth and lillie fists.

"A legge in print, a pretie foot ;
Conjecture of the rest :
For amorous eies, observing forme,
Think parts obscured best."

"With these, O raretie ! with these
Her tong of speech was spare ;
But speaking, Venus seem'd to speake,
The balle from Ido to bear."

"With Phoeb, Juno, and with both
Herselfe contends in face ;
Where equall mixture did not want
Of milde and stately grace." 240

"Her smiles were sober, and her lookes
Were chearefull unto all :
Even such as neither wanton seeme,
Nor waiward ; meel, nor gall.

"A quiet minde, a patient moodo,
And not disdaining any ;
Not gybing, gadding, gawdy : and Sweete faculties had many.

"A nymph, no tong, no heart, no eie,
Might praise, might wish, might see,
For life, for love, for forme ; more good,
More worth, more faire than shee.

"Yea such an one, as such was none,
Save only she was such :
Of Argentile to say the most,
Were to be silent much." 255

I knew the lady very well,
But worthles of such praise,
The neatresse said : and muse I do,
A shepheard thus should blaze
The 'coate' of beautie. Credit me,
Thy latter speech bewaries.

Thy clownish shape a coined shew,
But wherefore dost thou wepe ?
The shepheard wept, and she was woe,
And both doe silence kepe.

"In troth, quoth he, I am not such,
As seeming I professe :
But then for her, and now for thee,
I from myselfe digresse."

"Her loved I (wretch that I am
A recreant to be)
I loved her, that hated love,
But now I die for thee.

"At Kirkland is my fathers court,
And Curan is my name,
In Edels court sometimes in pome,
Till love countrold the same :

"But now—what now?—deare heart, how now?
What ailest thou to wepe?" 260
The damsell wept, and he was woe,
And both did silence kepe.

I graunt, quoth she, it was too much,
That you did love so much :
But whom your former could not move,
Your second love doth touch.

Thy twice-beloved Argentile
Submitteth her to thee,
And for thy double love presents
Herself a single fee,
In passion not in person chang'd,
And I, my lord, am she.

They sweetly surfeiting in joy,
And silent for a space.
When as the extase had end,
Did tenderly imbace :
And for their wedding, and their wish
Got fitting time and place.

* i. e. emblazon beauty's cost. Ed. 1597, 1602 1612, read Coote.
Not England (for of Hengist then
Was named so this land) 300
Then Curan had an hardier knight;
His force could none withstand:
Whose sheep-hooke haid apart, he then
Had higher things in hand.

First, making knowne his lawfull claim an Argentile her right.
He warr'd in Diria*, and he wonne,
Bernicia*too in fight:

And so from trecherous Edel tooke
At once his life and crowne,
And of Northumberland was king,
Long reigning in renowne.

 During the Saxon heptarchy, the kingdom of Northumberland (consisting of six northern counties, besides part of Scotland) was for a long time divided into two lesser sovereignties, viz. Deira (called here Diria) which contained the southern parts, and Ber-nicia, comprehend those which lay north.

XXV.
CORIN'S FATE.

Only the three first stanzas of this song are ancient; these are extracted from a small quarto
MS. in the Editor's possession, written in the time of Queen Elizabeth. As they seemed to want application, this has been attempted by a modern hand.

Corin, most unhappie swaine,
Whither wilt thou drive thy flocke?
Little foode is on the plaine;
Full of danger is the rocke:

Wolfes and bears doe kepe the woodes;
Forests tangled are with brakes;
Meadowes subject are to floods;
Moorees are full of miry lakes.

Yet to slanr all plaine, and hill,
Forest, moore, and meadow-ground,
Hunger will as surely kill:
How may then relief be found?

Such is hapless Corins fate:
Since my waywarde love begunne
Equall doubts begett debate
What to seeke, and what to shunne.

Spare to speke, and spare to speed;
Yet to speke will move dislaine:
If I see her not I bleed,
Yet her sight augments my paine.

What may then poor Corin doe?
Tell me, shepherdes, quickely tell;
For to linger thus in woe
Is the lover's sharpest hell.

XXVI.
JANE SHORE.

Though so many vulgar errors have prevailed concerning this celebrated courtezan, no character in history has been more perfectly handed down to us.
We have her portrait drawn by two masterly pens;
the one has delineated the features of her person,
the other those of her character and story. Sir Thomas More drew from the life, and Drayton has copied an original picture of her. The reader will pardon the length of the quotations, as they serve to correct many popular mistakes relating to her cata-strrophe. The first is from Sir Thomas More's History of Richard III., written in 1513, about thirty years after the death of Edward IV.

" Now then by and by, as it wer for anger, not for covetise, the protector sent into the house of Shores wife (for her husband dwelled not with her) and spoiled her of al that ever she had, (above the value of 2 or 3 thousand marks) and sent her body to prison. And when he had a while laide unto her, for the manner sake that she went about to bewitch him, and that she was of counsel with the lord chamberlein to destroy him: in conclusion when that no colour could fasten upon these matters, then he layd heinously to her charge the thing that her-selue could not deny, that al the world wist was true, and that nameles every man laughed at to here it then so sudiously so highly taken,—that she was naught of her body. And for thys cause, (as a goodly continent prince, cleene and faultless of himself, sent out of heaven into this vicious world for the amendement of mens manners) he caused the bishop of London to put her to open penance, going before the crosse in procession upon a sonday with a taper in her hand. In which she went in countenance and pace demure so womanly; and albeit she was out of al array save her kyrtle only, yet went she so fair and lovely, namelye, while the wondering of the people caste a comly rud in her chekes (of which she before had most misse) that her great shame wan her much praise among those that were more amorous of her body, then curious of her soule. And many good folke also, that hated her living, and glad wer to se sin corrected, yet pittied thei more her penance than rejoiced therin, when thei considered that the protector procured it more of a corrupt intent, than any virtuous affeccion.

"This woman was born in London, worshipfully frended, honestly brought up, and very wel married, saving somewhat to soone: her husbande an honest citizen, yonge, and goodly, and of good substance. But forasmuch as they were coupled ere she wer wel ripe, she not very fervently loved, for whom she never longed. Which was happily the thinge, that the more easily made her enuile unto the king's apppellite, when he required respecte of his royalty, the hope of gay apparel, ease, pleasure, and other wanton welth, was able soone to perce a soft tender hearte. But when the king had abused her, anon her husband (as he was an honest man, and one that could his good, not presuming to touch a kinges concubine) left her up to him al together. When the king died, the lord chamberlen [Hastings] take her: which in the kinges daies, albeit he was sore enamoured upon her, yet he for-borne her nother for reverence, or for a certain frendly faithfullness.

"Proper she was, and faire nothing in her body that you wolde have changed, but if you would have wished her somewhat higher. Thus say thei that knew her in her youte. Albeit some that 'now see her (for yet she liveth) deme her never to have bene wel visaged. Whose jugement seemeth me somewhat like, as though men should gesse the bewty of one longe before departed, by her scape taken out of the chancel-bond. For now is she old, lene, withered, and dried up, nothing left but ryllide skin, and hard bone. And yet being even such, whosewell advise herr visage, might gesse and devise which partes how filled, wold make it a fair face.

"Yet delited not men so much in her bewty, as in her pleasant behaviour. For a proper vit had she, and could both rede wel and write: merie in company, redy and quick of sunswayer, neither mute nor full of balie; sometime taunting without displeasure, and not without disport. The king would say, That he had three combines, which in three divers pro-

Adjusted text:}

Drayton has written a poetical epistle from this lady to her royal lover, and in his notes thereto he thus draws her portrait: "Her stature was meane, her haire of a dark yellow, her face round and full, her eye gray, delicate harmony being betwixt each part's proportion, and each proportion's colour, her body fat, white and smooth, her countenance cheer-full and like to her condition. The picture which I have seen of hers was such as she rose out of her bed in the morning, having nothing on but a rich mantle cast under one arm over her shoulder, and sitting on a chaire, on which her naked arm did lie. What her father's name was, or where she was borne, is not certainly knowne: but Shore a young man of right goodly person, wealth and behaviour, abandoned her bed after the king had made her his concubine. Richard III. causing her to do open penance in Paul's church-yard, 'commanded that no man should relieve her,' which the tyrant did, not so much for his hatred to sinne, but that by making his brother's life odious, he might cover his horrible treasons the more cunningly." See England's He-

The history of Jane Shore receives new illustration from the following letter of King Richard III. which is preserved in the Harl. MSS. Number 433 Article 2378, but of which the copy transmitted to the Editor has been reduced to modern orthography, &c. It is said to have been addressed to Russel bishop of Lincoln, lord chancellour, Anno 1484.

* These words of Sir Thomas More probably suggested to Shakespeare that proverbial reflection in Hen. viii, Act 4, sc. 11.

"Men's evil manners live in brass: their virtues...

Shakespeare, in his play of Richard III., follows More's History of that reign, and therefore could not but see this passage.
By the KING.

"Right Reverend Father in God, &c. signifying unto you, that it is shewed unto us, that our Servant and Solicitor Thomas Lynom, marvellously blinded and abused with the late Wife of William Shore, now living in Ludgate by our commandment, hath made Contract of Matrimony with her, as it is said, and intendeth to our full great marvell, to effect the same. WE, for many causes, would be sorry that he should be so disposed; pray you therefore to send for him, and in that ye goodly may, exhort, and stir him to the contrary: And if ye find him utterly set for to marry her, and none otherwise would be advertised, then, if it may stand with the laws of the church, we be content the time of marriage be referred to our coming next to London; that upon sufficient Surety found of her good abearing, ye do so send for her Keeper, and discharge him of our said commandment, by Warrant of these, committing her to the rule, and guiding of her Father, or any other, by your direction, in the mean season." Given, &c.

="RIC. Rex."

It appears from two articles in the same MS. that King Richard had granted to the said Thomas Linom the office of King's Solicitor (Article 134.) and also the Manor of Colmeworth, com Bedf. to him his heirs male (Article 596).

An original picture of Jane Shore almost naked is preserved in the Provost's Lodgings at Eton; and another picture of her is in the Provost's Lodge at King's College, Cambridge: to both which foundations she is supposed to have done friendly offices with Edward IV. A small quarto mezzotinto print was taken from the former of these by J. Faber.

The following ballad is printed (with some corrections) from an old black-letter copy in the Pepys collection. Its full title is, "The woeful lamentation of Jane Shore, a goldsmith's wife in London, sometime king Edward IV. his concubine. To the tune of 'Live with me,' &c." [See the first volume.] To every stanza is annexed the following burthen:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Line</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Then maids and wives in time amend,</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>For love and beauty will have end.</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In Rosamonde that was so faire,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Had cause her sorrowes to declare,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Then let Jane Shore with sorrow sing That was beloved of a king.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In maiden yeares my beautye bright</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Was loved dear of lord and knight;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But yet the love that they requir'd,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>It was not as my friends desir'd.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>My parents they, for thirst of gaine,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A husband for me did obtaine;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And I, their pleasure to fulfille,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Was forc'd to wedd against my will.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To Matthew Shore I was a wife,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Till last brought ruine to my life;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And then my life I livdlye spent,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Which makes my soul for to lament.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In Lombard-street I once did dwelle,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>As London yet can witness welle;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Where many gallants did beholde My beautye in a shop of golde.</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I spred my plumes, as wantons doe,</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Some sweet and secret friend to wooe,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Because chast love I did not finde Agreeing to my wanton minde.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>At last my name in court did ring</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Into the eares of Englanstes king,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Who came and lik'd, and love requir'd,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But I made cowe what he desir'd :</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yet Mistress Blague, a neighbour neare,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whose friendship I esteemed deare,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Did saye, It was a gallant thing To be beloved of a king.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>By her persuasions I was led,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>For to defile my marriage-bed,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And wronge my wedded husband Shore,</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whom I had married yeares before.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In heart and mind I did rejoice,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>That I had made so sweet a choice;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And therefore did my state resigne,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To be king Edward's concubine,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From city then to court I went,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To respe the pleasures of content;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>There had the joyes that love could bring,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And knew the secrets of a king.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>When I was thus advanc'd on highe Commanding Edward with mine eye,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>For Mrs. Blague I in short space Obtaining a livinge from his grace.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>No friende I had but in short time</td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I made unto a promotion clime;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But yet for all this costlye pride,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>My husbande could not mee abide.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>His bed, though wronged by a king,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>His heart with deadlye griefe did sting;</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From Englanth then he goes away To end his life beyond the sea.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He could not live to see his name Impaired by my wanton shame;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Although a prince of peerlesse might</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Did respe the pleasure of his right.</td>
<td>55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Long time I lived in the courte,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With lords and ladies of great sorte;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And when I smil'd all men were glad,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But when I frown'd my prince grewe sad.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But yet a gentle minde I bore</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To helplesse people, that were poore;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I still redrest the orphans cye,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And sav'd their lives condemn'd to dye.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I still had ruth on widowes tears,</td>
<td>65</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I succour'd babes of tender yeares;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And never look'd for other gaine But love and thanks for all my paine.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>At last my royall king king did dye,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And then my dayes of woe grew nighe;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>When crook-back Richard got the crowne,</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>King Edwards friends were soon put downe.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Page</td>
<td>Text</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15.5</td>
<td>I then was punisht for my sin, That I so long had lived in; Yea, every one that was his friend, This tyrant brought to shamefull end.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80</td>
<td>Then for my lowd and wanton life, That made a strumpet of a wife, I penance did in Lombard-street, In shamefull manner in a sheat.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>85</td>
<td>Where many thousands did me viewe, Who late in court my credit knewe; Which made the tears run down my face, To tinke upon my foul disgrace.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>90</td>
<td>Not thus content, they took from mee My goodes, my livings, and my fee, And chang’d that none should me relieve, Nor any succour to me give.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>95</td>
<td>Then unto Mrs. Blague I went, To whom my jewels I had sent, In hope therebye to ease my want, When riches fail’d, and love grew scant:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>100</td>
<td>But she denied to me the same When in my need for them I came; To recompence my former love, Out of her doores shee did me shove.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>105</td>
<td>So love did vanish with my state, Which now my soul repents too late; Therefore example take by mee, For friendship parts in povertie.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>110</td>
<td>But yet one friend among the rest, Whom I before had seen distrest, And sav’d his life, condemn’d to die, Did give me food to succour me:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>115</td>
<td>For which, by lawe, it was decreed That he was hanged for that deed; His death did grieve me so much more, Than had I dyed myself therefor.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>120</td>
<td>Then those to whom I had done good, Durst not afford mee any food; Whereby I begg’d all the day, And still in streets by night I lay.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>125</td>
<td>My gownes beset with pearl and gold, Were turn’d to simple garments old; My chains and gems and golden rings, To filthy rags and loathsom things.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>130</td>
<td>Thus was I scorn’d of maid and wife, For leading such a wicked life; Both sucking babes and children small, Did make their pastime at my fall.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>135</td>
<td>I could not get one bit of bread, Whereby my hunger might be fed; Nor drink, but such as channels yield, Or stinking ditches in the field.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>140</td>
<td>Thus, weary of my life, at lengthe I yielded up my vital strength Within a ditch of loathsom scent, Where carrion dogs did much frequent:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>145</td>
<td>The which now since my dying daye, Is Shoreditch call’d, as writers saye; Which is a witness of my sinne, For being concubine to a king.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>150</td>
<td>You wanton wives, that fall to lust, Be you assur’d that God is just; Whoredome shall not escape his hand, Nor pride unpunish’d in this land.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>155</td>
<td>If God to me such shame did bring, That yielded only to a king, How shall they scape that daily run To practise sin with every one?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>160</td>
<td>You husbands, match not but for love, Lest some disliking after prove; Women, be warn’d when you are wives, What plagues are due to sinful lives: Then, maids and wives, in time amend, For love and beauty will have end.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

XXVII.

CORYDON'S DOLEFUL KNELL.

This little simple elegy is given, with some corrections, from two copies, one of which is in "The Golden Garland of Princely Delights."

The burthen of the song, "Ding Dong, &c." is at present appropriated to burlesque subjects, and, therefore, may excite only ludicrous ideas in a modern reader; but, in the time of our poet, it usually accompanied the most solemn and mournful strains. Of this kind is that fine aërial dirge in Shakepears Tempest:

"Full fadom five thy father lies, Of his bones are cornall made; Those are pearls that were his eyes; Nothing of him that doth fade, But doth suffer a sea-change Into something rich and strange: Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell, Harke now I heare them, Ding dong bell. "Burthen, Ding dong.""

I make no doubt but the poet intended to conclude the above air in a manner the most solemn and expressive of melancholy.

My Phillida, adieu love! For evermore farewell! Ay me! I've lost my true love, And thus I ring her knell,

But it had this name long before; being so called from its being a common Sewer (vulgarly Shore) or drain. See Stow.
THE COMPLAINT OF CONSCIENCE.

Ding dong, ding dong, ding dong,
My Phillida is dead!
I'll stick a branch of willow
At my fair Phillis' head.

For my fair Phillida,
Our bridal bed was made:
But 'stead of silkes so gay,
She in her shroud is laid.
Ding, &c.

Her corpse shall be attended,
By maides in fair array,
Till the obsequies are ended,
And she is wrapt in clay.
Ding, &c.

Her herse it shall be carried
By youths that do excell;
And when that she is buried,
I thus will ring her knell,
Ding, &c.

A garland shall be framed
By art and natures skill,
Of sundry-colour'd flowers,
In token of good-will.
Ding, &c.

And sundry-colour'd ribbands
On it I will bestow?
But chiefly black and yellow:
With her to grave shall go.
Ding, &c.

I'll decke her tombe with flowers,
The rarest ever seen,
And with my tears, as showers,
I'll keep them fresh and green.
Ding, &c.

Instead of fairest colours,
Set forth with curious art,
Her image shall be painted
On my distressed heart.
Ding, &c.

And thereon shall be graven
Her epitaph so faire,
"Here lies the loveliest maiden,
That e'er gave shepheard care."
Ding, &c.

In sable will I mourne;
Blacek shall be all my weede:
Ay me! I am forlorne,
Now Phillida is dead!
Ding dong, ding dong, ding dong,
My Phillida is dead!
I'll stick a branch of willow
At my fair Phillis' head.

THE END OF THE SECOND BOOK.

SERIES THE SECOND.

BOOK III.

I.

THE COMPLAINT OF CONSCIENCE.

I shall begin this Third Book with an old allegoric satire: A manner of moralizing, which, if it was not first introduced by the author of "Pierce Plowman's Visions," was at least chiefly brought into repute by that ancient satirist. It is not so generally known that the kind of verse used in this ballad hath any affinity with the peculiar metre of that writer, for which reason I shall throw together some cursory remarks on that very singular species of versification, the nature of which has been so little understood.

* It is a custom in many parts of England, to carry a flowery garland before the corpse of a woman who dies unmarried.

ON THE ALLITERATIVE METRE, WITHOUT RHYME, IN PIERCE PLOWMAN'S VISIONS.

We learn from Wormius*, that the ancient Islandic poets used a great variety of measures: he mentions 136 different kinds, without including rhyme, or a correspondence of final syllables: yet this was

* See above, prefaze to No. XI, Book II.+
+ This alludes to the painted effigies of Alabaster, anciently erected upon tombs and monuments.

* Literatura Rustica. Hafniae 1636, 4to.—1651, fol. The Islandic language is of the same origin as our Anglo-Saxon, being both dialects of the ancient Gothic or Teutonic. Vid. Hickes's Prefat. in Grammat. Anglo-Saxon, & Moeso-Goth, 4to, 16.9.
ON ALLITERATIVE METRE.

157

occasionally used, as appears from the Ode of Egil, which Wormius hath inserted in his book.

He hath analysed the structure of one of these kinds of verse, the harmony of which neither depended on the quantity of the syllables, like that of the ancient Greeks, and the Romans; nor on rhymes at the end, as in modern poetry; but consisted altogether in alliteration, or a certain artful repetition of the sounds in the middle of the verses. This was adjusted according to certain rules of their prosody, one of which was, that every distich should contain at least three words beginning with the same letter or sound. Two of these corresponding sounds might be placed either in the first or second line of the distich, and one in the other: but all three were not regularly to be crowded into one line. This will be the best understood by the following examples:

"Meire og Minoe
Mogu beindamall." Enn Gras huerge.

There were many other little niceties observed by the Islandic poets, who, as they retained their original language and peculiarities longer than the other nations of Gothic race had time to cultivate their native poetry more, and to carry it to a higher pitch of refinement, than any of the rest.

Their brethren the Anglo-Saxon poets occasionally used the same kind of alliteration, and it is common to meet in their writings with similar examples of the foregoing rules. Take an instance or two in modern characters;

"Steap tha and Skyrede
Ham and Heaselst
SKyppend ure." Heofena rikes.

I know not, however, that there is any where extant an entire Saxon poem all in this measure. But distichs of this sort perpetually occur in all their poems of any length.

Now, if we examine the versification of "Pierce Plowman's Visions," we shall find it constructed exactly by these rules; and therefore each line, as printed, is in reality a distich of two verses, and will, I believe, be found distinguished as such, by some mark or other in all the ancient MSS. viz.

"In a Somer Season, \ when t' hott \ was the Sunne,
I Shops me into Shroubs, \ as I a Shops were;
In Habits as an Yeart \ in Holy of werkes.
Went WYde in thys world \ Wonders to heare," &c.

So that the author of this poem will not be found to have invented any new mode of versification, as some have supposed, but only to have retained that of the old Saxon and Gothic poets; which was probably never wholly laid aside, but occasionally used at different intervals; though the ravages of time will not suffer us now to produce a regular series of poems entirely written in it.

There are some readers, whom it may gratify to mention, that these "Visions of Pierce [i.e. Peter] the Plowman," are attributed to Robert Langland, a secular priest, born at Mortimer's Cleobury in Shropshire, and fellow of Oriel college in Oxford, who flourished in the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II. and published his poem a few years after 1350. It consists of xx Passus or Breaks*, exhibiting a series of visions, which he pretends happened to him on Malvern hills in Worcestershire. The author excels in strong allegoric painting, and has with great humour, spirit, and fancy, censured most of the vices incident to the general passions of life; but he particularly inveighs against the corruptions of the clergy, and the absurdities of superstition. Of this work I have now before me four different editions in black-letter quarto. Three of them are printed in 1530 by Robert Crowley, dwelling in Elze restes in Holburne. It is remarkable that two of these are mentioned in the title-page as both of the second impression, though they contain evident variations in every page. The other is said to be newly imprinted after the authors oldc copy \ . . . . . by Owen Rogers, Feb. 21, 1561.

As Langland was not the first, so neither was he the last that used this alliterative species of versification. To Rogers's edition of the Visions is subjoined a poem, which was probably writ in imitation of them, intitled"Pierce the Ploughman's Creed." It begins thus:

"Cros, and Curteis Christ, this beginning spede
For the Faders Frendishpe, that Fourmed heaven,
And through the Special Spirit, that Sprong of hem twyene,
And al in one godhed endles dwellesh."

The author reigns himself ignorant of his Creed, to be instructed in which he applies to the four religious orders, viz. the gray friers of St. Francis, the black friers of St. Dominie, the Carmelites or white friers, and the Augustines. This affords him occasion to describe in very lively colours the sloth, ignorance, and immorality of those revered demons. At length he meets with Pierce a poor Ploughman, who resolves his doubts, and teaches him in the principles of true religion. The author was evidently a follower of Wiccliff, whom he mentions (with humour) as no longer living. Now that reformer died in 1304; how long after his death this poem was written, does not appear.

In the Cotton library is a volume of ancient English poems, two of which are written in this alliterative metre, and have the division of the lines into distichs distinctly marked by a point, as is usual in old poetical MSS. That which stands first of the two (though perhaps the latest written) is intitled "The sege of I r lam," [i.e. Jerusalem], being an old fabulous legend composed by some monk, and stuffed with marvellous figments concerning the destruction of the holy city and temple. It begins thus:

"In Tyberius Tyne \ the Trewre emperour
Syre Sear hysmelf \ beSed in Rome
Whyll Pylat was Provoste, under that Pryncye ryche

* The poem properly consists xx1 parts; the word passus, adopted by the author, seems only to denote the break or division between two parts, though by the ignorance of the printer applied to the parts themselves. See Series III. preface to balad III. where Passus seems to signify Pause.
† That which seems the first of the two, is thus distinguished in the title-page, none the second time impriunted by Robert Crowley; in the other, none the second time impriunted by Robert Crowley, in the former the folios are thus erroneously numbered, 39, 39, 41, 63, 43, 42, 45, &c. The book-sellers of those days did not ostentatiously affect to multiply editions.
‡ Signature. Cat. § Caligula A. ij. fol. 109, 123.
And Jewes Justice also . of Judeas londe
Herode under empre . as Hertyage wolde
Kynge," &c.

The other is intituled "Chevalere Assigne" [or De Cigne], that is, "The Knight of the Swan," being an ancient Romance, beginning thus:

"All-Weldynge God . Whene it is his Wylle
Wele he Wereth his Werke . With his owene honde
For ofte Harmes were Hente , that Helpe we ne myzte
Nere the Hyynes of Hym . that lengthen in Hevene
For this," &c.

Among Mr. Garrick's collection of old plays* is a prose narrative of the adventures of this same Knight of the Swan, "newly translated out of Frenshe into Englyshe, at thinstiguation of the puysissant and illustrious prince, lorde Edward duke of Buckynghame." This lord it seems had a peculiar interest in the book, for in the preface the translator tells us, that this "highe dygno and illustrous prynce my lorde Edwarde by the grace of god Duke of Buckyngham, erle of Hereforde, Staffordre, and Northampton, de-syrnge cotydally to encrease and augment the name and fame of such as were relucant in vertuous feates and triumphant actes of chyvalry, and to encourage and styre every lusty and gentell herte by the exemplificacion of the same, havynge a goodli booke of the highe and miraculous histori of a famous and puyssaunt kyngye, named Oryant sometime reynynge in the partes of beyonde the sea, havynge to his wife a noble lady; of whom he conceived sixe sonnes and a daughter, and chyldeyd of them at one only time; at whose byrthe echone of them had a chayne of sylver at their neckes, the which were all tourned by the provydence of god into whyte swannes, save one, of the whiche this present hystory is compylde, named Ilyeas, the knight of the swanne, 'of whom linally is dyscendynge my sayde lorde.' The whiche ententily to have the sayde hystorye more amply and unversally known in thys lys natif countrie, as it is in other, hath of hys lyf bountie by some of his faithful and trusti servauntes cohorted mi myスター Wyynkin de Wordet to put the said vertuous hystori in prynyte . . . at whose instigation and stirring I (Roberte Copland) have me applied, mouiing the helpe of god, to reduce and translate it into our material and vulgare english tongue alter the capacit and rudeenesse of my weke entendement."—A curious picture of the times!

While in Italy literature and the fine arts were ready to burst forth with classical splendour under Leo X., the first peer of this realm was proud to derive his pedigree from a fabulous "Knight of the Swant."

To return to the metre of Pierce Plowman: In the folio MS, so often quoted in this work, are two poems written in that species of versification. One of these is an ancient allegorical poem, intituled "Death and Life," (in 2 parts or fits, containing 428 distichs) which, for aught that appears, may have been written as early, if not before, the time of Langland. The first forty lines are broke as they should be into distichs, a distinction that is neg-

* K. vol. X.
* W. de Worde's edit. is in 1512. See Ames, p. 92. Mr. G's copy is "Imprinted at London by me William Copland."
* He is said in the story book to be the grandfather of Godfrey of Boulogne, through whom I suppose the duke made out his relation to him. This duke was beheaded May 17, 1591, 13 Henry VIII.

lected in the remaining part of the transcript, in order I suppose to save room. It begins,

"Christ Chrisen king that on the Crosse tholeth;
Hadd Paines and Passyons
to defend our soules;
Give us Grace on the Ground
the Greatlye to serve,
For that Royal Red blood that Rann from thy side."

The subject of this piece is a vision, wherein the poet sees a contest for superiority between "our lady Dame Life," and the "ugly fiend Dame Death;" who with their several attributes and concomitants are personified in a fine vein of allegoric painting. Part of the description of Dame Life is,

"Shee was Brighter of her Blee,
then was the Bright somn:
Her Rudd Redder then the Rose,
that on the Rise hangeth:
Meekely smiling with her Mouth,
And Merry in her lookes;
Ever Laughing for Love,
as shee Like would.
And as shee came by the Bankes,
The Boughes eche one
They Lowted to that Ladye, and Layd forth their branches;
Blossomes and Burgens
Breathed full sweete;
Flowers Flourished in the Frith,
where shee Forth stopped;
And the Grasse, that was Gray,
Greened belive."

Death is afterwards sketched out with a no less bold and original pencil.

The other poem is that, which is quoted in the 96th page of this work, and which was probably the last that was ever written in this kind of metre in its original simplicity unaccompanied with rhyme. It should have been observed above in page 96, that in this poem the lines are throughout divided into distichs, thus:

Grant Gracious God,
Grant me this time, &c.

It is intitled "Scottish Feilde" (in 2 Fitts, 420 distichs.) containing a very circumstantial narrative of the battle of Flodden, fought Sept. 9, 1513: at which the author seems to have been present, from his speaking in the first person plural:

"Then we Told downe our Tents, that Told were a thousand."

In the conclusion of the poem he gives this account of himself:

"He was a Gentleman by Jesu, that this Gest* made:
Which Say but as he Sayd† for Sooth and noe other.
At Bagily that Bearn his Biding place had;"

* Jest. MS.
† Probably corrupted for—' Say but as he Saw.'
On alliterative metre.

And his ancestors of old time have yeared * their longe,
Before William Conquerour
this Count did inhabit.
Jesus Brave them to Blisse,
that Brought us forth of Rale,
That hath Hearkned me Hearne
Or heard my tale.

The village of Bagley or Baguleigh is in Cheshire, and had belonged to the ancient family of Legh for two centuries before the battle of Flodden. Indeed that the author was of that country appears from other passages in the body of the poem, particularly from the pains he takes to wipe off a stain from the Cheshiremen, who it seems ran away in that battle, and from his encomiums on the Stanleys Earls of Derby, who usually headed that county. He laments the death of James Stanley, son of Ely, as what had recently happened when this poem was written; which serves to ascertain its date, for that prelate died March 22, 1544-5.

Thus have we traced the Alliterative Measure so low as the sixteenth century. It is remarkable that all such poets as used this kind of metre, retained along with it many peculiar Saxon idoms, particularly such as were appropriated to poetry: this preserves the attention of those who are desirous to recover the laws of the ancient Saxon Poesy, usually given up as inexplicable: I am of opinion that they will find what they seek in the metre of Pierce Plowman.

About the beginning of the sixteenth century this kind of versification began to change its form: the author of "Scottish Field," we see, concludes his poem with a couplet in rhyme: this was an innovation that did but prepare the way for the general admission of that more modish ornament: till at length the old uncoth verse of the ancient writers would and must leave him. Yet when Rhyme began to be superadded, all the niceties of Alliteration were at first retained along with it; and the song of "Little John Nobod" exhibits this union very clearly. By degrees the correspondence of final sounds engrossing the whole attention of the poet, and fully satisfying the reader, the internal embellishment of Alliteration was no longer studied, and thus was this kind of metre at length swallowed up and lost in our common Burlesque Alexandrine, or Anaplectic verse §, now never used but in ballads

* Yeared, i.e. buried, earthed, carded. It is common to pronounce "Earth," in some parts of England "Yearli," particularly in the North.—Pitscote, speaking of James I., says at Bambockburn, says, "Nae man yet what they yearded him."
† "us," MS. In the second line above, the MS. has "bidding."
‡ And in that of Robert of Gloucester. See the next note.
§ Consisting of four Anapests (a-o-) in which the accented rests upon every third syllable. This kind of verse, which I also call the Burlesque Alexandrine to distinguish it from the other Alexandrine, of eleven and fourteen syllables, the parents of our lyric measure: See examples, pp. 151, 123, &c. was early applied by Robert of Gloucester to serious subjects. That writer's metre, like this of Langland's, is formed on the Saxon models (each verse of his containing a Saxon diphthong only) instead of the internal alliterations adapted by Langland, and of Eastangle also, Of Kent, and of Westsex, and of the March, therto.

Robert of Gloucester wrote in the western dialect, and his language differs exceedingly from that of other contemporary writers, who resided in the metropolis, or in the midland counties. He is emphatically the poet of the Saxon tongue, and his language would probably have been as much distinguished for its different dialects as the Greek; or at least as that of the several independent states of Italy.

* Of thirteen syllables, in which they call a feminine verse. It is remarkable that the French alone have retained this old Gothic metre for their serious poems; while the English, Spaniards, &c. have adopted the Italian verse of ten syllables, although the Spaniards, as well as we, anctently used a short-lined metre. I believe the success with which Petrarch, and perhaps one or two others, first used the heroic verse of ten syllables in Italian Poesy, recommended it to the Spanish writers; as it also did to our Chaucer, who first attempted in English, and to his successors Lord Surrey, Sir Thomas Wyatt, &c. who afterwards improved it and brought it to perfection. To Lord Surrey we also owe the first introduction of blank verse in his versions of the second and fourth books of the "Aeneid," of 1557.

Thus our poets use this verse indifferently with twelve, eleven, and even ten syllables. For though regularly it consists of four anapests (a-o-o-a) or twelve syllables, yet they frequently retrace a syllable from the first or third anapest; and sometimes from both; as in these instances found, or in the following song of Conscience:

When his e'e he's at Paris' most needs know the Grive,
The fatal retreat of the unfortunate brave.
He's to hit him straight, kind him requite.

§ See instances in L'Hist. de la Poésie Française par Massien, &c. The same book are also specimens of alliterative French verses.
age, and in a rude unpolished language, abounds with verses defective in length, proportion, and harmony; and therefore cannot enter into a comparison with the correct versification of the best modern French writers; but making allowances for these defects, that sort of metre runs with a cadence so exactly resembling the French heroic Alexandrine, that I believe no peculiarieties of their versification can be produced, which cannot be exactly matched in the alliterative metre. I shall give by way of example a few lines from the modern French poets accommodated with parallels from the ancient poem of "Life and Death;" in these I shall denote the Caesura or Pause by a perpendicular line and the Cadence by the marks of the Latin quantity.

L'oeic de fut toijours\ | un enfant de l'audace ,
\ All shall drye with the dints \ that I deal with my hands.

L'homme pitéuyt voir trop — l'illusion se suit,
Yonder danst la death \ that dracuch hir to smite.

L'interpéd vòit monseur | et l'estomme faut ,
When she doelily saw \ how she dang downe hir folks.

Même azy yeux de l'injus | in injus eut horróblics ,
Then shc cast up a crye | to the high king of heavvn .

Dù mëssingi toijours | le oeu dëmurer moitre ,
Thaut shalt bitterlye bye | or else the bookè falleth.

Poùr périrtoir hóunte homme | en un mot, it first l'ertre,
This I fired through a frythi | where the doewn were many.

To conclude; the metre of Pierce Plowman's Visions has no kind of affinity with what is commonly called Blank Verse; yet has it a sort of harmony of its own, proceeding not so much from its alliteration, as from the artful disposal of its cadence, and the contrivance of its pause; so that when the ear is a little accustomed to it, it is by no means displeasing; but claims all the merit of the French heroic numbers, only far less polished; being sweetened, instead of their final rhymes, with the internal recurrence of similar sounds.

This Essay will receive illustration from another specimen in Watron's "History of English Poetry," Vol. I, p. 309, being the fragment of a MS poem on the subject of "Alexander the Great," in the Bodleian Library, which he supposes to be the same with Number 44, in the Ashmol. MSS. containing twenty-seven passus, and beginning thus:

Whener folk fistid [feasted, qu.] and fed, ayne wolde thel her [i. e. hear]
Some farand thing, &c.

It is well observed by Mr. Tyrwhitt, on Chaucer's sneer at this old alliterative metre: (Vol. iii, p. 305, vis.

I am a Sotherne [i. e. Southern] man,
I cannot geste, rom, ram, raf, by my letter.
That the fondness for this species of versification, &c. was retained longest in the northern provinces; and that the author of "Pierce Plowman's Visions" is the best MSS. called "William," without any surname. (See vol. iv. p. 74.)

ADDITIONS TO THE ESSAY ON THE ALLITERATIVE METRE.

Since the foregoing Essay was first printed, the Editor hath met with some additional examples of the old alliterative metre.

The first is in MS. * which begins thus:

* Catalina, A. 3 \ Boleil Sat. \ Boll. Sat. 11.
6 In a small 4to MS. containing 38 leaves in private hands.

Crist Crowned Kyng, that on Cros diest*,
And art Comfort of all Care, thow, kind go out of Cours
With the Halwes on Heven Heried mote thu be,
And thy Worshipful Werkes Worshiped evere,
That suche Sondry Signes Shewest unto man,
In Dremynge, in Dreecchynge; and in Derke swevenes

The author from this proemium takes occasion to give an account of a dream that happened to himself; which he introduces with the following circumstances:

Ones y me Ordayned, as y have Ofte doone,
With Frenades, and Felawes, Frenemen, and other;
And Caught me in a Company on Corpus Christi even,
Six, other Seven myle, out of Soutampton.
To take Melodye, and Mirthes, lamong my Makers;
With Redying of Romances, and Revelyng among,
The Dym of the Derkenesse Drewe me into the west;
And be Gon for to spryng in the Grey day.
Than Lift up my Lyddes, and Looked in the sky,
And Knewe by the Kende Cours, hit clered in the est:

Blyve y Busked me down, and to Bed went,
For to Comforte my Kynde, and Cacche a slepe.

He then describes his dream:

Methought that y Hoved on High on an Hill,
And loked Down on a Dale Depest of othre; Ther y Sawe in my Sigte a Selcoute peple;
The Multitude was so Mochue, it Migte not be nombred.

[axe Methoughte y herd a Crowned Kyng, of his Comunes A Soleyne || Subsidie, to Susteyne his werres.

[words, With that a Clerk Knochad adowne and Carped these Lieue Lord; yif it you Like to Listen a while, Som Sawes of Salomon y shall you shewe sone.

The writer then gives a solemn lecture to kings on the art of governing. From the demand of subsidies "to susteyne his werres," I am inclined to believe this poem composed in the reign of King Henry V. as the MS. appears from a subsequent entry to have been written before the 9th of Henry VI. The whole poem contains but 146 lines.

The alliterative metre was no less popular among the old Scottish poets, than with their brethren on this side the Tweed. In Maitland's Collection of ancient Scottish Poems, MS. in the Peshyan library, is a very long poem in this species of versification, thus inscribed:

Hiyn begins the Tretis of the Twa Marriit Wemen, and the Wedo, complyit be Maister William Dunbar.*

" Upon the Midsummer even Mirriest of nichits I Muvit furth alane quhen as Midnight was past Beseild aue Guidle Crene Garth, full of Gay Fours Henge t of ane Huge Hicht with Hawtewe trees Quairon ane Bird on ane Bransehe so First out hit notits

[hard, &c.]*

That nevir ane Blythefulller Bird was on the Benche *

* Didst dye. + though. ¶ being overpowered.
§ i. e. either, or.
¶ Solemn. * Since the above was written, this poem has been printed in "Ancient Scottish Poems, &c. from the MS. collections of Sir R. Maitland, of Lethington knight of London, 1786," 2 vols. 12mo. The two first lines, are here corrected by that edition.
 Garden. ¶+ Hedged. ¶+ Boogh.
The author pretends to over-hear three gossips sitting in an arbour, and revealing all their secret methods of alluring and governing the other sex; it is a severe and humorous satire on bad women, and nothing inferior to "Chaucer's Prologue to his Wife of Bath's Tale." As Dunbar lived till about the middle of the sixteenth century, this poem was probably composed after "Scottish Field" (described above in p. 158), which is the latest specimen I have met with written in England. This poem contains about five hundred lines.

But the current use of the Alliterative Metre in Scotland, appears more particularly from those popular vulgar prophecies, which are still printed for the use of the lower people in Scotland, under the names of "Thomas the Rymer," "Marvellous Merling," &c. This collection seems to have been put together after the accession of James I. to the crown of England, and most of the pieces in it are in the metre of "Pierce Plowman's Visions." The first of them begins thus:

"Merling says in his book, who will Read Right, Although his Sayings be uncooth, They Shall be true In the seventh chapter, read Whoso Will, [found, One thousand and more after Christ's birth, &c."

And the "Prophesie of Beid:"

"Betwixt the chief of Summer and the Sad winter; Before the Heat of summer Happen shall a war That Europ's lands Earnestly shall be wrought And Earnest Envy shall last but a while, &c."

So again the "Prophesie of Berlington:"

"When the Ruby is Raised, Reat is there none, But much Rancour shall Rise in River and plain, Much Sorrow is Seen through a Suth-bound That bears Hornes in his Head like a wyld Hart, &c."

In like metre is the "Prophesie of Waldbave:"

"Upon Lowdon Law alone as I Lay, Looking to the Lennox, as me I set thought, The first Morning of May, Medicine to seek For Malice and Melody that Moved me sore, &c."

And lastly, that intitled "The Prophesie of Gildas:"

"When holy kirk is Wrecked and Will has no Wit And Pastors are Puckt, and Pil'd without Pity When Idolatry Is in ens and re And spiritual pastours are vexed away, &c."

It will be observed in the foregoing specimens, that the alliterature is extremely neglected, except in the third and fourth instances; although all the rest are written in imitation of the cadence used in this kind of metre. It may perhaps appear from an attentive perusal, that the poems ascribed to Burlington and Waldbave are more ancient than the others: indeed the first and fifth appear evidently to have been new modelled, if not entirely composed about the beginning of the last century, and are probably the latest attempts ever made in this species of verse.

In this and the foregoing Essay are mentioned all the specimens I have met with of the Alliterative Metre without rhyme: but instances occur sometimes in old manuscripts, of poems written both with final rhymes in the internal cadence and alliterations of the Metre of Pierce Plowman.

The following song, intitled, "The Complaint of Conscience," is printed from the Editor's folio manuscript: some corruptions in the old copy are here corrected; but with notice to the reader wherever it was judged necessary, by inclosing the corrections between inverted ' commas.'

As I walked of late by 'an' wood side, To God for to meditate was my intent; Where under a Hawthorne I suddenly spied A silly poor creature ragged and rent, With bloody tears his face was besprent, His fleshe and his color consumed away, And his garments they were all mire, mucke, and clay.

This made me muse, and much 'to' desire To know what kind of man hee shold bee; I stept to him straight, and did him require His name and his secrets to shew unto mee. His head he cast up, and woeful was hee, My name, quoth he, is the cause of my care, And makes me scorned, and left here so bare.

Then straightway he turned him, and prayd 'me' sit downe, And I will, saith he, declare my whole greefe; My name is called "Conscience:"—whereat he did frowne, He pined to repeat it, and grinded his teeth, ' Though now, silly wretche, I'm denyd all releef,' ' Yet' while I was young, and tender of yeeres, I was ever holden in honest condition, For howsoever the lawes went in Westminster-hall, When sentence was given, for me they wold call.

No incomes at all the landlords wold take, But one pore peny, that was their fine; And that they acknowledged to be for my sake. The poore wold doe nothing without counsell mine: I ruled the world with the right line; For nothing was pass'd betweene foe and friend, But Conscience was called to bee at 'the' end.

Noe bargaines, nor merchandize merchants wold make But I was called a winnettese therto; No use for noe money, nor forfeitt wold take, But I wold controule them, if that they did soe: 'And' that makes me live now in great woe, For then came in Pride, Sathan's disciple. That is now entertain'd with all kind of people.

He brought with him three, whose names 'thus they call' That is Covetousness, Lechery, Usury, beside: They never prevail'd, till they had wroght my downe-fall;

Soe Pride was entertain'd, but Conscience decried, And 'now ever sines' abroad ave I tried To have had entertainment with some one or other, But I am rejected, and scorned of my brother.

Ver 1, one. MS. V. 15, him, MS. V. 19, not in MS. V. 23, he sate, MS. V. 35, an end, MS. V. 43, they be these, MS. V. 49, was derided, MS.
Then went I to the court the gallatns to winn, 50
But the porter kept me out of the gate:
To Bartlemew Spittle to pray for my sinne,
They bade me goe packe, it was fitt for my state;
Goe, goe, threeb-bare Conscience, and seeks thee a mate,
Good Lord, long preserve my king, prince, and With whom evermore I esteemed have been 56

Then went I to London, where once I did 'dwell':
But they bade away with me, when they knew my
For he will undoe us to bye and to sell! [name]
They bade me goe packe me, and bye me for shame:
They lought at my raggs, and there had good game;
This is old threeb-bare Conscience, that dwelt with saint Peter 63
But they wold not admit me to be a chimney-sweeper.

Not one wold receive me, the Lord 'be' doth know;
I having but one poor penny in my purse, 65
On an awle and some patches l did it bestow;
' For' I thought better cobble shoes than doe worse.
Straight then all the cobbers began for to curse,
And by statute wold prove me a rogue, and forborne,
And whipp me out of towne to ' seekes' where I was borne 70

Then did I remember, and call to my minde,
The Court of Consience where once I did sit:
Not doubting but there I some favor shold find,
For my name and the place agreed soe fit;
But there of my purpose I fayled a whit,
For 'thoughts' the judge us'd my name in everye 'commission,'
The lawyers with their quillets wold get 'my' dismission.

Then Westminster-hall was noe place for me;
Good lord! how the lawyers began to assemble,
And fearfull they were, lest there I shold bee! 80
The silly poore clarkes began for to tremble;
I showed them my cause, and did not dissemble;
Soo they gave me some money my charges to beare,
But swore me on a booke I must never come there.

Next the merchants said, Counterfeite, get thee away. 85
Dost thou remember how wee thee fond?
We banish thee the country beyond the salt sea,
And sett thee on shore in the New-found land;
And there thou and wee most friendly shook hand,

And we were right glad when thou didst refuse us; 90
For when we wold reapte profit here thou woldst accuse us.

Then had I noe way, but for to goe on
To gentlemens houses of an ancenty name;
Declaring my greeffes, and there I made moane,
'Telling' how their forefathers held me in fame; 95
And at letting their farmes 'how always I came.'
They said, Fye upon thee! we may thee curse:
'Theire' leases continue, and we fare the worse.

And then I was forced a begging to goe
To husbandmens houses, who greeved right sore, 100
And warse that their landlords had plagued them so,
That they were not able to keepe open doore,
Nor nothing had left to give to the poore:
Therefore to this wood I doe me repaye,
Where heppes and hawes, that is my best fare. 105

Yet within this same desert some comfort I have
Of Mercy, of Pitty, and of Almes-deeds;
Who have vowed to company me to my grave.
Wee are ' all' put to silence, and live upon weedes,
'And hence such cold house-keeping proceeds'; 110
Our banishment is its utter decay,
The which the riche glutton will answer one day.

Why then, I said to him, me-thinks it were best
To goe to the clergie; for daileye they preach
Eche man to love you above all the rest; 115
Of Mercye, and Pittie, and Almes-deeds, they teach.
O, said he, noe matter of a pin what they preach,
For their wives and their children soo hange them upon,
That whosoever gives almes they will* give none

Then laid he him down, and turned him away, 120
And prayd me to goe, and leave him to rest.
I told him, I haplie might yet see the day
For him and his fellows to live with the best.
First, said he, banish Pride, then all England were blest; 125
For then those wold love us, that now sell their
And then good 'house-keeping wold revive' out of hand.

Ver. 95, And how, MS. V. 101, so sore, MS. V. 189, il, MS. V. 110, not in MS. V. 119, almes-deeds. V. 126, houses every where wold be kept, MS.
* We ought in justice and truth to read 'eere.'
II.

PLAIN TRUTH, AND BLIND IGNORANCE.

This excellent old ballad is preserved in the little ancient miscellany, entitled, "The Garland of Good-will." Ignorance is here made to speak in the broad Somersetshire dialect. The scene we may suppose to be Glastonbury Abbey,

TRUTH.

God speed you, ancient father,
And give you a good daye;
What is the cause, I pray you,
So sadly here you staye?
And that you keep such guying
On this decayed place,
The which, for superstition,
Good princes down did raze?

IGNORANCE.

Chill tell thee, by my vason *
That sometimes che have knowne
A vair and goodly abbey
Stand here of bricke and stone;
And many a holy vrier,
As ich may say to thee,
Within these goodly cloysters
Che did full often zee.

TRUTH.

Then I must tell thee, father,
In trueth and verité,
A sorte of greater hypocrites
Thou couldst not likely see;
Deceiving of the simple
With false and feigned lies:
But such an order truly
Christ never did devise.

IGNORANCE.

Ah! ah! che smell thee now, man;
Che know well what thou art;
A yellow of mean learning,
Thee was not worth a vart:
Vor when we had the old lawe,
A merry world was then;
And every thing was plenty
Among all sort of men.

TRUTH.

Thou givest me an answer,
As did the Jews sometimes
Unto the prophet Jeremye;
When he accus'd their crimes:
'Twas merry, sayd the people,
And joyfull in our reame,
When we did offer spice-cakes
Unto the queen of heven.

* i.e. fathers: as in the Midland counties they say house, closen, for houses, closes. A.

IGNORANCE.

Chill tell thee what, good yowlewe,
Before the vriers went hence,
A bushel of the best wheate
Was zold vor vourteen pense;
And vorthy egges a penny,
That were both good and newe;
And this che zay my selfe have zeen,
And yet ich am no Jewe.

TRUTH.

Within the sacred bible
We find it written plain,
The latter days should troublesome
And dangerous be, certaines;
That we should be self-lovers,
And charity wax colde;
Then 'tis not true religion
That makes thee grief to holde.

IGNORANCE.

Chill tell thee my opinion plaine,
And chould't that well ye knewe,
Ich care not for the bible booke;
Tis too big to be true.
Our blessed ladies psalter
Zhall for my money goe;
Zuch pretty prayers, as there bee,*
The bible cannot showe.

TRUTH.

Nowe last thou spoken trulye,
For in that book indeede
No mention of our lady,
Or Romish saint we read:
For by the blessed Spirit
That book indited was,
And not by simple persons,
as was the foolish masse.

IGNORANCE.

Cham sure they were not voolish
That made the masse, che trowe;
Why, man, 'tis all in Latine,
And vools no Latine knowe.
Were not our fathers wise men,
And they did like it well;
Who very much rejoiced
To heare the zacring bell?

TRUTH.

But many kings and prophets,
As I may say to thee,
Have wisht the light that you have,
And could it never see;
For what art thou the better
A Latin song to heare,
And understandest nothing,
That they sing in the quiere!

* Probably alluding to the illuminated psalters, missals, &c.
THE WANDERING JEW.

IGNORANCE.

O hold thy peace, che pray thee,
The noise was passing trim,
To hear the vriers zinging,
As we did enter in:
And then to see the rood-loft
Zo bravely zet with saints;
But now to see them wandering
My heart with zorrow vaunts.

TRUTH.

The Lord did give commandment,
No image thou shouldest make,
Nor that unto idolatry
You should your self betake:
The golden calf of Israel
Moses did therefore spoile;
And Baal's priests and temple
Were brought to utter foile.

IGNORANCE.

But our lady of Walsingham
Was a pure and holy saint,
And many men in pilgrimage
Did shew to her complaint.
Yea with zweet Thomas Becket,
And many other mole:
The holy maid of Kent * likewise
Did many wonders showe.

TRUTH.

Such saints are well agreeing
To your profession sure;
And to the men that made them
So precious and so pure;

The one for being a traytoure,
Met an untimely death;
The other eke for treason
Did end her hateful breath.

IGNORANCE.

Yea, yea, it is no matter,
Dispraise them how you wille:
But zure they did much goodnesse;
Would they were with us stille!
We had our holy water,
And holy bread likewise,
And many holy reliques
We saw before our eyes.

TRUTH.

And all this while they fed you
With vaine and empty showe,
Which never Christ commanded,
As learned doctors knowe:
Search then the holy scriptures,
And thou shalt plainly see
That headlong to damnation
They alway trained thee.

IGNORANCE.

If it be true, good yelowe,
As thou dost say to mee,
Unto my heavenly fader
Alone then will I see:
Believing in the Gospel,
And passion of his Zon,
And with the zubitil papistes
Ich have for ever done.

III.

THE WANDERING JEW.

The story of the Wandering Jew is of considerable antiquity: it had obtained full credit in this part of the world before the year 1228, as we learn from Matthew Paris. For in that year, it seems, there came an Armenian archbishop into England, to visit the shrines and reliques preserved in our churches; who, being entertained at the monastery of St. Albans, was asked several questions relating to his country, &c. Among the rest a monk, who sat near him, inquired "if he had ever seen or heard of the famous person named Joseph, that was so much talked of; who was present at our Lord's crucifixion and conversed with him, and who was still alive in confirmation of the Christian faith." The archbishop answered, That the fact was true. And afterwards one of his train, who was well known to a servant of the abbot's, interpreting his master's words, told them in French, "That his lord knew the person they spoke of very well: that he had dined at his table but a little while before he left the East: that he had been Pontius Pilate's porter, by name Cartaphilus; who, when they were dragging Jesus out of the door of the Judgment-hall, struck him with his fist on the back, saying, "Go faster, Jesus, go faster, why dost thou linger?" Upon which Jesus looked at him with a frown, and said, "I indeed am going, but thou shalt tarry till I come." Soon after he was converted, and baptized by the name of Joseph. He lives for ever, but at the end of every hundred years falls into an incurable illness, and at length into a fit or ecstasy, out of which when he recovers, he returns to the same state of youth he was in when Jesus suffered, being then about thirty years of age. He remembers all the circumstances of the death and resurrection of Christ, the saints that arose with him, the composing of the apostles creed, their preaching, and dispersion; and is himself a very grave and holy person." This is the substance of Matthew Paris's account, who was himself a monk of St. Albans, and was living at the time when the Armenian archbishop made the above relation.

Since his time several impostors have appeared at intervals under the name and character of the "Wandering Jew," whose several histories may be seen in Calmet's dictionary of the Bible. See also the Turkish Spy, Vol. II. Book 3. Let. 1. The story that is copied in the following ballad is of one, who appeared at Hamburgh in 1547, and pretended he had been a Jewish shoemaker at the time of Christ's crucifixion.—The ballad however seems to be of later date. It is preserved in black-letter in the Pepys collection.

* By name Eliz. Barton, executed April 21, 1534. Stow, p. 570.
THE WANDERING JEW.

When as in faire Jerusalem
Our Saviour Christ did live,
And for the sins of all the worlde
His owne deare life did give ;
The wicked Jewes with scoffes and scornes
Did dailye him molest,
That never till he left his life,
Our Saviour could not rest.

When they had crown'd his head with thornes,
And scourg'd him to disgrace,
In scornfull sort they led him forth
Unto his dying place,
Where thousand thousands in the streete
Beheld him passe along,
Yet not one gentle heart was there,
That pityed this his wrong.

Both old and young reviled him,
As in the streete he wente,
And nought he found but churlish tauntes,
By every ones consente :
His owne deare crosse he bore himselfe,
A burthen far too great,
Which made him in the street to fainte,
With blood and water sweat.

Being weary thus, he sought for rest,
To ease his burchtened soule,
Upon a stone ; the which a wretch
Did churlishly controule;
And sayd, Awaye, thou King of Jewes,
Thou shalt not rest thee her ;
Pass on ; thy execution place
Thou seest nowe draweth neare.

And thereupon he thrust him thence ;
At which our Saviour sayd,
I sure will rest, but thou shalt walke,
And have no journey stayed.
With that this cursed shoemaker,
For offering Christ this wrong,
Left wife and children, house and all,
And went from thence alon.

Where after he had seene the bloud
Of Jesus Christ thus shed,
And to the crosse his bodye nail'd,
Awaye with speed he fled
Without returning backe againe
Unto his dwelling place,
And wandred up and downe the worlde,
A runnagate most base.

No resting could he finde at all,
No ease, nor hearts content ;
No house, nor home, nor biding place :
But wandring forth he went
From towne to towne in foreigne landes,
With grieved conscience still,
Repenting for the heinous guilt
Of his fore-passed ill.

Thus after some fewe ages past
In wandring up and downe ;
He much again desired to see
Jerusalems renowne,
But finding it all quite destroyd,
He wandred thence with woe,
Our Saviour's words, which he had spoke,
To verifie and shewe.

"I'll rest, sayd hee, but thou shalt walke,"
So doth this wandring Jew
From place to place, but cannot rest
For seeing newe place;
Declaring still the power of him,
Whereas he comes or goes,
And of all things done in the east,
Since Christ his death, he shewes.

The world he hath still compast round
And seen those nations strange,
That hearing of the name of Christ,
Their idol gods doe change :
To whom he hath told wondrous things
Of time forepast, and gone,
And to the princes of the world
Declares his cause of mome :

Desiring still to be dissolv'd,
And yeild his mortal breath ;
But, if the Lord hath thus decreed,
He shall not yet see death.
For neither lookes he old nor young,
But as he did those times,
When Christ did suffer on the crosse
For mortal sinners crimes,

He hath past through many a foreigne place,
Arabia, Egypt, Africa,
Grecia, Syria, and great Thrace,
And throughout all Hungarin,
Where Paul and Peter preached Christ,
Those bllest apostles deare ;
There he hath told our Savioirs words,
In countries far and neare.

And lately in Bohemia,
With many a German town ;
And now in Flanders, as tis thought,
He wandreth up and downe :
Where learned men with him conferre
Of those his lingering dayes,
And wonder much to heare him tell
His journeys, and his wayes.

If people give this Jew an almes,
The most that he will take
Is not above a groat a time :
Which he, for Jesus' sake,
Will kindelye give unto the poore,
And thereof make no spare,
Affirming still that Jesus Christ
Of him hath dailye care.

He ne'er was seene to laugh nor smile,
But wepe and make great moane ;
Lamenting still his miseries,
And dayes forepast and gone :
If he heare any one blaspheme,
Or take God's name in vaine,
He tellles them that they crucifie
Their Saviour Christe againe.
If you had seen his death, saith he, 125
As these mine eyes have done,
Ten thousand thousand times would ye 160
His torments think upon:
And suffer for his sake all paine,
Of torments, and all woes.
These are his words and eke his life
Whereas he comes or goes.

IV.

THE LYE.

BY SIR WALTER RALEIGH.

— is found in a very scarce miscellany intitled
"Davison's Poems, or a poetical Rapsodie divided into sixe books. . . . The 4th impression newly corrected and augmented, and put into a forme more pleasing to the reader. Lond. 1691, 12mo." This poem is reported to have been written by its celebrated author the night before his execution, Oct. 29.
1618. But this must be a mistake, for there were at least two editions of Davison's poems before that time, one in 1608 *, the other in 1611†. So that unless this poem was an after-insertion in the 4th edit. it must have been written long before the death of Sir Walter: perhaps it was composed soon after his condemnation in 1603. See Oldys's Life of Sir Walter Raleigh, p. 173, fol.

Goe, soule, the bodies guest,
Upon a thankelesse arrant;
Fear not to touche the best,
The truth shall be thy warrant:
Goe, since I needs must dye,
And give the world the lye.

Goe tell the court, it glowes
And shines like rotten wood;
Goe tell the church it showes
What's good, and doth no good:
If church and court reply,
Then give them both the lye.

Tell potentates they live
Acting by others actions;
Not lov'd unlesse they give,
Not strong but by their factions;
If potentates reply,
Give potentates the lye.

Tell men of high condition,
That rule affairs of state,
Their purpose is ambition,
Their practise onely hate;
And if they once reply,
Then give them all the lye.

Tell them that brave it most,
They beg for more by spending,
Who in their greatest cost
Seek nothing but commending;
And if they make reply,
Spare not to give the lye.

Tell zeale, it lacks devotion;
Tell love, it is but lust;
Tell time, it is but motion;
Tell flesh, it is but dust;
And wish them not reply,
For thou must give the lye.

Tell age, it daily wasteth;
Tell honour, how it alters;
Tell beauty, how she blasteth;
Tell favour, how she falters;
And as they shall reply,
Give each of them the lye.

Tell wit, how much it wrangles
In tickle points of niceness;
Tell wisedome, she entangles
Herselfe in over-wisenesse;
And if they do reply,
Straight give them both the lye.

Tell physicke of her boldnesse;
Tell skill, it is pretension;
Tell charity of coldness;
Tell law, it is contention;
And as they yield reply,
So give them still the lye.

Tell fortune of her blindnesse;
Tell nature of decay;
Tell friendship of unkindnesse;
Tell justice of delay:
And if they dare reply,
Then give them all the lye.

Tell arts, they have no soundnesse,
But vary by esteeming;
Tell schooles, they want profoundnesse,
And stand too much on seeming:
If arts and schooles reply,
Give arts and schooles the lye.

Tell faith, it's fled the citie;
Tell how the countrey ereth,
Tell, manhood shakes off pitie;
Tell, vertue least preferreth:
And, if they doe reply,
Spare not to give the lye.

So, when thou hast, as I
Commanded thee, done blabbing,
Although to give the lye
Deserves no less than stabbing,
Yet stab at thee who will,
No stab the soule can kill.

* Catalogue of T. Rawlinson, 1727.
† Catalogue of Sion coll. library. This is either lost or mislaid.
VERSES BY KING JAMES I.

In the first edition of this book were inserted, by way of specimen of his Majesty's poetic talents, some punning verses made on the disputations at Sterling; but it having been suggested to the Editor, that the king only gave the quibbling commendations in prose, and that some-obsequious court-rhymers put them into metre; it was thought proper to exchange them for two sonnets of King James's own composition. James was a great versifier, and therefore out of the multitude of his poems, we have here selected two, which (to show our impartiality) are written in his best and his worst manner. The first would not disownour writer of that time; the second is a most complete example of the Bathos.

A SONNET ADDRESSED BY KING JAMES TO HIS SON PRINCE HENRY.

From King James's Works in folio: where is also printed another called his Majesty's "own Sonnet:" it would perhaps be too cruel to infer from thence that this was not his Majesty's own sonnet.

God gives not kings the stile of Gods in vaine,
For on his throne his scepter do they savy:
And as their subjects ought them to obey,
So kings should fear and serve their God againe.

If then ye would enjoy a happie regne,
Observe the statutes of our heavenly King;
And from his law make all your laws to spring;
Since his lieutenant here ye should remaine.

Rewarde the just, be stedfast, true and plaine;
Represse the proud, maintainging aye the right;
Walke always so, as ever in His sight,
Who guardes the godly, plaguing the prophane.
And so ye shall in princely vertues shine,
Resembling right your mightie King divine.

A SONNET OCCASIONED BY THE BAD WEATHER WHICH HINDERED THE SPORTS AT NEWMARKET IN JANUARY 1616.

This is printed from Drummond of Hawthornden's works, folio: where also may be seen some verses of Lord Stirling's upon this sonnet, which concludes with the finest Anticlimax I remember to have seen.

How cruelly these cattive do conspire?
What louthisome love breeds such a baleful band
Betwixt the cankred King of Crete land*,
That melancholy old and angry sire,
And him, who wont to quench debate and ire
Among the Romans, when his ports were clos'd†?
But now his double face is still dispos'd,
With Saturn's help, to freeze us at the fire.

The earth ore-covered with a sheet of snow,
Refuses food to fowl, to bird, and beast:
The chilling cold lets every thing to grow,
And surfeits cattle with a starving feast.
Curs'd be that love and mought conduce short,
Which kills all creatures, and doth spoil our sport.

VI.

KING JOHN AND THE ABBOT OF CANTERBURY.

The common popular ballad of "King John and the Abbot" seems to have been abridged and modernized about the time of James I. from one much older, entitled, "King John and the Bishop of Canterbury." The Editor's folio MS. contains a copy of this last, but in too corrupt a state to be reprinted; it however afforded many lines worth reviving, which will be found inserted in the ensuing stanzas.

The archness of the following questions and answers hath been much admired by our old ballad-makers; for besides the two copies above mentioned, there is exist another ballad on the same subject (but of no great antiquity or merit), entitled, "King Olfrey and the Abbot:" Lastly, about the time of the civil wars, when the cry ran against the bishops, some puritan worked up the same story into a very doleful ditty, to a solemn tune, concerning "King Henry and a Bishop;" with this stinging moral:

"Unlearned men hard matters out can find,
When learned bishops princes eyes do blind."

The following is chiefly printed from an ancient black-letter copy, to "The tune of Derry down."

As an ancient story Ile tell you anon
Of a notable prince, that was called King John;
And he ruled England with maine and with might,
For he did great wrong, and maintein'd little right.

And Ile tell you a story, a story so merry,
Concerning the Abbot of Canterbury;
How for his house-keeping, and high renowne,
They rode poste for him to fair London towne.

* See a folio, intituled, "The Muses welcome to King James.
† See the collection of Historical Ballads, 3 vols. 1727.
Mr. Wise supposes Olfrey to be a corruption of Alfred, in his pamphlet concerning the White Horse in Berkshire, 6. 15.

* Saturn. † Janus. ‡ I. e. may it.
An hundred men, the king did heare say,
The abbot kept in his house every day;
And fifty golde chayne, without any doubt,
In velvet coats waited the abbot about.

How now, father abbot, I heare it of thee,
Thou keepest a farre better house than mee,
And for thy house-keeping and high renowne,
I feare thou wilt be treason against my crowne.

My liege, quo' the abbot, I would it were knoune,
I never spend nothing, but what is my owne;
And I trust, your grace will doe me no deere,
For spending of my owne true-gotten geere.

Yes, yes, father abbot, thy fault it is bigher,
And now for the same thou needest must dye;
For except thou canst answer me questions three,
Thy head shall be smitten from thy bodie.

And first, quo' the king, when I'm in this stead,
With my crowne of golde so faire on my head,
Among all my liege-men so noble of birth,
Thou must tell me to one penny what I am worth.

Secondly, tell me, without any doubt,
How soone I may ride the whole world about.
And at the third question thou must not shrinke,
But tell me here truly what I do think.

O, these are hard questions for my shallow witt,
Nor I answer your grace as yet:
But if you will give me but three weeke space,
Ile do my endeavour to answer your grace.

Now three weeks space to thee will I give,
And that is the longest time thou hast to live;
For if thou dost not answer my questions three,
Thy lands and thy living are forfeit to me.

Away rode the abbot all sad at that word,
And he rode to Cambridge, and Oxenford;
But never a doctor there was so wise,
That could with his learning an answer devise.

Then home rode the abbot of comfort so cold,
And be mett his shepheard a going to fold:
How now, my lord abbot, you are welcome home;
What newes do you bring us from good King John?

"Sad newes, sad newes, shepheard, I must give;
That I have but three days more to live:
For if I do not answer him questions three,
My head will be smitten from my bodie.

The first is to tell him there in that stead,
With his crowne of golde so faire on his head,
Among all his liege men so noble of birth,
To within one penny of what he is worth.

The seconde, to tell him, without any doubt,
How soone he may ride this whole world about:
And at the third question I must not shrinke,
But tell him there truly what he does think."
VII.

YOU MEANER BEAUTIES.

This little sonnet was written by Sir Henry Wotton, knight, on that amiable princess, Elizabeth daughter of James 1. and wife of the Elector Palatine, who was chosen King of Bohemia, Sept. 5, 1619. The consequences of this fatal election are well known: Sir Henry Wotton, who in that and the following year was employed in several embassies in Germany on behalf of this unfortunate lady, seems to have had an uncommon attachment to her merit and fortunes: for he gave away a jewel worth a thousand pounds, that was presented to him by the emperor, "because it came from an enemy to his royal mistress the Queen of Bohemia." See Biog. Britan.

This song is printed from the Reliquiae Wottoniana, 1651, with some corrections from an old MS. copy.

You meaner beauties of the night,
That poorly sate our eyes
More by your number, than your light;

You common people of the skies,
What are you when the moon shall rise? 5

Ye violets that first appear,
By your pure purple mantles known
Like the proud virgins of the yeare,
As if the spring were all your own;
What are you when the rose is blown? 10

Ye curious chaunters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's layses,
Thinking your passions understood
By your weak accents: what's your praise,
Whom Philomell her voyce shall raise? 15

So when my mistris shal be seene
In sweetnesse of her looks and minde;
By virtue first, then choyce a queen;
'Tell me, if she was not design'd
Th' eclipse and glory of her kind? 20

VIII.

THE OLD AND YOUNG COURTIER.

This excellent old song, the subject of which is a comparison between the manners of the old gentry, as still subsisting in the times of Elizabeth, and the modern refinements affected by their sons in the reigns of her successors, is given, with corrections, from an ancient black-letter copy in the Pepys collection, compared with another printed among some miscellaneous "poems and songs," in a book intitled, "Le Prince d'Amour," 1660, 8vo.

An old song made by an aged old pate, estate,
Of an old worshipful gentleman, who had a greate That kept a brave old house at a bountifull rate,
And an old porter to relieve the poor at his gate;
Like an old curtey of the queen's,
And the queen's old curtey.

With an old lady, whose anger one word assayswages;
They every quarter paid their old servants their wages,
And never knew what belong'd to coachmen, footmen, nor pages;
But kept twenty old fellows with blue coats and
Like an old curtey, &c.

With an old study fill'd full of learned old books,
With an old reverend chaplin, you might know him by his looks,
With an old buttery hatch worn quite off the books,
And an old kitchen, that maintain'd half a dozen old
Like an old curtey, &c. [cooks.

With an old ball, hung about with pikes, guns, and bows,
With old swords, and bucklers, that had borne many shrewde blows,
[ [hose, And an old frize coat, to cover his worship's trunk
And a cup of old sherry, to comfort his copper nose;
Like an old curtey, &c.

With a good old fashion, when Christmasse was come,
To call in all his old neighbours with bagpipe and drum,
With good cheer enough to furnish every old room,
And old liquor able to make a cat speak, and man
Like an old curtey, &c. [dumb.

With an old falconer, huntsman, and a kennel of hounds,
[ [grounds, That never hawked, nor hunted, but in his own Who, like a wise man, kept himself within his own bounds,
And when he dyed gave every child a thousand good
Like an old curtey, &c. [pounds;

But to his eldest son his house and land he assign'd,
Charging him in his will to keep the old bountifull mind,
[ [be kind: To be good to his old tenants, and to his neighbours But in the ensuing ditty you shall hear how he was inclined;
Like a young curtey of the king's,
And the king's young curtey.
Like a flourishing young gallant, newly come to his land, [mand, Who keeps a brace of painted madams at his command, And takes up a thousand pound upon his father's land, [stand; And gets drunk in a tavern, till he can neither go nor Like a young courtier, &c.

With a new-fangled lady, that is dainty, nice, and spare, Who never knew what belonged to good housekeeping, or care, [sir, Who buys gaudy-color'd fans to play with wanton lovers, And seven or eight different dressings of other women's hair; "Like a young courtier, &c.

With a new-fashion'd ball, built where the old one stood, [good, Hung round with new pictures, that do the poor no With a fine marble chimney, wherein burns neither coal nor wood, [ne'er stood; And a new smooth shovelboard, whereon no victuails Like a young courtier, &c.

With a new study, stuff full of pamphlets, and plays, And a new chaplain, that swears faster than he prays, With a new buttery hatch, that opens once in four or five days, [and toys; And a new French cook, to devise fine kickshaws, Like a young courtier, &c.

With a new fashion, when Christmas is drawing on, On a new journey to London straight we all must begone, [John, And leave none to keep house, but our new porter Who relieves the poor with a thump on the back with a stone; "Like a young courtier, &c.

With a new gentleman-usher, whose carriage is compleat, [up the meat. With a new coachman, footmen, and pages to carry With a waiting-gentlewoman, whose dressing is very neat, [eat; Who when her lady has dined, lets the servants not Like a young courtier, &c.

With new titles of honour bought with his father's old gold, [sold; For which sundry of his ancestors old manors are And this is the course most of our new gallants hold, Which makes that good house-keeping is now grown so cold, Among the young courtiers of the king, Or the king's young courtiers.

IX.

SIR JOHN SUECKLING'S CAMPAIGNE.

When the Scottish covenanters rose up in arms, and advanced to the English borders in 1639, many of the courtiers complimented the king by raising forces at their own expense. Among these none were more distinguished than the gallant Sir John Suckling, who raised a troop of horse, so richly accoutred, that it cost him 12,000l. The like expensive equipment of other parts of the army, made the king remark, that "the Scots would fight stoutly, if it were but for the Englishmen's fine cloaths." [Lloyd's Memoirs.] When they came to action, the rugged Scots proved more than a match for the fine shewy English: many of whom behaved remarkably ill, and among the rest this splendid troop of Sir John Suckling's.

This humorous pasquin has been generally supposed to have been written by Sir John, as a banter upon himself. Some of his contemporaries however attributed it to Sir John Mennis, a wit of those times, among whose poems it is printed in a small poetical miscellany, intitled, "Musarum delicis: or the Muses recreation, containing several pieces of poetick wit, 2d edition.—By Sir J. M. [Sir John Mennis] and Ja. S. [James Smith.] London 1636, 12mo."—[See Woods Athene, II. 307, 416.] In that copy is subjoined an additional stanza, which probably was written by this Sir John Mennis, viz.

"But now there is peace, he's return'd to increase, His money, which lately he spent-a, But his lost honour must lye still in the dust; At Barbwich away it went-a."

Sir John he got him an ambling nag, To Scotland for to ride-a, With a hundred horse more, all his own he swore, To guard him on every side-a.

No Errant-knight ever went to fight 5 With halfe so gay a bravada, Had you seen but his look, you'd have sworn on a Hee'ld have conquer'd a whole armada. [book,

The ladies ran all to the windows to see So gallant and warlike a sight-a, And as he pass'd by, they said with a sigh, Sir John, why will you go fight-a?

But he, like a cruel knight, spurr'd on; His heart would not relent-a, For, till he came there, what had he to fear? 15 Or why should he repent-a?

The king (God bless him!) had singular hopes Of him and all his troop-a: The borderers they, as they met him on the way, For joy did hollow, and whoop-a.

None lik'd him so well, as his own colonell, Who took him for John de Wert-a; But when there were shows of gunning and blows, My gallant was nothing so pert-a.

For when the Scots army came within sight, 25 And all prepared to fight-a, He ran to his tent, they ask'd what he meant, He swore he must needs goe sh*te-a.

Ver. 22. John de Wert was a German general of great reputation, and the terror of the French in the reign of Louis XIII. Hence his name became proverbial in France where he was called De Vert. See Bayle's Dictionary.
The colonell sent for him back agen,
To quarter him in the van-a,
But Sir John did swear, he would not come there,
To be kill'd the very first man-a.

To cure his fear, he was sent to the reare,
Some ten miles back, and more-a;
Where Sir John did play at trip and away,
And ne'er saw the enemy more-a.

X.
TO ALTHEA FROM PRISON:

This excellent sonnet, which possessed a high degree of fame among the old cavaliers, was written by Colonel Richard Lovelace during his confinement in the gate-house Westminster: to which he was committed by the House of Commons, in April 1642, for presenting a petition from the county of Kent, requesting them to restore the king to his rights,
and to settle the government. See Wood's Athenae,
Vol. II. p. 228, and Lysons's Environs of London, Vol. I. p. 109; where may be seen at large the affecting story of this elegant writer, who after having been distinguished for every gallant and polite accomplishment, the pattern of his own sex, and the darling of the ladies, died in the lowest wretchedness, obscurity, and want, in 1658.
This song is printed from a scarce volume of a poem intitled, "Lucasta, 1649, 12mo." collated with a copy in the Editor's folio MS.

When love with unconfined wings
Hovers within my gates,
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at my grates;
When I lye tangled in her haire,
And fetter'd with her eye,
The birds that wanton in the aire,
Know no such libertie.

When flowing cups run swiftly round
With no allaying Thames,
Our careless heads with roses crown'd,
Our hearts with loyal flames;
When thirsty grieve in wine we steepe,
When healths and draughts goe free,
Fishes, that tipple in the deepe,
Know no such libertie.

Stone walls doe not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage,
Minides, innocent, and quiet, take
That for an hermitage:
If I have freedom in my love,
And in my soule am free,
Angels alone, that soare above,
Enjoy such libertie.

XI.
THE DOWNFALL OF CHARING-CROSS.

Charing-cross, as it stood before the civil wars, was one of those beautiful Gothic obelisks erected to conjugal affection by Edward I, who built such a one wherever the heroe of his beloved Eleanor rested in its way from Lincolnshire to Westminster. But neither its ornamental situation, the beauty of its structure, nor the noble design of its erection (which did honour to humanity), could preserve it from the merciless zeal of the times: For, in 1647, it was demolished by order of the House of Commons, as popish and superstitious. This occasioned the following not unhumourous sarcasm which has been often printed among the popular sonnets of those times.
The plot referred to in ver. 17, was that entered by Mr. Waller the poet, and others, with a view to reduce the city and tower to the service of the king; for which two of them, Nathaniel Tomkins and Richard Chaloner suffered death July 5, 1643.
Vid, Athen. Ox. II. 24.

Undone, undone the lawyers are,
They wander about the towne,
Nor can find the way to Westminster,
Now Charing-cross is downe:
At the end of the Strand, they make a stand,
Swearing they are at a loss,
And chaffing say, that's not the way,
They must go by Charing-cross.
The parliament to vote it down
Conceived it very fitting,
For fear it should fall, and kill them all,
In the house, as they were sitting.
They were told, god-wot, it had a plot,
Which made them so hard-hearted,
To give command, it should not stand,
But be taken down and carted.

Ver 16, with wee-alaying themes, MS. Thames is used for water in general.
LOYALTY CONFINED.

Men talk of plots, this might have been worse
For anything I know,
Than that Tomkins, and Chaloner,
Were hang'd for long agoe. 20
Our parliament did that prevent,
And wisely them defended,
For plots they will discover still,
Before they were intended.

But neither man, woman, nor child,
Will say, I'm confident,
They ever heard it speak one word
Against the parliament.
An informer swore, it letters bore,
Or else it had been freed; 30
I'll take, in troth, my Bible oath,
It could neither write, nor read.

The committee said, that verily
To popery it was bent;
For ought I know it might be so, 35
For to church it never went.
What with excuse, and such device,
The kingdom doth begin
To think you'll leave them ne'er a cross,
Without doors nor within.

Methinks the common-council shou'd
Of it have taken pity,
'Cause, good old cross, it always stood
So firmly to the city.
Since crosses you so much disdain,
Faith, if I were as you,
For fear the king should rule again,
I'd pull down Tyburn too.

 Whitelocke says, "May 3, 1643, Cheapside cross and other crosses were voted down," &c.—But this Vote was not put in execution with regard to "Charing Cross" till four years after, as appears from Lilly's Observations on the Life, &c. of King Charles, viz. "Charing-Cross, we know, was pulled down, 1647, in June, July, and August. Part of the stones were converted to pave before Whitehall. I have seen Knife-hafts made of some of the stones, which, being well polished, looked like marble." Ed. 1715, p. 18, 12mo.

See an Account of the pulling down Cheapside Cross, in the Supplement to Gent. Mag. 1764.

XII.

LOYALTY CONFINED.

This excellent old song is preserved in David Lloyd's "Memoires of those that suffered in the cause of Charles I." London 1668, fol. p. 96. He speaks of it as the composition of a worthy personage, who suffered deeply in those times, and was still living with no other reward than the conscience of having suffered. The author's name he has not mentioned, but, if tradition may be credited, this song was written by Sir Roger L'Estrange.—Some mistakes in Lloyd's copy are corrected by two others, one in MS. the other in the "Westminster Drollery, or a choice Collection of Songs and Poems, 1671." 12mo.

Beat on, proud billows; Boress blow;
Swell, curled waves, high as Jove's roof;
Your incivility doth show;
That innocence is tempest proof;
Though surly Nereus frown, my thoughts are calm;
Then strike, Afflication, for thy wounds are balm. 6

That which the world miscalls a jail,
A private closet is to me:
Whilst a good conscience is my bail,
And innocence my liberty. 10
Locks, bars, and solitude, together met,
Make me no prisoner, but an anchoret.

I, whilst I wish to be retir'd,
Into this private room was turn'd; 15
As if their wisdoms had conspir'd
The salamander should be burn'd:
Or like those sophists, that would drown a fish,
I am constrain'd to suffer what I wish.

The cynick loves his poverty;
The pelican her wilderness;
And 'tis the Indian's pride to be
Naked on frozen Caucasus:
Contentment cannot smart, Stoicks we see
Make torments easie to their apathy.

These manacles upon my arm 25
I, as my mistress' favours, wear;
And for to keep my ancles warm,
I have some iron shackles there:
These walls are but my garrison; this cell,
Which men call jail, doth prove my citadel

I'm in the cabinet lockt up,
Like some high-prized margarite,
Or, like the great mogul or pope,
Am cloysterd up from publick sight:
Retirement is a piece of majesty, 35
And thus proud sultan, I'm as great as thee.

Here sin for want of food must starve,
Where tempting objects are not seen?
And these strong walls do only serve
To keep vice out, and keep me in:
Malice of late's grown charitable sure,
I'm not committed, but am kept secure.

So he that struck at Jason's life*,
Thinking t' have made his purpose sure,
By a malicious friendly knife 45
Did only wound him to a cure:

See this remarkable story in Cicero de Nat. Deorum, Lib. 3, c. 28. Cic. de Offic. Lib. 1. c. 30; see also Val. Max. 1, 8.
VERSES BY KING CHARLES I.

"This prince, like his father, did not confine himself to prose: Bishop Burnet has given us a pathetic elegy, said to be written by Charles in Carisbrook castle [in 1648.] The poetry is most uncouth and unharmonious, but there are strong thoughts in it, some good sense, and a strain of majestic piety." Mr. Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors, vol. I.

It is in his "Memoirs of the Duke of Hamilton," p. 379, that Burnet hath preserved this elegy, which he tells us he had from a gentleman, who waited on the king at the time when it was written, and copied it out from the original. It is there intituled, "Majesty in Misery: Or An Imploitation to the King of Kings."

Hume hath remarked of these stanzas, "that the truth of the sentiment, rather than the elegance of the expression, renders them very pathetic." See his History, 1763, 4to. Vol. V. pp. 437. 442. which is no bad comment upon them. These are almost the only verses known of Charles's composition. Indeed a little Poem "On a Quite Conscience," printed in the Poetical Calendar, 1763, vol. VIII. is attributed to King Charles I.; being reprinted from a thin 8vo. published by Nahum Tate, called "Miscellaneous Sacra, or Poems on Divine and Moral Subjects."

Great monarch of the world, from whose power The potency and power of kings, [springs Record the royal wo we my suffering sings And teach my tongue, that ever did confine Its faculties in truth's seraphick line, To track the treasons of thy foes and mine. Nature and law, by thy divine decree, (The only root of righteous royaltie) With this dim diadem invested me: With it, the sacred scepter, purple robe, The holy unction, and the royal globe: Yet am I livell'd with the life of Job. How doth she chant her wonted tale In that her narrow hermitage? Even then her charming melody doth prove, That all her bars are trees, her cage a grove.

I am that bird, whom they combine Thus to deprive of liberty; But though they do my corps confine, Yet maugre hate, my soul is free: And though immur'd, yet can I chirp, and sing Disgrace to rebels, glory to my king.

My soul is free, as ambient air, Although my baser part's immew'd, Whilst loyal thoughts do still repair 'T' accompany my solitude: Although rebellion do my body bind, My king alone can captivate my minde.

The fiercest furies, that do daily tread Upon my grief, my grey discrowned head, Are those that owe my bounty for their bread. They raise a war, and christen it the cause, While sacrilegious hands have best applause, Plunder and murder are the kingdom's laws; Tyranny bears the title of taxation, Revenge and robbery are reformation, Oppression gains the name of sequestration. My loyal subjects, who in this bad season Attend me (by the law of God and reason), They dare impeach, and punish for high treason. Next at the clergy do their furies frown, Pious episcopacy must go down, They will destroy the crosier and the crown. Churchmen are chain'd, and schismatics are freed, Mechanicks preach, and holy fathers bleed, The crown is crucified with the creed. The church of England doth all factions foster, The pulpit is usurpt by each impostor, Extempore excludes the Paternoster. The Presbyter, and Independent seed Springs with broad blades. To make religion bleed Herod and Pontius Pilate are agreed. The corner stone's misplac'd by every pavier: With such a bloody method and behaviour Their ancestors did crucifie our Saviour. My royal consort, from whose fruitful womb So many princes legally have come, Is forc'd in pilgrimage to seek a tomb. Great Britain's heir is forced into France, Whilst on his father's head his foes advance: Poor child! he weeps out his inheritance.
XIV.

THE SALE OF REBELLIOUS HOUSEHOLD-STUFF.

This sarcastic exultation of triumphant loyalty is printed from an old black-letter copy in the Pepys collection, corrected by two others, one of which is preserved in "A choice collection of 120 loyal songs, &c." 1684, 12mo.—To the tune of Old Simon the king.

Rebellion hath broken up house,
And hath left me old lumber to sell;
Come hither, and take your choice,
I'll promise to use you well:
Will you buy the old speaker's chair?
Which was warm and easy to sit in,
And oft hath been clean'd I declare,
When as it was fouler than fitting.
Says old Simon the king, &c.

Will you buy any bacon-flitches,
The fattest, that ever were spent?
They're the sides of the old committees,
Fed up in the long parliament.
Here's a pair of bellows, and tongs,
And for a small matter I'll sell ye 'un;
They are made of the presbyters lungs,
To blow up the coals of rebellion.
Says old Simon, &c.

I had thought to have given them once
To some black-smith for his forge;
But now I have considered on't,
They are consecrate to the church:
So I'll give them unto some quire,
They will make the big organs roar,
And the little pipes to squeake higher,
Than ever they could before.
Says old Simon, &c.

Here's a couple of stools for sale,
One's square, and 'tother is round;
Betwixt them both the tail
Of the Rump fell down to the ground.
Will you buy the states council-table,

Felons obtain more privilege than I,
They are allowed to answer ere they die;
'Tis death for me to ask the reason, why.

But, sacred Saviour, with thy words I woo
Thee to forgive, and not be bitter to
Such, as thou know'st do not know what they do.

For since they from their lord are so disjointed,
As to contemn those edicts he appointed,
How can they prize the power of his anointed?

Augment my patience, nullifie my hate,
Preserve my issue, and inspire my mate;
Yet, though we perish, bless this church and state,

Which was made of the good wain Scot?
The frame was a tottering Babel
To uphold the Independent plot.
Says old Simon, &c.

Here's the beesom of Reformation,
Which should have made clean the floor,
But it swept the wealth out of the nation,
And left us dirt good store.
Will you buy the states spinning-wheel,
Which spun for the roper's trade?
But better it had stood still,
For now it has spun a fair thread.
Says old Simon, &c.

Here's a glyster-pipe well try'd,
Which was made of a butcher's stump *
And has been safely apply'd,
To cure the colds of the rump.
Here's a lump of Pilgrim's Salve,
Which once was a justice of peace,
Who Noll and the Devil did serve;
But now it is come to this.
Says old Simon, &c.

Here's a roll of the states tobacco,
If any good fellow will take it;
No Virginia had e'er such a smack-o,
And I'll tell you how they did make it:
'Tis th' Engagement, and Covenant cockt
Up with the Abjuration oath;
And many of them, that have took't,
Complain it was foul in the mouth.
Says old Simon, &c.

Yet the ashes may happily serve
To cure the scab of the nation,
Whene'er 't has an itch to swerve,
To Rebellion by innovation.

* Alluding probably to Major-General Harrison, a butcher's son, who assisted Cromwell in turning out the Long parliament April 29, 1653.
A Lanthorn here is to be bought,
The like was scarce ever gotten,
For many plots it has found out
Before they ever were thought on
Says old Simon, &c.

70

Will you buy the Rump's great saddle,
With which it jocky'd the nation?
And here is the bit, and the bridle,
And curb of Dissimulation:
And here's the trunk-hose of the Rump,
And their fair dissembling cloak,
And a Presbyterian jump,
With an Independent smock,
Says old Simon, &c.

7

80

Will you buy a Conscience oft turn'd,
Which serv'd the high-court of justice,
And stretch'd until England it mourn'd :
But hell will buy that if the worst is.
Here's Joan Cromwell's kitching-stuff tub,
Wherein is the fat of the Rumpers,

85

With which old Noll's horns she did rub,
When he was got drunk with false bumpers.
Says old Simon, &c.

90

Here's the purse of the public faith;
Here's the model of the Sequestration,
When the old wives upon their good truth,
Lent thimbles to ruin the nation.
Here's Dick Cromwell's Protectorship,
And here are Lambert's commissions,
And here is Hugh Peter his scrip
Cram'd with the tumultuous petitions.
Says old Simon, &c.

95

105

And here are old Noll's brewing vessels,
And here are his dray, and his alings;
Here are Hewson's awl, and his bristles;
With diverse other odd things:
And what is the price doth belong
To all these matters before ye?
I'll sell them all for an old song,
And so I do end my story.
Says old Simon, &c.

100

XV.

THE BAFFLED KNIGHT, OR LADY'S POLICY.

Given (with some corrections) from a MS. copy, and collated with two printed ones in Roman character in the Pepys collection.

There was a knight who drank with wine,
A riding along the way, sir;
And there he met with a lady fine,
Among the cocks of hay, sir.

5

Shall you and I, O lady faire,
Among the grass yea down-a:
And I will have a special care
Of rumpling of your gowne-a.

Upon the grass there is a dewe,
Will spoil my damask gowne, sir:
My gowne and kirtle they are newe,
And cost me many a crowne, sir.

10

I have a cloak of scarlet red,
Upon the ground I'll throwe it;
Then, lady faire, come lay thy head;
We'll play, and none shall knowe it.

15

O yonder stands my steed so free
Among the cocks of hay, sir;
And if the pinner should chance to see,
He'll take my steed away, sir.

20

Upon my finger I have a ring
Its made of finest gold-a,
And, lady, it thy steed shall bring
Out of the pinner's fold-a.

Ver. 86. This was a cant name given to Cromwell's wife by the Royalists, though her name was Elizabeth. She was taxed with exchanging the kitchen-stuff for the candles used in the Protector's household, &c. See Gent. Mag. for March 1788, p. 345.

Go with me to my father's hall;
Fair chambers there are three, sir:
And you shall have the best of all,
And I'll your chamberlaine bee, sir.

25

He mounted himself on his steed so tall,
And her on her dapple gray, sir:
And there they rode to her father's hall,
Fast pricking along the way, sir.

30

To her father's hall they arrived strait;
'Twas monted round about-a;
She slipped herself within the gate,
And lockt the knight without-a.

35

Here is a silver penny to spend,
And take it for your pain, sir;
And two of my father's men I'll send
To wait on you back again, sir.

40

He from his scabbard drew his brand,
And wiped it upon his sleeve-a!
And cursed, he said, be every man,
That will a maid believe-a!

45

She drew a bodkin from her haire,
And whip'd it upon her gown-a;
And cuss'd every maiden faire,
That will with men lye down-a!

Ver. 94. See Grey's Hudibras, Pt. I, Cant. 2, ver. 576, &c. V. 108, 109, Cromwell had in his younger years lowered the brewing trade at Huntington. Col. Hewson is said to have been originally a cobler.
A herb there is, that lowly grows,
And some do call it rue, sir:
The smallest dunghill cock that crows,
Would make a capon of you, sir.

50

A flower there is, that shineth bright,
Some call it marigold-a:
He that wold not when he might,
He shall not when he wold-a.

55

The knight was riding another day,
With cloak and hat and feather:
He met again with that lady gay,
Who was angling in the river.

60

Now, lady faire, I've met with you,
You shall no more escape me;
Remember, how not long age
You falsely did intrap me.

65

The lady blushed scarlet red,
And trembled at the stranger:
How shall I guard my maidenhead
From this approaching danger?

70

He from his saddle down did light,
In all his riche atter;
And cryed, As I am a noble knight,
I do thy charms admyre.

75

He took the lady by the hand,
Who seemingly consented;
And would no more disputing stand:
She had a plot invented.

80

Looke yonder, good sir knight, I pray,
Methinks I now discover
A riding upon his dapple gray,
My former constant lover.

85

On tip-toe peering stood the knight,
Fast by the rivers brink-a;
The lady push'd with all her migh:
Sir knight, now swim or sink-a.

90

O'er head and ears he plunged in,
The bottom faire he sounded;
Then rising up, he cried amain,
Help, helpe, or else I'm drowned!

95

Now, fare-you-well, sir knight, adieu!
You see what comes of fauling:
That is the fittest place for you;
Your courage wanting cooled.

100

Ere many days, in her fathers park,
Just at the close of eve-a;
Again she met with her angry spark;
Which made this lady grieve-a.

105

False lady, here thou'rt in my powre,
And no one now can hear thee:
And thou shalt sorely rue the hour,
That e'er thou dar'dst to jeer me.

110

I pray, sir knight, be not so warm
With a young silly maid-a:
I vow and swear I thought no harm,
'Twas a gentle jest I playd-a.

115

A gentle jest, in soothe he cry'd,
To tumble me in and leave me!
What if I had in the river dyd?—
That fetch will not deceive me.

120

Once more I'll pardon thee this day,
The' injur'd out of measure;
But thee prepare without delay
To yield thee to my pleasure.

125

Well then, if I must grant your suit,
Yet think of your boots and spurs, sir:
Let me pull off both spur and boot,
Or else you cannot stir, sir.

130

He set him down upon the grass,
And begg'd her kind assistance;
Now, smiling thought this lovely lass,
I'll make you keep your distance.

135

Then pulling off his boots half-way;
Sir knight, now I'm your better:
You shall not make of me your prey;
Sit there like a knave in fetters.

140

The knight, when she had served him soe,
He fretted, fum'd, and grumbled:
For he could neither stand nor goe,
But like a cripple tumbled.

145

Farewell, sir knight, the clock strikes ten,
Yet do not move nor stir, sir:
I'll send you my father's serving men,
To pull off your boots and spurs, sir.

150

This merry jest you must excuse,
You are but a stingless nettle:
You'd never have stood for boots or shoes,
Had you been a man of mettle.

155

All night in grievous rage he lay,
Rolling upon the plain-a;
Next morning a shepherd past that way,
Who set him right again-a.

160

Then mounting upon his steed so tall,
By hill and dale he swore-a:
I'll ride at once to her father's hall;
She shall escape no more-a.

165

I'll take her father by the beard,
I'll challenge all her kindred:
Each dastard soul shall stand afeard;
My wrath shall no more be kindred.

170

He rode unto her father's house,
Which every side was mosted:
The lady heard his furious vows,
And all his vengeance noted.

175

Thought shee, sir knight, to quench your rage,
Once more I will endeavour:
This water shall your fury 'swage,
Or else it shall burn for ever.

180

Then faining penitence and fear,
She did invite a parley:
Sir knight, if you'll forgo me heare,
Henceforth I'll love you dearly.
OLD TOM OF BEDLAM.

My father is now from home,
And I am all alone, sir:
Therefore a-cross the water come;
And I am all your own, sir.

False maid, thou canst no more deceive;
I scorn the treacherous bait-a:
If thou would'st have me thee believe,
Now open me the gate-a.

The bridge is drawn, the gate is barr'd,
My father has the keys, sir;

But I have for my love prepar'd
A shorter way and easier.

Over the moate I've laid a plank
Full seventeen feet in measure:
Then step a-cross to the other bank,
And there we'll take our pleasure.

These words she had no sooner spoke,
But strait he came tripping over:
The plank was saw'd, it snapping broke;
And sous'd the unhappy lover.

XVI.

WHY SO PALE?

From Sir John Suckling’s Poems. This sprightly knight was born in 1613, and cut off by a fever about the 59th year of his age. See above, Song IX. of this book.

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
Prethee, why so pale?
Will, when looking well can’t move her,
Looking ill prevail?
Prethee why so pale?

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
Prethee why so mute?
Will, when speaking well can’t win her,
Saying nothing doe’t?
Prethee why so mute?

Quit, quit for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her;
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her.
The devil take her!

XVII.

OLD TOM OF BEDLAM.

MAD SONG THE FIRST

It is worth attention, that the English have more songs and ballads on the subject of madness, than any of their neighbours. Whether there be any truth in the insinuation, that we are more liable to this calamity than other nations, or that our native gloominess hath peculiarly recommended subjects of this cast to our writers; we certainly do not find the same in the printed collections of French, Italian Songs, &c.

Out of a much larger quantity, we have selected half a dozen "Mad Songs" for this work. The three first are originals in their respective kinds; the merit of the third last is chiefly that of imitation. They were written at considerable intervals of time; but we have here grouped them together, that the reader may the better examine their comparative merits. He may consider them as so many trials of skill in a very peculiar subject, as the contest of so many rivals to shoot in the bow of Ulysses. The two first were probably written about the beginning of the last century; the third about the middle of it; the fourth and sixth towards the end; and the fifth within the eighteenth century.

This is given from the Editor’s folio MS. compared with two or three old printed copies.—With regard to the author of this old rhapsody, in Walton’s Complete Angler, cap. 3. is a song in praise of angling, which the author says was made at his request "by Mr. William Basse, one that has made the choice songs of the ‘Hunter in his Career,’ and of ‘Tom of Bedlam,’ and many others of note," p. 84. See Sir John Hawkins’s curious edition, 8vo. of that excellent old book.

From my sad and darksome cell,
Or from the deep abyss of hell,
Mad Tom is come into the world again
To see if he can cure his distempered braine.

Fear, and cares oppresse my soule;
Harke, how the angry Fureys houle!
Pluto laughs, and Proserpine is glad
To see poor naked Tom of Bedlam mad.

Through the world I wander night and day
To seeke my straggling senses;
In an angry mood I meet old Time,
With his pentarchye of tenses:

When me he spyed,
Away he hyed,
For time will stay for no man:

In vaine with cryes
I rent the skyes,
For pity is not common.
Cold and comfortless I lye:
Helpe, oh helpe! or else I dye!
Harke! I heare Apollo's teame,
The carman 'gins to whistle;
Chast Diana bends her bowe,
The boare begins to bristle.

Come, Vulcan, with tools and with tackles,
To knocke off my troublesome shackles;
Bid Charles make ready his waine
To fetch me my senses againe.

Last night I heard the dog-star bark;
Mars met Venus in the darke;
Limping Vulcan het an iron barr,
And furiouslye made at the god of war:

Mars with his weapon laid about,
But Vulcan's temples had the gout,
For his broad horns did so hang in his light,
He could not see to aim his blows aright:

The beast's ten horns (God bless us!)
I have knock'd off three already;
If they let me alone
I'll leave him none:
But they say I am too heady.
Boldly I preach, &c.

When I sack'd the seven-hill'd city,
I met the great red dragon;
I kept him aloof
With the armour of proof,
Though here I have never a rag on.
Boldly I preach, &c.

With a fiery sword and target,
There fought I with this monster:
But the sons of pride
My zeal deride,
And all my deeds misconstrue.
Boldly I preach, &c.

I un-hors'd the Whore of Babel,
With the lance of Inspiration;
I made her stink,
And spill the drink
In her cup of abomination.
Boldly I preach, &c.

I have seen two in a vision
With a flying book* between them.

--- was written about the beginning of the seven teenth century by the witty bishop Corbet, and is printed from the third edition of his poems, 12mo.

1672, compared with a more ancient copy in the Editor's folio MS.

Am I mad, O noble Festus,
When zeal and godly knowledge
Have put me in hope
To deal with the pope,
As well as the best in the college?
Boldly I preach, hate a cross, hate a surprice,
Mitres, copes, and rochet's;
Come hear me pray nine times a day,
And fill your heads with crochets.

In the house of pure Emanuel*
I had my education,
Where my friends surmise
I dazeld my eyes
With the sight of revelation.
Boldly I preach, &c.

They bound me like a bedlam,
They lash'd my four poor quarters;
Whilst this I endure,
Faith makes me sure
To be one of Foxes martyrs.
Boldly I preach, &c.

These injuries I suffer
Through antichrist's perswasion:
Take off this chain,
Neither Rome nor Spain
Can resist my strong invasion.
Boldly I preach, &c.

Mercury, the nimble post of heaven,
Stood still to see the quarrell;
Gorrel-bellyed Bacchus, hyant-like,
Bestryd a strong-beere barrell.

To mee he dranke,
I did him thanke,
But I could get no cyder;
He dranke whole butts
Till he burst his guts,
But mine were ner' the wyder.

Poore naked Tom is very drye:
A little drinke for charitey!
Harke, I hear Acteon's horse!
The huntsmen whoop and hallowe:
Ringwood, Royster, Bowman, Jowler,
All the chase do followe.

The man in the moone drinkes clarret,
Eates powder'd beef, turnip, and carret,
But a cup of old Malaga sack
Will fire the bushe at his backe.

* Emanuel College, Cambridge, was originally a semi nary of Puritania.
I have been in despair
Five times in a year,
And been cur'd by reading Greenham*.
Boldly I preach, &c.

I observe'd in Perkin's tables†
The black line of damnation;
Those crooked veins
So stuck in my brains,
That I fear'd my reprobation.
Boldly I preach, &c.

In the holy tongue of Canaan
I plac'd my chiefest pleasure:

Till I prick'd my foot
With an Hebrew root,
That I bled beyond all measure.
Boldly I preach, &c.

I appear'd before the archbishop*,
And all the high commission;
I gave him no grace,
But told him to his face,
That he favour'd superstition.
Boldly I preach, hate a cross, hate a surplice,
Mifres, copes, and rochet's:
Come hear me pray nine times a day,
And fill your heads with crotchets.

---

XIX.
THE LUNATIC LOVER, MAD SONG THE THIRD,

--- is given from an old printed copy in the British Museum, compared with another in the Pepys collection; both in black letter.

Grim king of the ghosts, make haste,
And bring hither all your train;
See how the pale moon does waste,
And just now is in the wane.
Come, you night-bags, with all your charms,
And revelling witches away,
And hug me close in your arms;
To you my respects I'll pay.

I'll court you, and think you fair,
Since love does distract my brain:
I'll go, I'll we'd the night-mare,
And kiss her, and kiss her again:
But if she prove peevish and proud,
Then, a pike on her love! let her go;
I'll seek me a winding shroud,
And down to the shades below.

A lunacy sad I endure,
Since reason departs away;
I call to those bags for a cure,
As knowing not what I say.
The beauty, whom I do adore,
Now slights me with scorn and disdain;
I never shall see her more:
Ah! how shall I bear my pain!

I ramble, and range about
To find out my charming saint;
While she at my grief does flout,
And smiles at my loud complaint.

---

Distraction I see is my doom,
Of this I am now too sure;
A rival is got in my room,
While torments I do endure.
Strange fancies do fill my head,
While wandering in despair,
I am to the deserts lead,
Expecting to find her there.
Methinks in a spangled cloud
I see her enthroned on high;
Then to her I criie aloud,
And labour to reach the sky.

When thus I have raved awhile,
And wearied myself in vain,
I lye on the barren soil,
And bitterly do complain.
Till slumber liath quieted me,
In sorrow I sigh and weep;
The clouds are my canopy
To cover me while I sleep.

I dream that my charming fair
Is then in my rival's bed,
Whose tresses of golden hair
Are on the fair pillow bespread.
Then this doth my passion inflame,
I start, and no longer can lie:
Ah! Sylvia, art thou not to blame
To ruin a lover? I cry.

Grim king of the ghosts, be true,
And hurry me hence away,
My languishing life to you
A tribute I freely pay.
To the Elysian shades I post
In hopes to be freed from care,
Where many a bleeding ghost
Is hovering in the air.

---

* See Greenham's Works, fol. 1005, particularly the tract intitled "A sweet Comfort for an Afflicted Conscience."
† See Perkin's Works, fol. 1010, vol. 1, p. 11; where is a large half sheet folioed, containing, "A survey, or table, declaring the order of the causes of salvation and damnation, &c." the pedigree of damnation being distinguished by a broad black zig-zag line.
XX.

THE LADY DISTRACTED WITH LOVE,

MAD SONG THE FOURTH,

was originally sung in one of Tom D'Urfey's comedies of Don Quixote, acted in 1694 and 1696: and probably composed by himself. In the several stanzas, the author represents his pretty Mad-woman as 1. sullenly mad; 2. mirthfully mad: 3. melancholy mad: 4. fantastically mad: and 5. stark mad. Both this and Num. XXII. are printed from D'Urfey's "Pills to purge Melancholy," 1719, vol. 1.

From rosie bowers, where sleeps the god of love,
Hither ye little wanton cupids fly;
Teach me in soft melodious strains to move
With tender passion my heart's darling joy:
Ah! let the soul of musick tune my voice,
To win dear Strephon, who my soul enjoys.

Oh, if more influencing
Is to be brisk and airy,
With a step and a bound,
With a frisk from the ground,
I'll trip like any fairy.

As once on Ida dancing
Were three celestial bodies:
With an air, and a face,
And a shape, and a grace,
I'll charm, like beauty's goddess.

Ah! 'tis in vain! 'tis all, 'tis all in vain!
Death and despair must end the fatal pain:
Cold, cold despair, disguis'd like snow and rain,
Plays on my breast; bleak winds in tempests blow;
My veins all shiver, and my fingers glow:
My pulse beats a dead March for lost repose,
And to a solid lump of ice my poor fond heart is froze.

Or say, ye powers, my peace to crown,
Shall I thaw myself, and drown
Among the foaming billows?
Increasing all with tears I shed,
On beds of ooze, and crystal pillows,
Lay down, lay down my love-sick head!

No, no, I'll strait run mad, mad, mad;
That soon my heart, will warm;
When once the sense is fled, is fled,
Love has no power to charm,
Wild thro' the woods I'll fly, I'll fly,
Robes, looks—shall thus—be tore!
A thousand, thousand times I'll dye
Ere thus, thus in vain,—ere thus in vain adore.

XXI.

THE DISTRACTED LOVER,

MAD SONG THE FIFTH,

was written by Henry Carey, a celebrated composer of music at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and author of several little Theatrical Entertainments, which the reader may find enumerated in the "Companion to the Play-house," &c. The sprightliness of this songster's fancy could not preserve him from a very melancholy catastrophe, which was effected by his own hand. In his Poems, 4to, Lond. 1729, may be seen another mad song of this author, beginning thus:

"Gods! I can never this endure,
Death alone must be my cure," &c.

I go to the Elysian shade,
Where sorrow ne'er shall wound me;
Where nothing shall my rest invade,
But joy shall still surround me.

I fly from Celia's cold disdain,
From her disdain I fly;
She is the cause of all my pain,
For her alone I die.

Her eyes are brighter than the mid-day sun,
When he but half his radiant course has run,
When his meridian glories gaily shine,
And gild all nature with a warmth divine.

See yonder river's flowing tide,
Which now so full appears;
Those streams, that do so swiftly glide,
Are nothing but my tears.

There I have wept till I could weep no more,
And curst mine eyes, when they have wept their store;
Then, like the clouds, that rob the azure main,
I've drain'd the flood to weep it back again.

Fifty my pains,
Ye gentle swains!
Cover me with ice and snow,
I scorch, I burn, I flame, I glow!
LILLI BURLERO. 181

Furies, tear me, 25
Quickly bear me
To the dismal shades below!
Where yelling, and howling,
And grumbling, and growling,
Strike the ear with horrid woe.

Hissing snakes,
Fiery lakes

Would be a pleasure, and a cure:
Not all the hells,
Where Pluto dwells,
Can give such pain as I endure

To some peaceful plain convey me,
On a mossy carpet lay me,
Fan me with ambrosial breeze,
Let me die, and so have ease!

XXII.
THE FRANTIC LADY, MAD SONG THE SIXTH.

This, like Number XX, was originally sung in one of D'Urfey's Comedies of Don Quixote, (first acted about the year 1694) and was probably composed by that popular songster, who died Feb. 26, 1723.

This is printed in the "Hive, a Collection of Songs," 4 vols. 1721, 12mo, where may be found two or three other mad songs not admitted into these volumes.

I burn, my brain consumes to ashes!
Each eye-ball too like lightning flashes!
Within my breast there glows a solid fire,
Which in a thousand ages can't expire!

Blow, blow, the winds' great ruler!
Bring the Po, and the Ganges hither,
'Tis sultry weather;

Pour them all on my soul,
It will bliss like a coal,
But be never the cooler.

'Twas pride hot as hell,
That first made me rebell,
From love's awful throne a curt Angel I fell;
And mourn now my fate,
Which myself did create:
Fool, fool, that consider'd not when I was well!

Adieu! ye vain transporting joys!
Off ye vain fantastic toys!
That dress this face—this body—to allure!
Bring me daggers, poison, fire!
Since scorn is turn'd into desire.
All hell feels not the rage, which I, poor I, endure.

XXIII.

LILLI BURLERO.

The following rhymes, slight and insignificant as they may now seem, had once a more powerful effect than either the Philippics of Demosthenes, or Cicero; and contributed not a little towards the great revolution in 1688. Let us hear a contemporary writer.

"A foolish ballad was made at that time, treating the Papists, and chiefly the Irish, in a very ridiculous manner, which had a burden said to be Irish words, 'lero, lero, lilliburlero,' that made an impression on the [king's] army, that cannot be imagined by those that saw it not. The whole army, and at last the people, both in city and country, were singing it perpetually. And perhaps never had so slight a thing so great an effect."—Burnet.

It was written, or at least republished, on the Earl of Tyrconnel's going a second time to Ireland in October 1688. Perhaps it is unnecessary to mention, that General Richard Talbot, newly created Earl of Tyrconnel, had been nominated by King James II. to the lieutenantcy of Ireland in 1686, on account of his being a furious papist, who had recommended himself to his bigoted master by his arbitrary treatment of the protestants in the preceding year, when only lieutenant general, and whose subsequent conduct fully justified his expectations and their fears. The violence of his administration may be seen in any of the histories of those times: particularly in Bishop King's "State of the Protestants in Ireland," 1691, 4to.

Lilliburlero and Bullen-a-la are said to have been the words of distinction used among the Irish Papists in their massacre of the Protestants in 1641.

Ho! ho! ho! broder Teague, dost hear de decree?
Lilli burlero, bulleen a-la.
Dat we shall have a new deputie,
Lilli burlero, bulleen a-la.
Lero lero, lilli burlero, lero lero, bulleen a-la, 5
Lero lero, lilli burlero, lero lero, bulleen a-la.

Ho! by shaint Tyburn, it is de Talbote:
Lilli, &c.
And he will cut de Englishmen's troaste:
Lilli, &c.

Ver. 7, Ho by my shoul, al. ed.
THE BRAES OF YARROW.

And he dat will not go to de mass,
Lilli, &c.

Shall be turn out, and look like at ass.
Lilli, &c.

Now, now de hereticks all go down,
Lilli, &c.

By Chrish and shaint Patrick, de nation's our own.
Lilli, &c.

Dare was an old prophesy found in a bog,
Lilli, &c.

"Ireland shall be rul'd by an ass and a dog."
Lilli, &c.

And now dis prophesy is come to pass,
Lilli, &c.

For Talbot's de dog, and Ju* is de ass.
Lilli, &c.

* * The foregoing song is attributed to Lord Wharton in a small pamphlet, entitled, "A true relation of the several facts and circumstances of the intended riot and tumult on Queen Elizabeth's birthday, &c." third edition, London, 1712, price 2d.—See p. 5, viz. "A late Viceroy of Ireland, who has so often boasted himself upon his talent for mischief, invention, lying, and for making a certain Lilliburrers Song; with which, if you will believe himself, he sung a deluded prince out of three kingdoms."

XXIV.

THE BRAES OF YARROW,

IN IMITATION OF THE ANCIENT SCOTS MANNER,

was written by William Hamilton, of Bangour, Esq. who died March 23, 1754, aged 50. It is printed from an elegant edition of his Poems, published at Edinburgh, 1760, 12mo. This song was written in imitation of an old Scottish Ballad on a similar subject, with the same burden to each stanza.

A. Busk ye, busk ye, my bonny bonny bride,
   Busk ye, busk ye, my winsome marrow,
   Busk ye, busk ye, my bonny bonny bride,
   And think nae mair on the Braes of Yarrow.

B. Where gat ye that bonny bonny bride?
   Where gat ye that winsome marrow?
A. I gat her where I dare na well be seen,
   Puing the birks on the Braes of Yarrow.

Weep not, weep not, my bonny bonny bride,
   Weep not, weep not, my winsome marrow;
Nor ley thy heart lament to leive,
   Puing the birks on the Braes of Yarrow.
B. Why does she weep, thy bonny bonny bride?
   Why does she weep thy winsome marrow?
And why dare ye nae mair we be seen
   Puing the birks on the Braes of Yarrow?
A. Lang maun she weep, lang maun she, maun she weep,
   Lang maun she weep with dule and sorrow;
And lang maun I nae mair we be seen
   Puing the birks on the Braes of Yarrow.

For she has tint her laver, laver dear,
   Her laver dear, the cause of sorrow;
   And I hae slain the comliest swain,
   That eir pu'd birks on the Braes of Yarrow.

Why rins thy stream, O Yarrow, Yarrow, reid?
   Why on thy bras heard the voice of sorrow?
And why yon melancholious weeds
   Hung on the bonny birks of Yarrow?

What's yonder floats on the rueful rueful flude?
   What's yonder floats! O dule and sorrow!
   O 'tis he the comely swain I slew
   Upon the duleful Braes of Yarrow.

Wash, O wash his wounds, his wounds in tears,
   His wounds in tears with dule and sorrow;
   And wrap his limbs in mourning weeds,
   And lay him on the Braes of Yarrow.

Then build, then build, ye sisters, sisters sad,
   Ye sisters sad, his tomb with sorrow;
   And weep around in weeful wise
   His hapless fate on the Braes of Yarrow.

Curse ye, curse ye, his useless, useless shield,
   My arm that wrought the deed of sorrow,
   The fatal spear that pier'd his breast,
   His comely breast on the Braes of Yarrow.

Ver. 42, What follows is not in the same copies.
ADIMIRAL HOSIER'S GHOST.

Did I not warn thee, not to, not to luve? 45
And warn from sight? but to my sorrow
Too rashly build a stronger arm
Thou met'st, and fell'st on the Braes of Yarrow.

Sweet smells the birk, green grows, green grows
the grass,
Yellow on Yarrow's bank the gowan,
Fair hangs the apple free the rock,
The sweet wave of Yarrow flowan.

Flows Yarrow sweet? as sweet, as sweet flows
Tweed,
As green its grass, its gowan as yellow,
As sweet smells on its braes the birk,
The apple free its rock as mellow.

Fair was thy luve, fair fair indeed thy luve,
In flow'ry bands thou didst him fetter;
Tho' he was fair, and well belu'v'd again
Than me he never lu'ved thee better.

Busk ye, then busk, my bonny bonny bride,
Busk ye, busk ye, my winsome marrow,
Busk ye, and luve me on the banks of Tweed,
And think nae mair on the Braes of Yarrow.

C. How can I busk a bonny bonny bride? 65
How can I busk a winsome marrow?
How luve him upon the banks of Tweed,
That slew my luve on the Braes of Yarrow?

O Yarrow fields, may never never rain
Nor dew thy tender blossoms cover,
For there was basely slain my luve,
My luve, as he had not been a lover.

The boy put on his robes, his robes of green,
His purple vest, 'twas my own sewing:
Ah! wretched me! I little, little kenn'd
He was in these to meet his ruin.

The boy took out his milk-white, milk-white steed,
Unheedful of my dute and sorrow:
But ere the toofall of the night
He lay a corps on the Braes of Yarrow.

Much I rejoic'd that waeful waeful day;
I sang, my voice the woods returning:
But lang ere night the spear was flown,
That slew my luve, and left me mourning.

What can my barbarous barbarous father do, 85
But with his cruel rage pursue me?
My luver's blood is on thy spear,
How canst thou, barbarous man, then wooe me?

My happy sisters may be, may be proud
With cruel and ungentle scoffin',
May bid me seek on Yarrow's Braes
My luver nailed in his coffin.

My brother Douglas may upbraid, upbraid,
And strive with threatening words to move me:
My luver's blood is on thy spear,
How canst thou ever bid me luve thee?

Yes, yes, prepare the bed, the bed of luve,
With bridal sheets my body cover,
Unbar, ye bridalmaids the door,
Let in the expected husband lover.

But who the expected husband husband is?
His hands, methinks, are bath'd in slaughter:
Ah me! what ghastly spectre's yon
Comes in his pale shroud, bleeding after?

Pale as he is, here lay him, lay him down,
O lay his cold head on my pillow;
Take aff, take aff these bridal weids,
And crow my careful head with willow.

Pale tho' thou art, yet best, yet best belu'v'd,
O could my warmth to life restore thee!
Yet lye all night between my brests,
No youth lay ever there before thee.

Pale, pale indeed, O lovely lovely youth!
Forgive, forgive so foul a slaughter:
And lye all night between my brests;
No youth shall ever lye there after.

A. Return, return, O mournful, mournful bride,
Return, and dry thy useless sorrow:
Thy luver heeds none of thy sighs,
He lyes a corps in the Braes of Yarrow.

---was a Party Song written by the ingenious author of "Leonidas"*, on the taking of Porto Bello from the Spaniards by Admiral Vernon, Nov. 22, 1739.—The case of Hosier, which is here so pathetically represented, was briefly this. In April 1726, that commander was sent with a strong fleet into the Spanish West-Indies, to block up the galleons in the ports of that country, or, should they presume to come out, to seize and carry them into England: he accordingly arrived at the Bastimentos near Porto Bello, but being employed rather to overawe than to attack the Spaniards, with whom it was probably not our interest to go to war, he continued long inactive on that station, to his own great regret. He afterwards removed to Carthagena, and remained cruising in these seas, till far the greater part of his men perished deplorably by the diseases of that unhealthy climate. This brave man, seeing his best officers and men thus daily swept away, his ships exposed to inevitable destruction, and himself made the sport of the enemy, is said to have died of a broken heart. Such is the account of Smollett, compared with that of other less partial writers.

* An ingenious correspondent informs the Editor, that this Ballad hath been also attributed to the late Lord Bath.
ADMIRAL HOSIER’S GHOST.

The following song is commonly accompanied with a Second Part, or Answer, which being of inferior merit, and apparently written by another hand, hath been rejected.

As near Porto-Bello lying
On the gently swelling flood,
At midnight with streamers flying
Our triumphant navy rode;
There while Vernon sat all-glorious
From the Spaniards’ late defeat:
And his crews, with shouts victorious,
Drank success to England’s feet:

On a sudden shrilly sounding,
Hideous yells and shrieks were heard;
Then each heart with fear confounding,
A sad troop of ghosts appear’d,
All in dreary hammocks shrouded,
Which for winding-sheets they wore,
And with looks by sorrow clouded
Frowning on that hostile shore.

On them gleam’d the moon’s wan lustre,
When the shade of Hosier brave
His pale bands was seen to muster
Rising from their watery grave.
O’er the glistening wave he by’d him,
Where the Burford* rear’d her sail,
With three thousand ghosts beside him,
And in groans did Vernon hail.

Heed, oh heed our fatal story,
I am Hosier’s injur’d ghost,
You who now have purchas’d glory
At this place where I was lost!
Tho’ in Porto-Bello’s ruin
You now triumph free from fears,
When you think on our undoing,
You will mix your joy with tears.

See these mournful spectres sweeping
Ghastly o’er this bated wave,
Whose wan cheeks are stain’d with weeping;
These were English captains brave.
Mark those numbers pale and forlorn,
Those were once our sailors bold:
Lo, each hangs his drooping forehead,
While his dismal tale is told.

* Admiral Vernon’s ship.

I, by twenty sail attended,
Did this Spanish town affright:
Nothing then its wealth defended
But my orders not to fight.
Oh! that in this rolling ocean
I had cast them with disdain,
And obey’d my heart’s warm motion
To have quell’d the pride of Spain!

For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast achiv’d with six alone.
Then the bastimentos never
Had our foul dishonour seen,
Nor the sea the sad receiver
Of this gallant train had been.

Thus, like thee, proud Spain dismay’d,
And her galleons leading home,
Though condemna’d for disobeying,
I had met a traitor’s doom,
To have fallen, my country crying
He has play’d an English part,
Had been better far than dying
Of a griev’d and broken heart.

Unrepining at thy glory,
Thy successful arms we hail;
But remember our sad story,
And let Hosier’s wrongs prevail.
Sent in this foul clime to languish,
Think what thousands fell in vain,
Wasted with disease and anguish,
Not in glorious battle slain.

Hence with all my train attending
From their oozy tombs below,
Thro’ the hoary foam ascending,
Here I feed my constant woe:
Here the bastimentos viewing,
We recall our shameful doom,
And our plaintive cries renewing
Wander thro’ the midnight gloom.

O’er these waves for ever mourning
Shall we roam deprived of rest,
If to Britain’s shores returning
You neglect my just request;
After this proud foe subduing,
When your patriot friends you see,
Think on vengeance for my ruin,
And for England sham’d in me.
XXVI.

JEMMY DAWSON.

James Dawson was one of the Manchester rebels, who was hanged, drawn, and quartered, on Kennington-common, in the county of Surrey, July 30, 1746. This ballad is founded on a remarkable fact, which was reported to have happened at his execution. It was written by the late William Shenstone, Esq. soon after the event, and has been printed amongst his posthumous works, 2 vols. 8vo. It is here given from a MS. which contained some small variations from that printed copy.

Come listen to my mournful tale,
Ye tender hearts, and lovers dear;
Nor will you scorn to heave a sigh,
Nor will you blush to shed a tear.

And thou, dear Kitty, peerless maid,
Do thou a pensive ear incline;
For thou canst weep at every woe,
And pity every plaint, but mine.

Young Dawson was a gallant youth,
A brighter never trod the plain;
And well he lov'd one charming maid,
And dearly was he lov'd again.

One tender maid she lov'd him dear,
Of gentle blood the damsel came,
And faultless was her beauteous form,
And spotless was her virgin fame.

But curse on party's hateful strife,
That led the faithful youth astray
The day the rebel clans appear'd:
O had he never seen that day!

Their colours and their sash he wore,
And in the fatal dress was found;
And now he must that death endure,
Which gives the brave the keenest wound.

How pale was then his true love's cheek
When Jemmy's sentence reach'd her ear!
For never yet did Alpine snows
So pale, nor yet so chill appear.

With faltering voice she weeping said,
Oh, Dawson, monarch of my heart,
Think not thy death shall end our loves,
For thou and I will never part.

Yet might sweet mercy find a place,
And bring relief to Jemmy's woes,
O George, without a prayer for thee
My orisons should never close.

The gracious prince that gives him life
Would crown a never-dying flame,
And every tender babe I bore
Should learn to lip the giver's name.

But though, dear youth, thou should'st be dragg'd
To yonder ignominious tree,
Thou shalt not want a faithful friend
To share thy bitter fate with thee.

O then her mourning-coach was call'd,
The sledge mov'd slowly on before;
Tho' borne in a triumphal car,
She had not lov'd her favourite more.

She followed him, prepar'd to view
The terrible behests of law;
And the last scene of Jemmy's woes
With calm and stedfast eye she saw.

Distorted was that blooming face,
Which she had fondly lov'd so long:
And stifled was that tuneful breath,
Which in her praise had sweetly sung:

And sever'd was that beauteous neck,
Round which her arms had fondly clos'd:
And mangled was that beauteous breast,
On which her love-sick head repos'd:

And ravish'd was that constant heart,
She did to every heart prefer;
For though it could his king forget,
'Twas true and loyal still to her.

Amid those unrelenting flames
She bore this constant heart to see;
But when 'twas moulder'd into dust,
Now, now, she cried, 'I'll follow thee.

My death, my death alone can show
The pure and lasting love I bore:
Accept, O heaven, of woes like ours,
And let us, let us weep no more.

The dismal scene was o'er and past,
The lover's mournful hearse retir'd;
The maid drew back her languid head,
And sighing forth his name expir'd.

Tho' justice ever must prevail,
The tear my Kitty sheds is due;
For seldom shall she hear a tale
So sad, so tender, and so true.

THE END OF THE THIRD BOOK.
POEMS ON KING ARTHUR.

SERIES THE THIRD.

BOOK I.

An ordinary song or ballad, that is the delight of the common people, cannot fail to please all such readers as are not unqualified for the entertainment by their affectation or their ignorance; and the reason is plain, because the same paintings of nature which recommend it to the most ordinary reader will appear beautiful to the most refined.

Addison, in Spectator, No. 70.

I.

POEMS ON KING ARTHUR, &c.

The third series being chiefly devoted to romantic subjects, may be improperly introduced with a few slight strictures on the old metrical romances: a subject the more worthy attention, as it seems not to have been known to such as have written on the nature and origin of books of chivalry, that the first compositions of this kind were in verse, and usually sung to the harp.

ON THE ANCIENT METRICAL ROMANCES, &c.

I. The first attempts at composition among all barbarous nations are ever found to be poetry and song. The praises of their gods, and the achievements of their heroes, are usually chanted at their festival meetings. These are the first rudiments of history. It is in this manner that the savages of North America preserve the memory of past events*: and the same method is known to have prevailed among our Saxon ancestors, before they quitted their German forests†. The ancient Britons had their bards, and the Gothic nations their scalds or popular poets‡, whose business it was to record the victories of their warriors, and the genealogies of their princes, in a kind of narrative songs, which were committed to memory, and delivered down from one reciter to another. So long as poetry continued a distinct profession, and while the bard, or scald, was a regular and stated officer in the prince's court, these men are thought to have performed the functions of the historian pretty faithfully; for though their narrations would be apt to receive a good deal of embellishment, they are supposed to have had at the bottom so much of truth as to serve for the basis of more regular annals. At least succeeding historians have taken up with the relations of these rude men, and, for want of more authentic records, have agreed to allow them the credit of true history.§

* Vid. Lasetseu Mceurs des Sauvages, t. ii. Dr. Browne's Hist. of the Rise and Progress of Poetry.
† Germani celebrant carminibus antiquis (quod unum apud illas memoriae et annalium genus est) Tuitionem, &c. Tacit. Germ. c. 2.
‡ Barth. Antiq. Dan. lib. i. cap. 10.—Wormii Literatura Runica, ad finem.
§ See "Northern Antiquities, or a Description of the Manners, Customs, &c. of the ancient Danes and other northern Nations, translated from the French of M Mallet," 1779, 2 vol. 8vo (vol. i. p. 49, &c.)

After letters began to prevail, and history assumed a more stable form, by being committed to plain simple prose; these songs of the scalds or bards began to be more amusing than useful. And in proportion as it became their business chiefly to entertain and delight, they gave more and more into embellishment, and set off their recitals with such marvellous fictions as were calculated to captivate gross and ignorant minds. Thus began stories of adventurers with giants and dragons, and witches and enchanters, and all the monstrous extravagances of wild imagination, unguided by judgment and encumbered by art*. This seems to be the true origin of that species of romance which so long celebrated feats of chivalry, and which at first in metre, and afterwards in prose, was the entertainment of our ancestors, in common with their contemporaries on the Continent, till the satire of Cervantes, or rather the increase of knowledge and classical literature, drove them off the stage, to make room for a more refined species of fiction, under the name of French romances, copied from the Greek†.

That our old romances of chivalry may be derived in a lineal descent from the ancient historical songs of the Gothic bards and scalds, will be shown below, and indeed appears the more evident, as many of those songs are still preserved in the north, which exhibit all the seeds of chivalry before it became a solemn institution‡. "Chivalry, as a distinct military order, conferred in the way of investiture, and accompanied with the solemnity of an oath, and other ceremonials," was of later date, and sprung out of the feudal constitution, as an elegant writer has clearly shown§. But the ideas of chivalry prevailed long before in all the Gothic nations, and may be discovered as in embryo in the customs, manners, and opinions of every branch of that people. That fondness of going in quest of adventures, that spirit of challenging to single combat, and that respectful complaisance shown to the fair sex (so different from the manners of the Greeks and Romans), all are of Gothic origin, and may be traced up to the

* Vid. infra, pp. 4, 5, &c.
† Vid. Astraea, Cassandra, Clelia, &c.
§ Letters concerning Chivalry, 8vo. 1763.
ON THE ANCIENT METRICAL ROMANCES.

earliest times among all the northern nations*. These existed long before the feudal ages, though they were called forth and strengthened in a peculiar manner under that constitution, and at length arrived to their full maturity in the times of the Crusades, as has been already hinted. Again, that the romances of chivalry were transmitted to other nations, through the Spaniards, from the Moors and Arabs after their invasion of Spain, and from the Spaniards transmitted to the bards of Armorica, and thus diffused

* Mallet. + The term of chivalry sprung so naturally out of the original manners and opinions of the northern nations, that it is not credible they arose so late as after the establishment of the feudal system. Nor is it probable, that the romances of chivalry were transmitted to other nations, through the Spaniards, from the Moors and Arabs. Had this been the case, the first French Romances of chivalry would have been in Moors, or at least Spanish subjects; whereas the most ancient stories of this kind, whether in prose or verse, whether in Italian, French, English, &c. are chiefly on the subjects of Charlemagne, and the British Arthur, and his knights of the Round Table, &c. being evidently borrowed from the fabulous Chronicles of the supposed Archbishop Turpin, and of Jeffery of Monmouth. Not but some of the oldest and most popular French romances are also on Norman subjects, as Richard Sans-peur, Robert Le Diable, &c.; whereas I do not recollect so much as one in which the scene is laid in Spain, much less among the Moors, or descriptive of Mahometan manners. Even in Amadis de Gaul, said to have been the first romance printed in Spain, the scene is laid in Gaul and Britain; and the manners and characters are French: which plainly shews from what school this species of fable was learnt and transmitted to the southern nations of Europe.

 It is probable that such as maintain this opinion are obliged to take their first step from the Moorish provinces in Spain, without one intermediate resting-place, to Armorica or Bretagne, the province in France from them most remote, not more in situation than in the manners, habits, and language of its Welsh inhabitants, which are allowed to have been derived from this island, as must have been their traditions, songs, and fables; being customers of the Celtic original. See p. 3. of the “ Dissertation on the Origin of Romantic Fiction in Europe,” prefixed to Mr. Thomas Watson's History of English Poetry, vol. i. 1774, 4to.

If any pen could have supported this daring hypothesis of Dr. Warburton, that of this ingenious critic would have effected it. But under the general term Oriental he seems to consider the ancient inhabitants of the north and south of Asia as having all the same manners, traditions, and fables; and because the second tribe of Arabia took the lead under the religion and empire of Mahomet, without which every thing must be derived from them to the northern Asiatics in the remotest ages, &c. With as much reason under the word Oriental the romances of the Moors and Arabs should be rated fables of the north and south of Europe to have been the same; and that the Gothic mythology of Scandinavia the Gothic and the Gothic or British race of the north and south of Europe, differing not from the classic of Greece and Rome. There is not room here for a full examination of the minute arguments, or rather the coincidences, by which our agreeable dissertator endeavours to prove that the favourite opinion of Dr. W. who has himself so com-through Britain, France, Italy, Germany, and the north. For it seems utterly incredible that one rude people should adopt a peculiar taste and manner of writing or thinking from another, without borrowing at the same time any of their particular stories and fables, without knowing to what extent they were interested in heroes, history, laws, and religion. When the Romans began to adopt and imitate the Grecian literature, they immediately naturalized all the Grecian fables, histories, and religious stories; which became as familiar to the poets of Rome as of Greece itself. Whereas all the old writers of chivalry, and of that species of romance, whether in prose or verse, whether of the northern nations, or of Britain, France, and Italy, not excepting Spain itself, appear utterly unacquainted with whatever relates to the Mahometan nations. Thus with regard to their religion, they constantly represent them as worshiping idols, as paying adoration to a golden image of Mahomet, or else they confound them with the ancient Pagans, &c. And indeed, in all other respects they are so grossly ignorant of the customs, manners, and opinions of every branch of that people, especially of their heroes, champions, and local stories, as almost amounts to a demonstration that they did not imitate them in their manners, &c. for as to dragons, serpents, necromancies, &c. why should these be thought only derived from the Moors in Spain so late as after the eighth century? since notions of this kind appear too familiar to the northern scalds, and enter too deeply into all the northern mythology, to have been transmitted to the unlettered Scandinavians, from so distant a country, completely confuted by Mr. Tyrwhitt. (See his notes on* Love's Labour Lost," &c.) But some of his positions it will be sufficient to mention: such as the referring the Gog and Magog, which our old Christian bard might have had from Scripture, to the Jugglino and Maglino of the Arabians and Persians, &c. (p. 13.)—That "we may venture to affirm, that this [George of Monmouth's] Chronicle, supposed to contain the ideas of the Welch bard, entirely consists of Arabian inventions." (p. 13.)—And that, "as Geoffrey's History is the grand repository of the acts of Arthur, so a fabulous history is the grand repository to Turpin, and of all the chimerical legends which have been related concerning the conquests of Charlemagne and his twelve peers. Its subject is the expulsion of the Saracens from Spain; and it is filled with fallacies evidently congetuated to this purpose, which characterize Geoffrey's History." (p. 17.)—That is, as he afterwards expresses it, "lavishly decorated by the Arabian bards." (p. 56.)—We should hardly have expected that the Arabian bards would have been lavish in decorating a history of their enemy; but what is singular, as an instance and proof of this Arabian origin of the fictions of Turpin, a passage is quoted from his fourth chapter, which I shall beg leave to offer, as affording decisive evidence that they could not possibly be derived from a Mahometan source. Sc. "The Christians under Charlemagne are said to have found in Spain a golden idol, or image of Mahomet, as high as a bird can fly. It was framed by a Mahomet himself of the purest metal, who, by his knowledge in necromancy, had scaled up within it a legion of diabolical spirits. It held in its hand a prodigious club; and the Saracens had a prophetic tradition, that this image should shew them the year that when a certain king should be born in France," &c. Vid. p. 18. Note.* The little narrative songs on Morisco subjects, which the Spaniards have at present in great abundance, and which they call peculiarly romances, (see Series I. Book iii. No. 16, &c.) have nothing in common with their proper chivalry; and although they are called the romances (or h to Cassarejas de Cavalleras; these are evidently imitations of the French, and shew a great ignorance of Moorish manners; and with regard to the love story, the Moorish songs are perhaps the most of very great antiquity: few of them appear, from their subjects, much earlier than the reduction of Granada, in the fifteenth century: from which period, I believe, may be plainly traced, among the Spanish writers, a more perfect knowledge of Moorish customs, &c.

ON THE ANCIENT METRICAL ROMANCES.

at so late a period. If they may not be allowed to have brought these opinions with them in their original migrations from the north of Asia, they will be far more likely to have borrowed them from the Latin poets after the Roman conquests in Gaul, Britain, Germany, &c. But I believe they may claim no maintainers of this opinion to produce any Arabian poem or history, that could possibly have been then known in Spain, which resembles the old Gothic romances of chivalry half so much as the Metamorphoses of Ovid.

But we well know that the Saxonian nations situate in the countries about Pontus, Colchis, and the Euxine sea, were in all times infamous for their magic arts; and as Odin and his followers are said to have come precisely from those parts of Asia, we can readily account for the prevalence of fictions of this sort among the Gothic nations of the north, without fetching them from the Moors in Spain, who for many centuries after their irruption lived in a state of such constant hostility with the unsubdued Spanish Christians, whom they chiefly pent up in the mountains, as gave them no chance of learning their music, poetry, or stories; and this, together with the religious hatred of the latter for their cruel invaders, will account for the utter ignorance of the old Spanish romancers in whatever relates to the Mahometan nations, although so nearly their own neighbours.

On the other hand, from the local customs and situations, from the known manners and opinions of the Gothic nations in the North, we can easily account for all the ideas of chivalry, and its peculiar fictions*. For, not to mention their distinguished respect for the fair sex, so different from the manners of the Mahometan nations*, their national and domestic history so naturally assumes all the wonders of this species of fabled, that almost all their historical narratives appear regular romances. One might refer, in proof of this, to the old northern Sagas in general: but, to give a particular instance, it will be sufficient to produce the history of King Røgner Lodbrog, a celebrated warrior and pirate, who reigned in Denmark about the year 800. This hero signalized his youth by an exploit of gallantry. A Swedish prince had a beautiful daughter, whom he intrusted (probably during some expedition) to the care of one of his officers, assigning a strong castle for their defence. The officer fell in love with her ward, and detained her in his castle, spite of all the efforts of her father. Upon this he published a proclamation, through all the neighbouring countries, that whoever would conquer the ravisher, and rescue the lady, should have her in marriage. Of all that undertook the adventure, Røgner alone was so happy as to achieve it; he delivered the fair captive, and obtained her for his prize. It happened that the name of this discreet officer was Orme, which, in the Islandic language signifies serpent: wherefore the scalds, to give the more poetical turn to the adventure, represent the lady as detained from her father by a dreadful dragon, and that Røgner slew the monster to set her at liberty. This fabulous account of the exploit is given in a poem still extant, which is even ascribed to Regner himself, who was a celebrated poet, and which records all the valiant achievements of his life*.

With marvellous embellishments of this kind, the scalds early began to decorate their narratives: and they were the more lavish of these in proportion as they did not their own original institution; but it was a long time before they thought of delivering a set of personages and adventures wholly feigned. Of the great multitude of romantic tales still preserved in the libraries of the north, most of them are supposed to have had some foundation in truth; and the more ancient they are, the more they are believed to be connected with true history.

It was not probably till after the historian and the bard had been long disunited, that the latter ventured at pure fiction. At length, when their business was no longer to instruct or inform, but merely to amuse, it was no longer needful for them to adhere to truth. Then succeeded fabulous songs and romances in verse, which for a long time prevailed in France and England, before they had books of chivalry in prose. Yet, in both these countries, the minstrels still retained so much of their original institution as frequently to make true events the subject of their verses; and, indeed, as during the barbarous ages, the regular histories were almost all written in Latin by the monks, the memory of events was preserved and propagated among the ignorant laity, by scarce any other means than the popular songs of the minstrels.

II. The inhabitants of Sweden, Denmark, and Norway, being the latest converts to Christianity, retained their original manners and opinions longer than the other nations of Gothic race: and, therefore, they have preserved more of the genuine compositions of their ancient poets than their southern neighbours. Hence the progress among them, from poetical history to poetical fiction, is very discernible: they have some old pieces, that are in effect complete romances of chivalry. They have also (as hath been observed) a multitude of sagas†, or histories on romantic subjects, containing a mixture of prose and verse of various dates, some of them written since the times of the crusades, others long before; but their narratives in verse only are esteemed the more ancient.

Now, as the irruption of the Normans‡ into France under Rollo did not take place till towards the beginning of the tenth century, at which time the Scaldic art was arrived to the highest perfection in Røgner's native country, we can easily trace the descent of the French and English romances of chivalry from the northern sagas. That conqueror doubtless carried many scalds with him from the north, who transmitted their skill to their children and successors. These, adopting the religion, opinions, and language of the new country, substituted

---

* See Northern Antiquities, passim.
† Ibid.
‡ See Mon Gram. p. 152, 153.—Mallet, Northern Antiq. vol. i. p. 321.
§ See a Translation of this poem among "Five Pieces of Runic Poetry," printed for Dodsley, 1764, vol. ii.
|| Vid. Mallet, Northern Antiquities, passim.
|† The Editor's MS. contains a multitude of poems of this latter kind. It was probably from this custom of the minstrels that some of our first historians wrote their chronicles in verse, as Robert of Gloucester, Harding, &c.
|‡ See specimen in 2d. vol. of Northern Antiquities, &c. p. 295, &c.
|≠ i. e. Northern Men: being chief emigrants from Norway, Denmark, &c.
The heroes of Christendom instead of those of their pagan ancestors, and began to celebrate the feats of Charlemagne, Roland, and Oliver; whose true history they magnified and embellished with the scaldic figures of dwarfs, giants, dragons, and enchantments. The first mention we have in song of those heroes of chivalry, is in the mouth of a Norman warrior at the conquest of England; and this circumstance alone would sufficiently account for the propagation of this kind of romantic poems among the French and English.

But this is not all; it is very certain that both the Anglo-Saxons and the Franks had brought with them, at their first emigrations into Britain and Gaul, the same fondness for the ancient songs of their ancestors, which prevailed among the other Gothic tribes; and that all their first annals were transmitted in these popular oral poems. This fondness they even retained long after their conversion to Christianity, as we learn from the examples of Charlemagne and Alfred. Now poetry, being thus the transmitter of facts, would as easily learn to blend them with fiction as in France and England, as she has been observed to do with the growth of this island; both the French and the Armoricans probably had them from Britain. The stories of Guinevere, of these some others, were probably the invention of English minstrels. The first prose books of chivalry that appeared in France, where also they had their name.

The Latin tongue, as is observed by an ingenious writer, ceased to be spoken in France about the ninth century, and was succeeded by what was called the romance tongue, a mixture of the language of the Franks and bad Latin. As the songs of chivalry became more and more embellished in that language, they were emphatically called the Romance of the Romans; though this name was at first given to any piece of poetry. The romances of chivalry can be traced as early as the eleventh century. I know not if the Romane de Brut, written in 1155, was such: But if it was, it was by no means the first poem of the kind; others more ancient are still extant. And we have already observed, that before the twelfth century, when the Normans marched down to the head of Hastings, they animated themselves, by singing (in some popular romance or ballad) the exploits of Roland and the other heroes of chivalry.

So early as this I cannot trace the songs of chivalry in English. The most ancient I have seen is that of Hornemid, described below, which seems not older than the twelfth century. However, as this rather resembles a popular story than the French, it is not certain that the first English romances were translated from that language. We have seen above, that a propensity to this kind of fiction prevailed among all the Gothic nations; and though, after the Norman conquest, this country abounded with French romances, or with translations from the French, there is good reason to believe that the English had original pieces of their own.

The stories of King Arthur and his Round-Table may be regarded as the model of the growth of this island; both the French and the Armoricans probably had them from Britain. The stories of Guy and Bevis, with some others, were probably the invention of English minstrels. On the other hand, the English procured translations of such romances as were most current in France: and in the list given at the conclusion of these remarks many are doubtless of French original.

The first prose books of chivalry that appeared in our language were those printed by Caxton; at least,
these are the first I have been able to discover, and these are all translations from the French. Whereas romances of this kind had been long current in metre, and were so generally admired, the time of Chaucer, that his rhyme of Sir Thopas was evidently written to ridicule and burlesque them.*

He expressly mentions several of them by name in a stanza, which I shall have occasion to quote more than once in this volume:

Men spoken of romances of pris
Of Horn-Child, and of Ipotes
Of Bevis, and Sire Guy
Of Sire Libeux, and Pleindamour,
But Sire Thopas, he bereth the four
Of real chevalrie.

Most if not all of these are still extant in MS. in some or other of our libraries, as I shall shew in the conclusion of this slight essay, where I shall give a list of such metrical histories and romances as have fallen under my observation.

As many of these contain a considerable portion of poetical merit, and throw great light on the manners and opinions of former times, it were to be wished that some of the best of them were rescued from oblivion. A judicious collection of them accurately published, with proper illustrations, would be an important accession to our stock of ancient English literature. Many of them exhibit no mean attempts at epic poetry: and though full of the exploded fictions of chivalry, frequently display great descriptive and inventive powers in the hands who composed them. They are at least generally equal to any other poetry of the same age. They cannot indeed be put in competition with the nervous productions of so universal and commanding a genius as Chaucer; but they have a simplicity that makes them be read with less interruption, and be more easily understood; and they are far more spirited and entertaining than the tedious allegories of Gower, or the dull and prolix legends of Lydgate. Yet, while so much stress was laid upon the writings of these last, by such as treat of English poetry, the old metrical romances, though far more popular in their time, were hardly known to exist. But it has happened, unluckily, that the antiquaries, who have revived the works of our ancient writers, have been, for the most part, men void of taste and genius, and therefore have always fastidiously rejected the old poetical romances, because founded on fictitious or popular subjects, while they have been careful to grub up every petty fragment of the most dull and insipid rhymist, whose merit it was to deform morality or obscure true history. Should the public encourage the revival of some of those ancient epic songs of chivalry, they would frequently see the rich ore of an Ariosto or a Tasso, though buried it may be among the rubbish and dross of barbarous times.

Such a publication would answer many important uses: It would throw new light on the rise and progress of English poetry, the history of which can be but imperfectly understood if these are neglected:

It would also serve to illustrate innumerable passages in our ancient classic poets, which, without their help, are very generally misunderstood. Not to mention Chaucer and Spenser, who abound with perpetual allusions to them, I shall give an instance or two from Shakespeare, by way of specimen of their use.

In his play of King John our great dramatic poet alludes to an exploit of Richard I. which the reader will in vain look for in any true history. Faulconbridge says to his mother, act i. sc. 1.

"Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose...
Against whose furie and unmatched force,
The awful lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keepe his princely heart from Richard's hand:
He that perfecore robs lions of their hearts
May easily winne a woman's".

The fact here referred to, is to be traced to its source only in the old romance of Richard Coeur de Lyon *, in which his encounter with a lion makes a very shining figure. I shall give a large extract from this poem, as a specimen of the manner of these old rhapsodists, and to shew that they did not in their fictions neglect the proper means to produce the ends, as was afterwards so childishly done in the pros books of chivalry.

The poet tells us, that Richard, in his return from the Holy Land, having been discovered in the habit of "a palmer in Almaye," and apprehended as a spy, was by the king thrown into prison. Wardrew, the king's son, hearing of Richard's great strength, desires the jailor to let him have a sight of his prisoners. Richard being the foremost, Wardrew asks him, "if he dare stand a buffet from his hand?" and that on the morrow he shall return him another. Richard consents, and receives a blow that stagger'd him. On the morrow, having previously waxed his hands, he waits his antagonist's arrival. Wardrew accordingly, proceeds the story, "held forth as a trewe and princely Richard gave him such a blow on the cheek, as broke his jaw-bone, and killed him upon the spot. The king, to revenge the death of his son, orders, by the advice of one Eldrede, that a lion, kept purposely from food, shall be turned loose upon Richard. But the king's daughter, having fallen in love with him, tells him of her father's resolution, and at his request procures him forty ells of white silk "kerchevs," and here the description of the combat begins:

"The kever-cheses he toke on honde,
And aboute his arme he wonde;
And thought in that ylke while,
To mynd the lion with some byle,
And syngle in a kyttyll he stode,
And abode the lyon fyres and woode,
With that came the jaylere,
And other men that wyth him were,
And the lyon them amonge;
His paws were stiffe and stronge.
The chambre dore they undone,
And the lyon to them is gone.
Rycharde sayd, Helpe, Lorde Jesu!"

The lion made to hym venu, etc.

---

* Dr. Grey has shewn that the same story is alluded to in Rastell's Chronicle: As it was doubtless originally had from the romance. It is proof that the old Metrical Romances throw light on our first writers in prose: many of our ancient historians have recorded the fictions of romance.

† L. e. Handkerchiefs. Here we have the etymology of the word, viz. "Coure & Chef,".
And wolde hym have all to rente;
Kyng Rycharde beseyed hym glente
The lyon on the breste he spurned,
That aboute he tourned.
The lyon was hungry and megre,
And bette his tayle to be ege;
He loket aboute as he were madde;
Abrode he all his paws spradde.
He cryde lowede, and yaned + wyde.
Kyng Rycharde bethought hym that tyde
What hym was beste, and to hym sterte,
In at the throte his honde he gerte,
And rente out the herte with his honde,
Lounge and all that he there fond.
The lyon fell deed to the grounde:
Rycharde felte no wem; ne wounde.
He fell on his knees on that place,
And thanked Jhesu of his grace.
* * * * *
What follows is not so well, and therefore I shall extract no more of this poem.—For the above feat the author tells us, the king was deservedly called Strange Rycharde Cure de Lyowne.

That distich which Shakespeare puts in the mouth of his madman in King Lear, act 3, sc. 4.

Mice and rats and such small deer
Have been Tom's food for seven long yeare, has excited the attention of the critics. Instead of deere, one of them would substitute geer; and another cheer $. But the ancient reading is established by the old romance of Sir Bevis, which Shakespeare had doubtless often heard sung to the harp. This distich is part of a description there given of the hardships suffered by Bevis, when confined for seven years in a dungeon:

Rattes and myse and such small dere
Was his meate that seven yere.
Sign. F iii.

III. In different parts of this work, the reader will find various extracts from these old poetical legends; to which I refer him for farther examples of their style and metre. To complete this subject, it will be proper at least to give one specimen of their skill in distributing and conducting their fable, by which it will be seen that nature and common sense had supplied to these old simple bards the want of critical art, and taught them some of the most essential rules of epic poetry, I shall select the romance of Libius Disconius ||, as being one of those mentioned by Chaucer, and either shorter or more intelligible than the others he has quoted.

If an epic poem may be defined "A fable related by a poet, to excite admiration, and inspire virtue, by representing the action of some one hero, favoured by heaven, who executes a great design, in spite of all the obstacles that oppose him:" I know not why we should withhold the name of epic poem from the piece which I am about to analyse. My copy is divided into nine parts or cantos, the several arguments of which are as follows.

* i. e. slip aside.
† i. e. yawned.
‡ i. e. hurrt.
§ Dr. Warburton—Dr. Grey.
|| So it is initiat in the Editor's MS. But the true title is Le beaux disconus, or The Fair Unknown. See a note on the Canterbury Tales, vol. iv. p. 333.

PART I.

Opens with a short exordium to bespeak attention: the hero is described; a natural son of Sir Gawain a celebrated knight of King Arthur's court, who being brought up in a forest by his mother, is kept ignorant of his name and descent. He early exhibits marks of his courage, by killing a knight in single combat, who encountered him as he was hunting. This was to him with a desire of seeking adventures: therefore cloathing himself in his enemy's armour, he goes to King Arthur's court, to request the order of knighthood. His request granted, he obtains a promise of having the first adventure assigned him that shall offer.—A damsel named Ellen, attended by a dwarf, comes to implore King Arthur's assistance, to rescue a young princess, "the Lady of Sinadone" their mistress, who is detained from her rights, and confined in prison. The adventure is promised by the young knight Sir Lybius: the king assents; the messengers are dissatisfied and object to his youth; but are forced to acquiesce. And here the first book closes with a description of the ceremony of equipping him forth.

PART II.

Sir Lybius sets out on the adventure: he is derided by the dwarf and the damsel on account of his youth: they come to the bridge of Perill, which none can pass without encountering a knight called William de la Braunch. Sir Lybius is challenged: they just with their spears: De la Braunch is dismounted: the battle is renewed on foot: Sir William's sword breaks: he yields. Sir Lybius makes him swear to go and present himself to King Arthur, as the first fruits of his valour. The conquered knight sets out for King Arthur's court: is met by three knights, his kinsmen; who, informed of his disgrace, vow revenge, and pursue the conqueror. The next day they overtake him: the eldest of the three attacks Sir Lybius; but is overthrown to the ground. The two other brothers assault him: Sir Lybius is wounded; yet cuts off the second brother's arm: the third yields; Sir Lybius sends them all to King Arthur. In the third evening he is awakened by the dwarf, who has discovered a fire in the wood.

PART III.

Sir Lybius arms himself, and leaps on horseback: he finds two Giants roasting a wild boar, who have a fair lady their captive. Sir Lybius, by favour of the night, runs one of them through with his spear: is assaulted by the other: a fierce battle ensues: he cuts off the giant's arm, and at length his head. The rescued lady (an earl's daughter) tells him her story; and leads him to her father's castle; who entertains him with a great feast; and presents him at parting with a suit of armour and a steed. He sends the giant's head to King Arthur.

PART IV.

Sir Lybius, maid Ellen, and the dwarf, renew their journey: they see a castle stuck round with human heads; and are informed it belongs to a knight called Sir Geffiron, who, in honour of his leman or mistress challenges all comers: he that can produce a fairer lady, is to be rewarded with a milk-white faulcon, but if overcome, to lose his head. Sir Lybius spends the night in the adjoining town; in the morning goes to challenge the faulcon. The knight exchange their gloves: they agree to just in the market-place: the lady and maid Ellen are placed aloft in chairs: their dresses: the superior beauty of Sir Gefferon's mistress described: the ceremonies previous to the combat. They engage:
the combat described at large: Sir Gefferon is incurably hurt; and carried home on his shield. Sir Lybius sends the faulcon to King Arthur; and receives back a large present in florins. He stays forty days to be cured of his wounds, which he spends in feasting with the neighbouring lords.

PART V.
Sir Lybius proceeds for Sinadone: in a forest he meets a knight hunting, called Sir Otes de Lisle:
maid Ellen charmed with a very beautiful dog, begs Sir Lybius to bestow him upon her, Sir Otes meets them, and claims his dog: is refused: being unarmed he rides to his castle, and summons his followers: they go in quest of Sir Lybius: a battle ensues: he is still victorious, and forces Sir Otes to follow the other conquered knights to King Arthur.

PART VI.
Sir Lybius comes to a fair city and castle by a river-side, beset round with pavilions or tents: he is informed, in the castle is a beautiful lady besieged by a giant named Manguy, who keeps the bridge and will let none pass without doing him homage:
this Lybius refuses: a battle ensues: the giant described: the several incidents of the battle; which lasts a whole summer's day: the giant is wounded; puts to flight; slain. The citizens come out in procession to meet their deliverer: the lady invites him into her castle; falls in love with him: and seduces him to her embraces. He forgets the princess of Sinadone, and stays with this bewitching lady a twelvemonth. This fair sorceress, like another Aefina, intoxicates him with all kinds of sensual pleasure; and detains him from the pursuit of honour.

PART VII.
Maid Ellen by chance gets an opportunity of speaking to him; and upbraids him with his vice and folly: he is filled with remorse, and escapes the same evening. At the same length he arrives at the city and castle of Sinadone: is given to understand that he must challenge the constable of the castle to single combat, before he can be received as a guest. They just: the constable is worsted: Sir Lybius is feasted in the castle: he declares his intention of delivering their lady; and inquires the particulars of her history. "Two Necromancers have built a fine palace by sorcery, and there keep her incanted, till she will surrender her duchy to them, and yield to such base conditions as they would impose."

PART VIII.
Early on the morrow Sir Lybius sets out for the incanted palace. He alights in the court: enters the hall: the wonders of which are described in strong Gothic painting. He sits down at the high table: on a sudden all the lights are quenched: it thunders, and lightens; the palace shakes; the walls fall in pieces about his ears. He is dismayed and confounded: but presently hears horses neigh, and is challenged to single combat by the sorcerers. He gets to his steed: a battle ensues, with various turns of fortune: he loses his weapon: but gets a sword from one of the necromancers, and wounds the other with it: the edge of the sword being secretly poisoned, the wound proves mortal.

PART IX.
He goes up to the surviving sorcerer, who is carried away from him by enchantment: at length he finds him, and cuts off his head: he returns to the palace to deliver the lady; but cannot find her:
as he is lamenting, a window opens, through which enters a horrible serpent with wings and a woman's face: it coils round his neck and kisses him; then is suddenly converted into a very beautiful lady.
She tells him she is the Lady of Sinadone, and was so enchanted, till she might kiss Sir Gawain, or some one of his blood: that he has dissolved the charm, and that herself and her dominions may be his reward. The knight (whose descent is by this means discovered) joyfully accepts the offer; makes her his bride, and then sets out with her for King
Arthur's court.

Such is the fable of this ancient piece: which the reader may observe, is as regular in its conduct, as any of the finest poems of classical antiquity. If the execution, particularly as to the diction and sentiments, were but equal to the plan, it would be a capital performance; but this is such as might be expected in rude and ignorant times, and in a barbarous unpolished language.

IV. I shall conclude this prolix account, with a list of such old metrical romances as are still extant;
beginning with those mentioned by Chaucer.

1. The romance of "Horne Childe" is preserved in the British Museum, where it is intitled 'pe geste of King Horne. See Catalog. Harl. MSS. 2253,
p. 70. The language is almost Saxon, yet from the mention in it of Sarazens, it appears to have been written after some of the Crusades. It begins thus:

All heo ben blype
Pæt to my song ylype:
A song ychelle ou sing
Of Allof pe gode kyng* *.

Another copy of this poem, but greatly altered, and somewhat modernized, is preserved in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh, in a MS. quarto volume of old English poetry [W. 4. 1.] No. xxiv.
in seven leaves or foliost, intituled, Hornchild and Maiden Rinteil, and beginning thus:

Mi leve frende dere,
Herken and ye may here.

2. The Poem of 'Ipotis (or Ypotis) is preserved in the Cotton Library, Calig. A. 2, f. 77, but is rather a religious legend, than a romance. Its beginning is,

He pat wyll of wyssome here
Herkeneth now ze may here
Of a tale of holy wyte
Seyst Jon the Evangleyste wytneseth hyt.

3. The Romance of Sir Guy was written before that of Bevis, being quoted in it. An account of this old poem is given in Series I. Book ii. No. L

* i. e. May all they be blithe, that to my song listen: A song I shall yeu sing, of Allof the good king, &c.

* In each folio page of this vol. are forty-four lines, when the poem is in long metre: and eighty-eight when the metre is short, and the page in two columns.

7 Sign. K. 2. b.
To which it may be added, that two complete copies in MS. are preserved at Cambridge, the one in the public Library*, the other in that of Caius College, Class A. 8.—In Ames's Typog. p. 153, may be seen the first lines of the printed copy.—The first MS, begins,

Syt(e) the tym(e) that God was borne.

4. Guy and Colbronde, an old romance in three parts, is preserved in the Editor's folio MS. (p. 349) It is in stanzas of six lines, the first of which may be seen in vol. ii, p. 191, beginning thus:

When meate and drinke is great plentie.

In the Edinburgh MS. (mentioned above) are two ancient poems on the subject of Guy of Warwick viz. No. xviii. containing twenty-six leaves, and xx. fifty-nine leaves. Both these have unfortunately the beginnings wanting, otherwise they would perhaps be found to be different copies of one or both the preceding articles.

5. From the same MS, I can add another article to this list, viz. The Romance of Rembrun son of Sir Guy; being No. xxx. in nine leaves: this is properly a continuation of the History of Guy: and in art. 3, the Hist. of Rembrun follows that of Guy as a necessary part of it. This Edinburgh Romance of Rembrun begins thus:

Jesus that erst of mighte most Fader and Sone and Holy Ghost.

Before I quit the subject of Sir Guy, I must observe, that if we may believe Dugdale in his Baronage (vol. i. p. 243, col. 2), the fame of our English Champion had in the time of Henry IV. travelled as far as the East, and was no less popular among the Sarazens, than here in the West among the nations of Christendom. In that reign a Lord Beauchamp travelling to Jerusalem, was kindly received by a noble person, the Soldan's lieutenant, who hearing he was descended from the famous Guy of Warwick, "whose story they had in books of their own language," invited him to his palace; and royally feasting him, presented him with three precious stones of great value; besides divers cloaths of silk and gold given to his servants.

6. The Romance of Syr Bevis is described in Series i. Book iii. No. 1. Two manuscript copies of this poem are extant at Cambridge; viz. in the public Library, and in that of Caius Coll. Class A. 9. (5.)—The first of these begins, Lordings lystenyghte grete and smale.

There is also a copy of this Romance of Syr Bevis of Hampton, in the Edinburgh MS. No. xxii. consisting of twenty-five leaves, and beginning thus:

Lordings herketh to mi tale,
Is merier than the nightengale.

The printed copies begin different from both: viz.

Lysten, Lordings, and hold you styl.

7. Libeaux (Libeaus, or Libius) Diconius is preserved in the Editors folio MS. (pag. 317) where the first stanza is,

Jesus Christ christen kinge,
And his mother that sweete thinge,
Helpe them at their neede,
That will listen to my tale,
Of a Knight I will you tell,
A doughty man of deede.

An older copy is preserved in the Cotton Library (Calig. A. 2. fol. 40), but containing such innumerable variations, that it is apparently a different translation of some old French original, which will account for the title of Le Beaux Disconus, or The Fair Unknown, the first line is,

Jean Christ our Savyour.

As for Pleindamour, or Blandamoure, no romance with this title has been discovered; but as the word Blandamere occurs in the romance of Libius Diconius, in the Editor's folio MS. p. 319, he thought the name of Blandamoure (which was in all the editions of Chaucer he had then seen) might have some reference to this. But Pleindamour, the name restored by Mr. Tyrwhitt, is more remote.

8. Le Morte Arthure is among the Harl. MSS. 2252, § 49. This is judged to be a translation from the French: Mr. Wanley thinks it no older than the time of Henry VII. but it seems to be quoted in Syr Bevis (Sign K. ij b.) It begins, Lordinges that are leffe and deare.

9. In the Editor's folio MS. are many songs and romances about King Arthur and his Knights, some of which are very imperfect, as King Arthur and the King of Cornwall, (p. 24.) in stanzas of four lines, beginning,

Come here; my cozen Gawaine so gay.

The Turke and Gawain (p. 38), in stanzas of six lines, beginning thus:

Listen lords great and small*.

but these are so imperfect that I do not make distinct articles of them. See also Series I. Book i. No. 1, 2, 4, 5.

In the same MS. (p. 203) is the Greene Knight, in two parts, relating a curious adventure of Sir Gawain, in stanzas of six lines, beginning thus:

List: when Arthur he was k:

10. The Carle of Carlisle is another romantic tale about Sir Gawain, in the same MS. p. 418, in distichs:

Listen: to me a little stond.

In all these old poems the same set of knights are always represented with the same manners and characters; which seem to have been as well known, and as distinctly marked among our ancestors, as

* For this and most of the following, which are mentioned as preserved in the public Library, I refer the reader to the Oxon Catalogue of MSS. 1607, vol. ii. p. 294; in Appendix to Bishop Moore's MSS. No. 696, 39, since given to the University of Cambridge.

* In the former editions; after the above, followed mention of a fragment in the same MS. intituled, Sir Lionel, in distichs (p. 32); but this being only a short ballad, and not relating to King Arthur is here omitted.
Homer's heroes were among the Greeks; for, as Ulysses is always represented crafty, Achilless irascible and Ajax rough; so Sir Gawaine is ever courteous and gentle, Sir Kay rugged and disobliging, &c. "Sir Gawain with his olde curtesie," is mentioned by Chaucer as noted to a proverb, in his Squire's Tales. Canterb. Tales, vol. ii. p. 104.

11. Syr Launfal, an excellent old romance concerning another of King Arthur's knights, is preserved in the Cotton Library, Calig. A. 2. f. 33. This is a translation from the French*, made by one Thomas Chestre, who is supposed to have lived in the reign of Henry VI. (See Tanner's Biblioth.) It is in stanzas of six lines, and begins,

Be douzy Artours dawes.

The above was afterwards altered by some minstrel into the romance of Sir Lambe lovell, in three parts, under which title it was more generally known. This is in the Editor's folio MS. p. 60, beginning thus:

Doughty in King Arthures daies.

12. Eger and Grime, in six parts (in the Editor's folio MS. p. 124.) is a well invented tale of chivalry, scarce inferior to any of Ariosto's. This, which was inadvertently omitted in the former editions of this list, is in distichs, and begins thus:

It fell sometime in the land of Beame.

13. The Romance of Merlins, in nine parts, (preserved in the same folio MS. p. 143) gives a curious account of the birth, parentage, and juvenile adventures of this famous British prophet. In this poem the Saxons are called Sarazens; and the thrusting the rebel angels out of Heaven is attributed to "oure Lady." It is in distichs, and begins thus:

He that made with his hand.

There is an old romance Of Arthour and of Merlin, in the Edinburgh MS. of old English poems: I know not whether it has any thing in common with this last mentioned. It is in the volume numbered xxiii., and extends through fifty-five leaves. The two first lines are,

Jesu Crist, heven kyng,
Al ons graunt gode ending.

14. Sir Iseubras (or as it is in the MS. copies, Sir Isumbras) is quoted in Chaucer's R. of Thop. v. 6. Among Mr. Garrick's old plays is a printed copy; of which an account has been already given in Series I. Book iii. No. 8. It is preserved in MS. in the Library of Caius Coll. Camb. Class A. 9. (2) and also in the Cotton Library, Calig. A. 12. (f. 128.) This is extremely different from the printed copy, E. g.

God pat made both erpe and hevene.

15. Emare, a very curious and ancient romance, is preserved in the same volume of the Cotton Library, f. 69. It is in stanzas of six lines, and begins thus:

Jesu pat ys kyng in trone.

---

* The French original is preserved among the Harl. MSS No. 978, sec. 112, Lansd.
* See Laneham's Letter concerning Queen Elizabeth's entertainment at Killingworth, 1575, 12mo, p. 31.

16. Chevelere assigne, or, The Knight of the Swan, preserved in the Cotton Library, has been already described in the Essay on P. Flowman's Metre, &c. Series II. Book iii. No. 1, as hath also

17. The Sege of Jeru (or Jerusalem), which seems to have been written after the other, and may not improperly be classed among the romances; as may also the following, which is preserved in the same volume; viz.

18. Ocasey Myles, (fol. 90) giving an account of the wonders of St. Patrick's Purgatory. This is a translation into verse of the story related in Mat. Paris's Hist. (sub. ann. 1153.)—It is in distichs beginning thus:

God jat ys so full of myght.

In the same manuscript are three or four other narrative poems, which might be reckoned among the romances, but being rather religious legends, I shall barely mention them; as Tundale f. 17. Tren tale Sc-Gregorii, f. 81. Jerome, f. 133. Eustache, f. 136.

19. Octavian imperator, an ancient romance of chivalry, is in the same volume of the Cotton Library, f. 20.—Notwithstanding the name, this old poem has nothing in common with the history of the Roman emperors. It is in a very peculiar kind of stanza, whereof 1, 2, 3, and 5, rhyme together, as do 4 and 6. It begins thus:

Ihesu jat was with sperre ystonge.

In the public Library at Cambridge*, is a poem with the same title, that begins very differently

Lytyll and mykyll, olde and yonge.

20. Eglamour of Artas (or Artoys) is preserved in the same volume with the foregoing, both in the Cotton Library, and public Library at Cambridge. It is also in the Editor's folio MS. (p. 293,) where it is divided into six parts.—A printed copy is in the Bodleian Library, C. 39. Art. Seld. and also among Mr. Garrick's old plays, K. vol. x. It is in distichs, and begins thus:

Ihes Crist of heven kyng.

21. Syr Triamore (in stanzas of six lines) is preserved in MS. in the Editor's volume (p. 210), and in the public Library at Cambridge, (690, § 29. Vid. Cat. MSS. p. 394.)—Two printed copies are extant in the Bodleian Library, and among Mr. Garrick's plays, in the same volumes with the last article. Both the Editor's MS. and the printed copies begin,

Nowe Jesu Chryste our heven kyng.

The Cambridge copy thus:

Heven blys that all shall wynne.

22. Sir Degree (Degore, or Degove, which last seems the true title,) in five parts, in distichs, is preserved in the Editor's folio MS. p. 371, and in the public Library at Cambridge (ubi supra.)—A printed copy is in the Bod. Library, C. 39. Art. Seld.

and among Mr. Garrick's plays, K. vol. ix. The Editor's MS. and the printed copies begin, Lordinge, and you wyl holde you styld.
The Cambridge MS. has it, Lystenly, lordyngis, gentye and fre.

23. Ipomylon (or Chylde Ipomylon) is preserved among the Harl. MSS. 2252, (44.) It is in distichs, and begins,
Mekely, lordyngis, gentylle and fre.
In the Library of Lincoln Cathedral, K k. 3. 10. is an old imperfect printed copy, wanting the whole first sheet A.

24. The Squyr of Lowde Degre, is one of those burlesqued by Chaucer in his Rhyme of Thopas*- Mr. Garrick has a printed copy of this among his old plays, K. vol. ix. It begins, It was a squyer of lowde degre, That loved the kings daughter of Hungre.

25. Historye of K. Richard Cure [Cœur] de Lyon (Impr. W. de Worde, 1528, 4to.) is preserved in the Bodleian Library, C. 59. Art. Selden. A fragment of it is also remaining in the Edinburgh MS. of old English poems, No. xxxvii. in two leaves. A large extract from this romance has been given already above (p.190.) Richard was the peculiar patron of chivalry, and favourite of the old minstrels and Troubadours. See Warton's Observ. vol. i. p. 29.; vol. ii. p. 40.

26. Of the following I have only seen No. xxvii. but I believe they may all be referred to the class of romances.
The Knight of Courtesy and the Lady of Faygel (Bodl. Lib. C. 39. Art. Sheld. a printed copy.) This Mr. Warton thinks is the story of Coucy's Heart, related in Fauchet, and in Howel's Letters (v.i.s. 6. l. 20. See Wart. Obs. v. ii. p. 40.) The Editor has seen a very beautiful old ballad on this subject in French.

27. The four following are all preserved in the MS. so often referred to in the public Library at Cambridge (690. Appendix to Bp. More's MSS. in Cat. MSS. tom. ii. p. 394.) viz. The Lay of Erle of Tholouse, (No. xxvii.) of which the Editor hath also a copy from "Cod. MSS. Mus. Ashmol. Oxon." The first line of both is, Jesu Chryste in Trynyte.

28. Reberd Kyng of Cysyll (or Sicily,) shewing the full of pride. Of this there is also a copy among the Harl. MSS. 1703 (3.) The Cambridge MS. begins, Princes that be prowde in prese.

29. Le bone Florence of Rome, beginning thus: As ferre as men ride or gone.

30. Dioeclesian the Emperour, beginning:
Sum tymne ther was a noble man.

31. The two knightly brothers Amya and Amelion (among the Harl. MSS. 2386, § 42) is an old romance of chivalry; as is also, I believe, the fragment of the Lady Beleausant, the duke of Lombardy's fair daughter, mentioned in the same article. See the Catalog. vol. ii.

32. In the Edinburgh MS. so often referred to (preserved in the Advocates' Library, W. 4. 1.) might probably be found some other articles to add to this list, as well as other copies of some of the pieces mentioned in it; for the whole volume contains not fewer than thirty-seven poems or romances, some of them very long. But as many of them have lost the beginnings, which have been cut out for the sake of the illuminations, and as I have not had an opportunity of examining the MS. myself, I shall be content to mention only the articles that follow*; viz.

An old romance about Rowland (not I believe the famous Paladine, but a champion named Rowland Louth; query) being in the volume, No. xxvii., in five leaves, and wants the beginning.

33. Another romance, that seems to be a kind of continuation of this last, intitled, Otuel a Knight (No. xxviii., in eleven leaves and a half.) The two first lines are,
Herkeneth both zinge and old, That willen heren of bataille hold.

34. The King of Tars (No. iv., in five leaves and a half; it is also in the Bodleian Library, MS. Vernon, f. 304.) beginning thus: Herkeneth to me both eld and zing,
For Maries love that swete thing.

35. A tale or romance (No. i., two leaves) that wants both beginning and end. The first lines now remaining are,
The Erl him granted his will y-wis. that the knight him haden y tald.
The Baronnis that were of mikle pris. befor him they weren y-calid.

36. Another mutilated tale or romance (No. iii. four leaves.) The first lines at present are,
To Mr. Steward will y gon. and telleth him the sothe of the Reseyved bestor some anoun gif zou will serv and with hir be.

37. A mutilated tale or romance (No. xii. in thirteen leaves.) The two first lines that occur are, That riche Dooke his fest gan hold
With Erels and with Baronnis bold.

I cannot conclude my account of this curious manuscript, without acknowledging that I was indebted to the friendship of the Rev. Dr. Blair, the ingenious professor of Belles Lettres in the University of Edinburgh, for whatever I learned of its contents, and for the important additions it enabled me to make to the foregoing list.

To the preceding articles, two ancient metrical

* This is alluded to by Shakespeare in his Henry V. (Act 5) where Fluellen tells Pistol, he will make him a squire of low degree, when he means to knock him down.

* Some of these I give, though mutilated and divested of their titles, because they may enable a curious inquirer to complete or improve other copies.
romances in the Scottish dialect may now be added, which are published in Pinkerton's "Scottish Poems, reprinted from scarce editions." Lond. 1792, in 3 vols. 8vo. viz.

38. Gawain and Gallagaw, a metrical romance, from an edition printed at Edinburgh, 1508, 8vo. beginning.
In the tyme of Arthur, as trew men me tald.
It is in stanzas of thirteen lines.

39. Sir Gawain and Sir Galore of Galloway, a metrical romance, in the same stanzas as No. xxxvii, from an ancient MS. beginning thus:
In the tyme of Arthur an aunter * betydde
By the Turnvathelan, as the boke tells;
When he to Carlele was come, and conqueror kyd, &c.

Both these (which exhibit the union of the old alliterative metre, with rhyme, &c., and in the termination of each stanza the short triplets of the Turnament of Tottenham) are judged to be as old as the time of our King Henry VI., being apparently the production of an old poet, thus mentioned by Dunbar, in his "Lament for the Death of the Makkaris:"

"Clerk of Tranent eik he hes take,
That made the aventures of Sir Gawayne."

It will scarce be necessary to remind the reader, that Turnvathelan is evidently Tearne-Wadding; celebrated in the old ballad of the Marriage of Sir Gawaine. See the concluding Notes to No. 4, Series I. Book i, and No. 19, Series I. Book iii.

Many new references, and perhaps some additional articles might be added to the foregoing list from Mr. Warton's "History of English Poetry," 3 vols. 4to., and from the notes to Mr. Tyrwhitt's improved edition of "Chaucer's Canterbury Tales," &c., in 5 vols. 8vo., which have been published since this Essay, &c. was first composed; but it will be sufficient once for all to refer the curious reader to those popular works.

The reader will also see many interesting particulars on the subject of these volumes, as well as on most points of general literature, in Sir John Hawkins's curious "History of Music," &c. in 5 vols. 4to. as also in Dr. Burney's History, &c. in 4 vols. 4to.

THE END OF THE ESSAY.

I.

THE BOY AND THE MANTLE.

— Is printed verbatim from the old MS. described in the Preface. The Editor believes it more ancient than it will appear to be at first sight; the transcriber of that manuscript having reduced the orthography and style in many instances to the standard of his own times.

The incidents of the "Mantle" and the "Knife" have not, that I can recollect, been borrowed from any other writer. The former of these evidently suggested to Spenser his conceit of "Florimel's Girdle," B. iv. C. 5, St. 3.

That girdle gave the virtue of chaste love
And virginal trust to all that did beare; But whosoever contrarie doth provoke,
Might not the same about her middle weare,
But it would loose or else asunder teare.

So it happened to the false Florimell, st. 16, when —Being brought, about her middle small

They thought to gird, as best it her became,
But by no means they could it thereto frame,
For ever as they fastned it, it loos'd
And fell away, as feeling secret blame, &c.

That all men wondred at the uncouth sight
And each one thought as to their fancies came.
But she herself did think it done for spight,
And touched was with secret wrath and shame
Therewith, as thing deviz'd her to defame:
Then many other ladies likewise tride
About their tender loynes to knit the same,
But it would not on none of them abide;
But when they thought it fast, eftsoones it was untide.
Thereat all knights gan laugh and ladies lowred,
Till that at last the gentle Amoret
Likewise assayed to prove that girdle's powre,
And having it about her middle set

* I. e. Adventure.

Did find it fit withouten breach or let,
Whereat the rest gan greatly to envie.
But Florimel exceedingly did fret,
And snatching from her hand, &c.

As for the trial of the Horne, it is not peculiar to our Poet: It occurs in the old Romance, intituled "Morte Arthur," which was translated out of French in the time of King Edward IV., and first printed anno 1494. From that romance Ariosto is thought to have borrowed his tale of the enchanted Cup, C. 42, &c. See Mr. Warton's Observations on the Faerie Queen, &c.

The story of the Horn in Morte Arthur varies a good deal from this of our Poet, as the reader will judge from the following extract.— By the way they met with a knight that was sent from Morgan la Faye to King Arthur, and this knight had a fair horse all garnished with gold, and the horse had such a virtue, that there might no ladey or gentle-woman drink of that horse, but if she were true to her husband, and if she were false she should spill all the drinke, and if she were true unto her lord, she might drink peaceably: and because of Queen Guenever and in despite of Sir Luncelot du Lake, this horse was sent unto King Arthur.—This horn is intercepted and brought unto another king named Marke, who is not a whit more fortunate than the British hero, for he makes "his queene drinke thereof and an hundred ladyes moe, and there were but foure ladies of all those that dranke cleane," of which number the said queen proves not to be one [Book II., chap. 22, Ed. 1632.]

In other respects the two stories are so different, that we have just reason to suppose this Ballad was written before that romance was translated into English.

As for Queen Guenever, she is here represented
THE BOY AND THE MANTLE.

In the third day of may,
To Carleile did come
A kind curteous child,
That cold much of wisdome.

A kirtle and a mantle
This child had uppon,
With 'brouches' and ringes
Full richelye bedone.

He had a suite of silke
About his middle drawne ;
Without he cold of curtesye
He thought itt much shame.

God speed thee, King Arthur,
Sitting at thy meste :
And the godlylye Queene Guénever,
I cannot her forgett.

I tell you, lords, in this hall ;
I hett you all to 'heede' ;
Except you be the more aurer
Is you for to dread.

He plucked out of his 'poterner,'
And longer wold not dwell,
He pulled forth a pretty mantle,
Between two nut-shells.

Have thou here, King Arthur ;
Have thou heere of mee :
Give itt to thy comely queene
Shapen as itt is alreadye

Itt shall never become that wife,
That hath once done amisse.
Then every knight in the kings court
Began to care for his'

Forth came dame Guénever ;
To the mantle shee her 'hied' ;
The ladye shee was newfangle,
But yett shee was affrayd.

When shee had taken the mantle ;
She stood as shee had beene madd :
It was from the top to the toe
As sheerees had itt shred.

One while was it 'gule' ;
Another while was itt greene ;
Another while was itt waddled :
Ill itt did her beseeme.

Another while was itt blacke
And bore the best hue : By my troth, quoth King Arthur,
I thinke thou be not true.

Shee throwe downe the mantle,
That bright was of blee ;
Fast with a rudd redd,
To her chamber can shee flee.

She curst the weaver, and the walker,
That clothe that had wrought ;
And bade a vengeance on his crowne,
That hither hath itt brought.

I had rather be in a wood,
Under a greene tree ;
Then in King Arthurs court
Shamed for to bee.

Kay called forth his ladye,
And bade her come neere ;
Saies, Madam, and thou be guiltye,
I pray thee hold thee there.

Forth came his ladye
Shortlye and anon ;
Boldlye to the mantle
Then is shee gone.

When shee had tane the mantle,
And cast it her about ;
Then was shee bare
'Before all the rout.'

Then ever knight,
That was in the kings court,
Talked, laughed, and showted
Full oft att that sport.

Shee throwe downe the mantle,
That bright was of blee ;
Fast, with a red rudd,
To her chamber can shee flee.

Forth came an old knight
Patterning ore a creede,
And he proffered to this little boy
Twenty markes to his meede ;

And all the time of the Christmass
Willinglye to fleede ;
For why this mantle might
Doe his wiffe some need.

When shee had tane the mantle,
Of cloth that was made,
Shee had no more left on her,
But a tassell and a thread : Then every knight in the kings court Bade evill might shee speed.

Shee throwe downe the mantle,
That bright was of blee ;
And fast, with a reid rudd,
To her chamber can shee flee.

Craddocke called forth his ladye,
And bade her come in ;
Saith, Winne this mantle, ladye,
With a little dinne.

Ver. 7, branches, MS. V. 18, heate, MS. V. 21, potter-ver, MS. V. 22, his wife, MS. V. 24, bided, MS. V. 41, gaule, MS.
Ver. 75, laugh'd.
Winne this mantle, ladye,
And it shal be thine,
If thou never did amisse.
Since thou wast mine.

Forth came Craddockes ladye
Shortlye and anon;
But boldlye to the mantle
Then is shee gone.

When she had tune the mantle,
And cast it lier about,
Upp att her great toe
It began to crinkle and crowt:
Shee said, bowe downe, mantle,
And shame me not for nought.
Once I did amisse,
I tell you certainlye,
When I kist Craddockes mouth
Under a greene tree;
When I kist Craddockes mouth
Before he married mee.
When shee had her shreeven,
And her sines shee had tolde;
The mantle stode about her
Right as shee wold:
Seemelye of coulour
Glittering like gold:
Then every knight in Arthurs court
Did her behold.
Then spake dame Guénever
To Arthur our king:
She hath tane yonder mantle
Not with right, but with wronge
See you not yonder woman,
That maketh her self soo 'cleane'?
I have seene tane out of her bedd
Of men fiveteene;

Priests, clarkes, and wedded men
From her bedeene:
Yett shee taketh the mantle,
And maketh her selfe cleane.
Then spake the little boy,
That kept the mantle in hold;
Sayes, king, chasten thy wiffe,
Of her words shee is to bold:
Shee is a bitch and a witch,
And a whore bold:
King, in thine owne hall
Thou art a cuckold.

The little boy stode
Looking out a dore;
'And there as he was lookinge
He was ware of a wyld bore.'
He was ware of a wyld bore,
Wold have werryed a man:
If he pulld forth a wood kniffe
Fast thither that he ran:
He brought in the bores head,
And quitted him like a man.
He brought in the bores head,
And was wonderous bold:
He said there was never a cuckold kniffe
Carve in that cold.
Some rubbed their knifes
Uppon a whetstone:
Some threw them under the table,
And said they had none.
King Arthur, and the child
Stood looking upon them;
All their knifes edges
Turned backe againe.

Craddock had a little knife
Of iron and of steele;
He britted the bores head
Wonderous weelee;
That every knight in the kings court
Had a morssell.
The little boy had a horne,
Of red gold that ronge:
He said, there was noe cuckolde
Shall drinke of my horne;
But he shold it sheede
Either behind or beforne.
Some shedd on their shoulder,
And some on their knee;
He that cold not hitt his mouthe,
Put it in his eye:
And he that was a cuckold
Every man might him see.
Craddock wan the horne,
And the bores head:
His ladie wan the mantle
Unto her meede.
Everye such a lovely ladye
God send her well to speede.
THE MARRIAGE OF SIR GAWAINE.

--Is chiefly taken from the fragment of an old ballad in the Editor's MS, which he has reason to believe more ancient than the time of Chaucer, and what furnished that bard with his Wife of Bath's Tale. The original was so extremely mutilated, half of every leaf being torn away, that without large supplements, &c. it was deemed improper for this collection: these it has therefore received, such as they are. They are not here particularly pointed out, because the "Fragment" itself will now be found printed at the end of this volume.

PART THE FIRST.

King Arthur lives in merry Carlile, 5
And seemly is to see;
And there with him Queene Guenever,
That bride soe bright of blee.

And there with him Queene Guenever, 10
That bride so bright in bowre:
And all his barons about him stooed,
That were both stiffe and stowre.

The king a royale Christmass e kept,
With mirth and princelye cheare;
To him repaired many a knighte,
That came both farre and neare.

And when they were to dinner sette, 15
And cups went freely round:
Before them came a faire damselle,
And knelt upon the ground.

A boone, a boone, O Kinge Arthure,
I beg a boone of thee;
Avenge me of a carlish knighte,
Who hath shent my love and mee.

At Tearne-Wadling* his castle stands, 20
Near to that lake so fair,
And proudlye rise the battlements,
And streamers deck the air.

Noe gentle knighte, nor ladye gay,
May pass that castle-walle:
But from that foul discouerous knighte,
Mishappe will them befalle.

Hee's twice the size of common men,
Wi' thewes, and sinewes stronge,
And on his backe he bears a clubbe,
That is both thicke and longe.

This grimme barone 'twas our harde happe,
But yester morne to see;
When to his bowre he bare my love,
And sore misused mee.

* Tearne-Wadling is the name of a small lake near Hesketh in Cumberland, on the road from Penrith to Carlisle. There is a tradition, that an old castle once stood near the lake, the remains of which were not long since visible. Tear, in the dialect of that country, signifies a small lake, and is still in use.

And when I told him, King Arthure As lyttele shold him spare;
Goe tell, sayd hee, that cullkold kinge,
To meete mee if he dare.

Upp then sterted King Arthure,
And sware by hille and dale,
He ne'er wolde quit that grimme barone
Till he had made him quall.

Goe fetch my sword Excalibar:
Goe saddle mee my steede;
Nowe, by my faye, that grimme barone
Shall rue this ruthfulle deede.

And when he came to Tearne Wadlinge
Benethe the castle walle:
"Come forth; come forth; thou proude barone,
Or yielde thyself my thrallie."

On magicke grounds that castle stooed,
And fenc'd with many a spelle:
Noe valiant knightes could tread thereon,
But straite his courage felle.

Forth then rush'd that carlish knight,
King Arthur felt the charme:
His sturdy sinewes lost their strength,
Downe sunke his feeble arme.

Nowe yield thee, yield thee, Kinge Arthure,
Nowe yield thee, unto mee:
Or fighte with mee, or lose thy lande,
Noe better termes maye bee,

Unlesse thou sweare upon the rood,
And promise on thy faye,
Here to returne to Tearne-Wadling,
Upon the new-yeare's day:

And bringe me worde what thing it is
All women moste desyre:
This is thy ransome, Arthur, he sayes,
Ile have noe other hyre.

King Arthur then holde up his hande,
And sware upon his faye,
Then tooke his leave of the grimme barone,
And faste hee rode awaye.

And he rode east, and he rode west,
And did of all inquyre,
What thing it is all women crve,
And what they most desyre.

Some told him riches, pompe, or state;
Some rayment fine and brighte;
Some told him mirthe; some flatterye,
And some a jollye knighte.

In letters all King Arthur wrote,
And seal'd them with his ringe:
But still his minde was holde in doubte,
Each tolde a different thinge.

199
As ruthfulle he rode over a more,
He sawe a ladie sette 90
Betweene an oke, and a greene holléye,
All clad in red* scarlette.

Her nose was crookt and turnd outwärde,
Her chin stooed all awyre;
And where as shold they have been her mouthe,
Lo! there was set her eye:

Her haires, like serpents, clung aboute
Her cheekes of deadlye hewe;
A worse-form'd ladie than she was,
No man mote ever viewe.

To hail the king in seemelye sorte
This ladie was fulle faine:
But King Arthure all sore amaz'd,
No sunswere were made againe.

What wight art thou, the ladie sayd,
That wilt not speake to mee;
Sir, I may chance to ease thy paine,
Though I bee foule to see.

If thou wilt ease my paine, he sayd,
And helpe me in my neede;
Ask what thou wilt, thou grimme ladyc,
And it shall bee thy neede.

O sweare mee this upon the roode,
And promise on thy fayre;
And here the secrette I will telle,
That shall thy ransome paye.

King Arthur promis'd on his fayre,
And sweare upon the roode;
The secrette than the ladye told,
As lightlye well shee cou'de.

Now this shall be my paye, sir king,
And this my guerdon bee,
That some yong fair and courteye knight,
Thou bringe to marrye mee.

Fast then pricked King Arthure
Ore hille, and dale, and downe:
And some he founde the barone's bowre:
And some the grimme baronine.

He bare his clubbe upon his backe,
Hoo stooed both stifte and stronge;
And, when he had the letters reade,
Awyde the letters fiunge.

Nowe yielde thee, Arthur, and thy lands,
All forfeit unto mee;
For this is not thy paye, sir king,
Nor may thy ransome bee.

Yet hold thy hand, thou proud barone,
I praye thee hold thy hand;
And give mee leave to speake once more
In reskewe of my land.

This morne, as I came over a more,
I sawe a ladie sette
Betweene an oke, and a greene holléye,
All clad in red scarlette.

Shee sayes, all women will have their wille, 145
This is their chief desyre;
Now yield, as thou art a barone true,
That I have payd mine hyre.

An early vengeauce light on her!
The carlish baron swore:
Shew was my sister tolde thee this,
And shee's a mishapen whore.

But here I will make mine avowe,
To do her as ill a turne:
For an ever I may that foule thefe gette,
In a fyre I will her burne.

PART THE SECONDE.

Homeward pricked King Arthure,
And a weareye man was hee;
And soone he mette Queene Guenever,
That bride so bright of blew.

What newes! what newes! thou noble king, 5
Hewe, Arthur, hast thou sped?
Where hast thou hung the carlish knigte?
And where bestow'd his head?

The carlish knight is safe for mee,
And free fro mortal harme;
On magick grounde his castle stands,
And fende'd with many a charm'e.

To bowe to him I was fulle faine,
And yelde mee to his hand:
And but for a lothly ladie, there
I shold have lost my land.

And nowe this fills my hearte with woe,
And sorrowe of my life;
I swore a yonge and courtlye knight,
Sholde marrye her to his wife.

Then bespake him Sir Gawaine,
That was ever a gentle knigte:
That lothly ladye I will wed;
Therefore be merrye and lighte.

Nowe naye, nowe naye, good Sir Gawaine;
My sister's sonne yee bee;
This lothly ladye's all too grimme,
And all too foule for yee.

Her nose is crookt and turn'd outwärde:
Her chin stands all awyre;
A worse form'd ladye than shee is
Was never seen with eye.

What though her chin stand all awyre,
And shee be foule to see:
I'll marry her, unkle, for thy sake,
And I'll thy ransome bee.

* This was a common phrase in our old writers; so Chancer in his Prologue to the Cant. Tales, says of the wife of Bath:
Her hosen were of fyne scarlet red.
THE MARRIAGE OF SIR GAWAIN.

Nowe thanks, nowe thanks, good Sir Gawaine;
And a blessing thee betryde!
To-morrow we'll have knights and squires,
And we'll goe fetch thy bride.

And wee'll have hawkes and we'll have boundes,
To cover our intent;
And we'll away to the greene forest,
As wee a hunting went.

Sir Lancelot, Sir Stephen bolde,
They rode with them that daye;
And foremoste of the companye
There rode the stewarde Kaye:

Soe did Sir Banier and Sir Bore,
And eke Sir Garratte keene;
Sir Tristram too, that gentle knight,
To the forest freshe and greene.

And when they came to the greene forrest,
Beneathe a faire holley tree
There sate that ladye in red scarlette
That unseemelye was to see.

Sir Kay beheld that lady's face,
And looked upon her sweere;
Whoever kisses that ladye, he says,
Of his kisse he stands in feare.

Sir Kay beheld that ladye againe,
And looked upon her snout;
Whoever kisses that ladye, he says,
Of his kisse he stands in doubt.

Peace, brother Kay, sayde Sir Gawaine,
And amend thee of thy life;
For there is a knight amongst us all,
Must marry her to his wife.

What marry this foule queane, quoth Kay,
I' the devil's name anone;
Gytt mee a wife wherever I maye,
In sooth shee shall be none.

Then some tooke up their hawkes in haste,
And some took up their boundes;
And sayd they wolde not marry her,
For cities, nor for townes.

Then bespake him King Arthure,
And scare there by this daye;
For a little foule sighte and mislikinge,
Yee shall not say her naye.

Peace, lordlings, peace; Sir Gawaine sayd;
Nor make debate and strife;
This lothlye ladye I will take,
And marry her to my wife.

Nowe thanks, nowe thanks, good Sir Gawaine,
And a blessing be thy meede!
For as I am thine owne ladye,
Thou never shalt rue this deede.

Then up they took that lothly dame,
And home anone they bringe:
And there Sir Gawaine he her wed,
And married her with a ringe,

And when they were in wed-bed laid,
And all were done awaye:
"Come turne to mee, mine own wed-lord,
Come turne to mee I praye."

Sir Gawaine scant could lift his head,
For sorowe and for care;
When, lo! instead of that lothelye dame,
He sawe a young ladye faire.

Sweet blushes stayn'd her rud-red cheeke,
Her eyen were blacke as sloe:
The ripening cherrye swellde her lippe,
And all her necke was snowe.

Sir Gawaine kiss'd that lady faire,
Lying upon the sheete,
And swore, as he was a true knighte,
The spicke was never soe sweete.

Sir Gawaine kiss'd that lady brighte,
Lying there by his side:
"The fairest flower is not so faire:
Thou never canst bee my bride."

I am thy bride, mine owne deare lorde,
The same whiche thou didst knowe,
That was soe lothlye, and was wont
Upon the wild more to goe.

Nowe, gentle Gawaine, chase, quoth shee,
And make thy choice with care;
Whether by night, or else by daye,
Shall I be foule or faire?

"To have thee foule still in the night,
When I with thee should playe?
I had rather farre, my lady deare,
To have thee foule by daye."

What when gaye dames goe with their lords
To drinke the ale and wine;
Alas! then I must hide myself,
I must not goe with mine?

"My faire ladye, Sir Gawaine sayd,
I yield to thy skille;
Because thou art mine owne ladye
Thou shalt have all thy wille."

Nowe blessed be thou, sweete Gawaine,
And the daye that I thee see;
For as thou seest mee at this time,
Soo shall I ever bee.

My father was an aged knighte,
And yet it chanced soe,
He tooke to a wife a false ladye,
Whiche broughte me to this woe.

Shee witch'd mee, being a faire yonge maide,
In the greene forrest to dwelle;
And there to abide in lothlye shape,
Most like a fiend of helle.

Midst mores and mosses; woods, and wilds;
To lead a lonesome life;
Till some yong faire and courtlye knighte
Wolde marrye me to his wife:

Nor fully to gaine mine owne trewe shape,
Such was her devilish skille;
Until he wolde yilde to be rul'd by mee,
And let mee have all my wille.
She witchd my brother to a carlish boore,
And made him stiffe and strange;
And built him a bowre on magicke grounde, 155
To live by rapine and wronge.

But now the spelle is broken throughge,
And wronge is turned to righte;
Henceforth I shall bee a faire ladye,
And hee be a gentle knighte.

III.

KING RYENCE'S CHALLENGE.

This song is more modern than many of those which follow it, but is placed here for the sake of the subject. It was sung before Queen Elizabeth at the grand entertainment at Kenelworth castle in 1575, and was probably composed for that occasion.
In a letter describing those festivities it is thus mentioned: A "Minstral came forth with a sollem song, warranted for story out of King Arthur's acts, whereof I gat a copy, and this is:

"So it fell out on a Pentecost, &c."

After the song the narrative proceeds: "At this the Minstrell made a pause and a curtesy for Primus Passus. More of the song is there, but I gat it not."

The story in Morte Arthur, whence it is taken, rays as follows: "Came a messenger hastily from King Ryence of North Wales, saying, that King Ryence had discomfited and overthrown eleaven kings, and everthe of them did him homage, and that was this:
they gave him their beards plaie flayne off,—wherefore the messenger come for King Arthur's beard, for King Ryence had purfeled a mantell with kings beards, and there lacked for one a place of the mantell, wherefore he sent for his beard, or else he would enter into his lands, and brenn and slay, and never leave till he have thy head and thy beard.
Well, said King Arthur, thou hast sayd thy message, which is the most villainous and lowdest message that ever man heard sent to a king. Also thou mayest see my beard is full young yet for to make a purfle of, but tell thou the king that—or it be long he shall do to me homage on both his knees, or else he shall leese his head." [B. i. c. 24. See also the same Romance, B. i. c. 92.]

The thought seems to be originally taken from Jeff. Mommon's Biat, B. X. c. 3. which is alluded to by Drayton in his Poly-Olb. Song 4. and by Spenser in Faer. Qu. 6. i. 13. 15. See the Observa-Tions on Spenser, vol. II. p. 283.

The following text is composed of the best readings selected from three different copies. The first in Enderbie's Cambria Triumphans, p. 197. The second in the Letter above mentioned. And the third inserted in MS. in a copy of Morte Arthur, 1632, in the Bodl. Library.

Stow tells us, that King Arthur kept his round table at "diverse places, but especially at Carlion, Winchester, and Camalot in Somersetshire." This
"Camalot," sometimes a famous town or castle, is situate on a "very high tor or hill, &c." [See an exact description in Stow's Annals, Ed. 1631, p. 53.]

As it fell out on a Pentecost day,
King Arthur at Camolot kept his court royall,
With his faire queene dame Guenever the gay;
And many bold barons sitting in hall;
With ladies attired in purple and palt;
And heralds in hawkes hooting on high,
Cryed, Largesse, Largesse, Chevalers tres-hardie*.

A doughty dwarf to the uppermost deas
Right pertly gan pricke, kneeling on knee;
With steven fullle stoute amids all the press,
Sayed, Nowe, sir King Arthur, God save thee, and see!
Sir Ryence of North-gales greteth well thee,
And bids thee thy heard anon to him send,
Or else from thy jaws he will it off rend.

For his robe of state is a rich scarlet mantle,
With eleven kings beards bordered about,
And there is room lefte yet in a kantele,
To thine to stande, to make the twelfth out:
This must be done, be thou never so stout;
This must be done, I tell thee no fable,
Maugre the teeth of all thy round table.

When this mortal message from his mouthe past,
Great was the noyse bothe in hall and in bower:
The king fum'd; the queene screech't; ladies were aghast;
Princes puff'd; barons blustred; lords began lower;
Knights stormed; squires startled, like steeds in a stower;
Pages and yeomen yell'd out in the hall,
Then in came Sir Kay, the 'king's' seneschal.

Silence, my soveraigne, quoth this courteous knight,
And in that stound the stowre began still:
'Then' the dwarfes's dinner full deerely was dight;
Of wine and wassall he had his wille:
And, when he had eaten and drunken his fill,
An hundred pieces of fine courned gold
Were given this dwarf for his message bold.

* Largesse, Largesse. The heralds resounded these words as oft as they received of the bounty of the knights. See
"Memoires de la Chevalerie," tom. I. p. 98. The expression is still used in the form of installing knights of the garter.
† i.e. set round the border, as furs are now round the gowns of Magistrates.
KING ARTHUR'S DEATH.

A FRAGMENT.

The subject of this ballad is evidently taken from the old romance "Morte Arthur," but with some variations, especially in the concluding stanzas; in which the author seems rather to follow the traditions of the old Welsh Bards, who "believed that King Arthur was not dead, but conveyed away by the Fairies into some pleasant place, where he should remain for a time, and then return again and reign in as great authority as ever." Holinshed, B. 5, c. 14; or, as it is expressed in an old Chronicle printed at Antwerp 1495, by Ger. de Leew, "The Bretons suppose, that he [King Arthur] shall come yet and conquer all Bretaigne, for certes this is the prophecie of Merlyn; He sayd, that his deth shall be doubteous; and sayd soth, for men thereof yet have doubtes, and shullen for ever more,—for men wynt not whether that he lyveth or is dede." See more ancient testimonies in Selden's Notes on Polyvbiun, song 3.

This fragment, being very incorrect and imperfect in the original MS, hath received some conjectural emendations, and even a supplement of 3 or 4 stanzas composed from the romance of "Morte Arthur."

On Trinity Monday morning,
This sord battayle was doom’d to bee.
Where manye a knighte cry’d, Well-awaye!
Alacke, it was the more pittie.

Ere the first crowinge of the cocke,
When as the kinge in his bed laye,
He thought Sir Gawaine to him came,
And there to him these wordes did saye.

Nowe, as you are mine unkle deare,
And as you prize your life, this daye
O meet not with your foes in fighte;
Put off the battayle, if yee maye.

For Sir Launcelot is nowe in Franche,
And with him many an hardye knighte:
Who will within this moneth be backe,
And will assiste yee in the fighte.

The kinge then calld his nobles all,
Before the breakinge of the daye;
And tolde them howe Sir Gawaine came,
And there to him these wordes did saye.

His nobles all this counsayle gave,
That early in the morning, hee
Shold send awaye an herauld at armes,
To aske a parley faire and free.

Then twelve good knightes King Arthur chose,
The best of all that with him were:
To parley with the foe in field,
And make with him agreement faire.

The kine he charged all his hoste,
In readinesse there for to bee;
But noe man shOLde noe weapon sturre,
Unlesse a sword drawne they shold see.

And Mordred on the other parte,
Twelve of his knightes did likewise bringe;
The beste of all his companye,
To hold the parley with the kine.

Sir Mordred alsoe charged his hoste,
In readinesse there for to bee;
But noe man shold noe weapon sturre,
But if a sword were drawne they shold see.

For he durste not his unkle truste,
Nor he his nephewe, sothe to tell:
Alacke! it was a woeful case,
As ere in Christentyme befell.

But when they were together mette,
And both to faire accordance broughte;
And a month’s league betweene them sette,
Before the battayle shold be foughte;

An addere crept forth of a bushe,
Stunge one o’ th’ king’s knightes on the knee:
Alacke! it was a woefull chance,
As ever was in Christentye.

When the knightes found him wounded sore,
And sawe the wild-worme hanginge there;
His swordes he from his scaberde drewe:
A piteous case, as ye shall heare.

For when the two hostes sawe the sworde,
They joynd battayle instantlye;
Till of so manye noble knightes,
On one side there were left but three.

* Sir Gawaine had been killed at Arthur’s landing on his return from abroad. See the next Ballad, ver. 73.

Ver. 41, 42. The folio reads father—sonne.
For all were slain that durst abide,
And but some fewe that fled awaye:
Ay mee! it was a bloodye fieldes,
As ere was foughte on summer's daye.

Upon King Arthur's own partye,
Onlye himselfe escaped there,
And Lukyn Duke of Gloster free,
And the king's butler Bedevere.

And when the king beheld his knightes,
All dead and scattered on the molde;
The teares fast trickled downe his face;
That manlye face in sight so bolde.

Nowe reste yee all, brave knightes, he said,
Soo true and faithfull to your trust:
And must yee then, ye valiant hearts,
Be lefte to mouldre into dust!

Most loyal have yee been to mee,
Most true and faithfull unto death:
And, oh! to rayse yee up againe,
How freelye could I yield my breathe!

But see the traitor's yet alive,
Lo where hee stakke among the deade!
Nowe bitterlye he shall abyde;
And vengeance fall upon his head.

O staye, my liege, then sayd the duke;
O staye for love and charitie;
Remember what the vision spake,
Nor meete yee foe, if it may bee.

O, staye mee not, thou worthye wight,
This debt my loyal knightes I owe:
Betide me life, betide me death,
I will avenge them of their foe.

Then straite he grasped his trustye speare,
And on his horse then mounted hee:
As his butler holpe him to his horse,
His bowels gushed to his knee.

Alas! then sayd the noble king,
That I should live this sight to see!
To see this good knight here be slaine,
All for his love in helping mee!

He put his speare into his reste,
And to Sir Mordred loud gan crye;
Nowe sette thyselfe upon thy garde,
For, traitor, nowe thy death is nye.

Sir Mordred lifted up his sworde,
And fierce to meete the king ran hee:
The king his speare he through him thrust;
And fathom thorow his bodie.

When Mordred felt the stroke of death,
And found that he was wounded soe;
He thruste himselfe upon the speare,
And struck the king a deadlye blowe.

Then grimlye dyed Sir Mordered,
Presentlye upon that tree:
And bloodye streames ranne from the kinge
Ere to the duke returned hee.

Sir Lukyn then he thus bespake,
Sir knyghte, thou hast beene faithfuller truyde,
Nowe take my sword Excalibar*:
That hanges so freelye by my syde:
O take my sword Excalibar,
And there into the river throwe:
For here, henceforth, benete this tree,
All use of weapons I foregoe.

And fare thee well, thou trustye sword,
A better neer had valiant knighte,
With thee full oft, and manye a daye,
Have I withstood my foe in fighte.

With this good fauchion in my hande,
Oft have I reapd the bloodye feede:
But nowe the fatallie hour is come,
That never more I may thee weelde.

The duke to the river side he went,
And there his owne sworde in threwe he:
But hee kept back Excalibar,
He kept it back in privitie.

For all of coleyne was the blende;
And all the hitle of precious stone:
And ever alacke! then sayd the knighte,
Must such a sword awaye be throwne?
Then backe he came unto the kinges,
Who sayd, Sir Lukyn, what did yee see?
Nothing, my liege, save that the winde
Blew oer the waters faire and free.

O goe againe, then said the kinge,
O good Sir Lukyn, goe againe:
Into the river threwe my sword,
Nor keepe me lingering here in paine.

The duke then to the river went,
And the kings scabbard in threwe hee;
But hee kept backe Excalibar,
And hid it underneath a tree.

Then backe he came to tell the kinge,
Who sayde, Sir Lukyn, sawe ye oughte?
Nothinge, my liege, save that the winde
Nowe with the angerie waters fought.

O Lukyn, Lukyn, said the kinge,
Twice haste thou dealt deceitfullye:
Alacke, whom may wee ever truste,
When suche a kynge soe false can bee?
Saye, wouldst thou have thy master dead;
All for a sword, that wins thine eye:
Nowe goe againe, and throwe it in,
Or here the one of us shall dye.

The duke, all shent with this rebuke,
No aunswere were made unto the kinge:
But to the river tooke the sworde,
And threwe it far as he could finge.

A hande and armes did meete the sworde,
And flourishd three times in the air;
Then sunke benete the reminge streme,
And of the duke was seen noe mair.

* More commonly called Caliburn. In the folio M.S. Excalberd.
All sore astonied stood the duke;
He stood as still, as still mote bee;
Then hastend backe to tell the kinde;
But he was gone from under the tree.
But to what place he cold not tell,
For never after hee did him spye:

But hee sawe a barge goe from the land,
And hee heard ladyes howle and crye*.
And whether the kinde were there, or not,
Hee never knewe, nor ever colde;
For from that sad and direfulle daye,
Hee never more was scene on molde.

THE LEGEND OF KING ARTHUR.

We have here a short summary of King Arthur's History as given by Jeff. of Monmouth and the old Chronicles, with the addition of a few circumstances from the romance Morte Arthur.—The ancient chronicle of Ger. de Loew (quoted above in p. 203) seems to have been chiefly followed: upon the authority of which we have restored some of the names which were corrupted in the MS, and have transposed one stanza, which appeared to be misplaced, [viz. that beginning at v. 49, which in the MS. followed v. 36.]

Printed from the Editor's ancient folio Manuscript.

Of Brutus' blood, in Brittaine borne,
King Arthur I am to name;
Through Christendome, and Heathnesse,
Well knowne is my worthy fame.

In Jesus Christ I doe beleive;
I am a Christyan bore:
The Father, Sone, and Holy Goth
One God, I doe adore.

In the four hundred ninetie yeere,
Over Brittaine I did rayne,
After my savior Christ his byrth:
What time I did maintaine.

The fellowships of the table round,
Soo famous in those dayes;
Whereat a hundred noble knights,
And thirty sat alwayes:

Who for their deafs and martiall feates,
As booke done yet record,
Amongst all other nations
Wer feared through the world.

And in the castle off Tyntagill
King Uther mee begate
Of Agyana a biewtyous ladye,
And come of 'hie' estate.

And when I was fifteen yeere old,
Then was I crowned kinde;
All Brittaine that was att an uprõre
I did to quiett bringe.

And drove the Saxons from the realme,
Who had opprest this land;
All Scotland then throughge manly feats
I conquered with my hand.

Ireland, Denmarke, Norway,
These countryes wan I all;
Ireland, Gotheland, and Swethland;
And made their kings my thrall.

I conquered all Gallya,
That now is called France;
And slew the hardye Froll in field
My honor to advance.

And the ugly gyant Dynabys
Soo terrible to vewe,
That in Saint Barnards mount did lye,
By force of armes I slew:

And Lucyyus the emperour of Rome
I brought to deadly wracke;
And a thousand more of noble knightes
For feare did turne their backe:

Five kinges of 'paynings' I did kill
Amidst that bloody strife;
Besides the Grecian emperour
Who alse lost his liffe.

Whose carcasse I did send to Rome
Cladd poorlye on a beere;
And afterward I past Mount-Joye
The next approaching yeere.

Then I came to Rome, where I was mett
Right as a conquereour,
And by all the cardinall solempnelye
I was crowned an emperour.

---

Ver. 30, Froland field, MS. Troll, according to the Chronicles, was a Roman knight, governour of Gaul. V. 4, Danby, MS. V. 40, of Paseye, MS.

* Not unlike that passage in Virgil:
Summoque subarium eritice nymphas.
Ladies was the word our old English writers used for Nymphes: As in the following lines of an old song in the Editor's folio MS.

"When scorching Phebus he did mount,
Then Lady Venus went to hunt:
To whom Diana did resort,
With all the Ladies of hills, and valleys,"
Of springs, and floods, &c."
One winter there I made abode;
Then word to mee was brought
Howe Mordred had oppossed the crowne:
What treason he had wrought
Att home in Brittaine with my queene; 65
Therfore I came with speede
To Brittaine backe, with all my power,
To quitt that traiterous deede:
And soone at Sandwich I arrivde, 70
Where Mordred me withsuoode:
But yett at last I landed there,
With effusion of much blood.
For there my nephew Sir Gawaine dyed,
Being wounded in that sore,
The which Sir Lancelot in fight 75
Had given him before.
Thence chased I Morderid away,
Who feld to London right,
From London to Winchester, and 80
To Cornewalle tooke his flyght.

And still I him pursued with speed
Till at the last wee mett:
Wherby an appointed day of fight
Was there agreed and sett.
Where we did fight, of mortal life 85
Eche other to deprive,
Till of a hundred thousand men
Scarce one was left alive.
There all the noble chivalry
Of Brittaine tooke their end. 90
O see how fickle is their state
That doe on feates depend!
There all the traiterous men were slaine,
Not one escapte away;
And there dyed all my vallyant knightes 95
Alas! that woeful day!
Two and twenty yeere I ware the crowne
In honor and great fame;
And thus by death was suddenly
Deprived of the same. 100

VI.

A DYTTIE TO HEY DOWNE.

Copied from an old MS. in the Cotton Library,

Who sekes to tame the blustering winde,
Or causse the floods bend to his wyll, 5
Or els against dame nature's kinde
To ' change' things frame by cunning skyl:
That man I thinke bestoweth paine,
Though that his laboure be in vaine.

Who strives to breake the sturdy steele,
Or goeth about to staye the sunne ; 10
Who thinks to causse an oke to reele,
Which never can by force be done:
That man likewise bestoweth paine,
Though that his laboure be in vaine.

Who thinks to stryve against the streame,
And for to sayle without a maste ; 15
Unlesse he thinks perhaps to faine,
His travell ys forelorne and waste;
And so in cure of all his paine,
His travell ys his cheuest gaine.

So he lykewise, that goes about
To please eche eye and every care, 20
Hau ned to have withouten doubt
A golden gyft with hym to beare;
For eryll report shall be his gaine,
Though he bestowe both toye and paine.

God grant eche man one to amend; 25
God send us all a happy place;
And let us pray unto the end,
That we may have our princes grace:
Amen, amen! so shall we gaine
A dewe reward for all our paine.

VII.

GLASGERION.

An ingenious Friend thinks that the following old Ditty (which is printed from the Editor's folio MS.)
may possibly have given birth to the Tragedy of the "Orphan," in which Polidore intercepts Monimia's intended favours to Castallo.
See what is said concerning the hero of this song,
(who is celebrated by Chaucer under the name of Glaskyron) in the Essay prefixed to Series the First,
Note H.

GLASGERION was a kings owne sonne,
And a harper he was goode:
He harped in the kings chambere,
Where cuppe and caudle sioode.
And soe did hee in the queens chamber, 5
Till ladies waxed ' glad.'
And then bespare the kings daughter;
And these words thus shee sayd.

Ver. 4, cause, MS.

Ver. 92, perhaps fates. V. 6, wood. MS.
GLASGERION.

Strike on, strike on, Glasgerion,
Of thy striking do not blaine:
Theres never a stroke comes oer thy harpe,
But it glads my hart withinne.

Faire might he fall, ladye, quoth hee,
Who taught you nowe to speake!
I have loved you, ladye, seven longe yeere
My minde I neere durst breake.

But come to my bower, my Glasgeriôn,
When all men are att rest:
As I am a ladie true of my promise,
Thou shalt bee a welcome guest.

Home then came Glasgerion,
A glad man, lord! was hee,
And, come thou hither, Jacke my boy;
Come hither unto me.

For the kinges daughter of Normandye
Hath granted mee my boone:
And att her chambere must I bee
Beffore the cocke have crowen.

O master, master, then quoth hee,
Lay your head downe on this stone:
For I will waken you, master deere,
Afore it be time to gone.

But up then rose that lither ladd,
And hose and shoon did on:
A coller he cast upon his necke,
Hee seemed a gentleman.

And when he came to the ladies chamber,
He thrid upon the pinne*.
The lady was true of her promise,
Rose up and let him in.

He did not take the lady gaye
To boulster nor to bed:
'Nor thoughge hee had his wicked wille,
A single word he sed.'

He did not kisse that ladyes mouth
Nor when he came, nor yould:
And sone mistrusted that ladye gay,
He was of some churlis bloud.

But home then came that lither ladd,
And did off his hose and shooe:
And cast the coller from off his necke:
He was but a churlis sonne.

Awake, awake, my deere master,
The cock hath well-nigh crowned.
Awake, awake, my master deere,
I hold it time to be gone.

For I have saddled your horsse, mastèr,
Well bridled I have your steede:
And I have served you a good breakfast:
For thereof ye have need.

Up then rose. good Glasgeriôn,
And did on hose and shooe;
And cast a coller about his necke:
For he was a kinge his sonne.

And when he came to the ladyes chamber,
He thrid upon the pinne:
The ladye was more than true of promise,
And rose and let him inn.

Sayes, whether have you left with me
Your bracelett or your glove?
Or are you returned backe againe
To know more of my love?

Glasgerion swore a full great othe,
By oake, and ashe, and thorne;
Lady, I was never in your chamber,
Sith the time that I was borne,

O then it was your lither foot-page,
He hath begrilled mee.
Then shee pulled forth a little pen-kniffe,
That hanged by her knee:

Sayes, there shall never noe churlés blood
Within my bodye spring:
No churlés blood shall ever defeile
The daughter of a kinge.

Home then went Glasgerion,
And woe, good lord, was hee.
Sayes, come thou hither, Jacke my boy,
Come hither unto mee.

If I had killed a man to night,
Jace, I would tell it to thee:
But if I have not killed a man to night,
Jace, thou hast killed three.

And he puld out his bright browne sword,
A dryed it on his sleeve,
And he smote off that lither ladds head,
Who did his ladye grieve.

He sett the swords poynitt till his brest,
The pummil untill a stone:
Throw the falseness of that lither ladd,
These three lives were all gone.

Ver. 16, harte, MS.
* This is elsewhere expressed 'twirled the pins' or 'tirled at the pins' [Se B. H. B. VI. v. 3.] and seems to refer to the turning round the button on the outside of a door, by which the latch rises, still used in cottages.
From an ancient copy in the Editor's folio MS., which was judged to require considerable corrections.
In the former Edition the hero of this piece had been called Sir Robin, but that title not being in the MS. is now omitted.

Let never again see old a man
Marrye soe yonge a wife,
As did old Robin of Portingale;
Who may rue all the dayes of his life.

For the mayors daughter of Lin, god wott,
He chose her to his wife,
And thought with her to have lived in love,
But they fell to hate and strife.

They scarce were in their wed-bed laid,
And scarce was hee asleepe,
But upp shee rose, and forth she goes,
To the steward, and gan to weepe.

Sleepe you, wake you, faire Sir Gyles?
Or he you not within?
Sleepe you, wake you, faire Sir Gyles,
Arise and let me inn.

O, I am waking, sweete, he said,
Sweete ladye, what is your will?
I have unbethought me of a wile
How my wed-lord weell spill.

Twenty-four good knights, shee sayses,
That dwell about this towne,
Even twenty-four of my next cozins,
Will helpe to dinge him downe.

All that beheld his little footpage,
As he watered his masters steed;
And for his masters sad perille
His verrry heart did bleed.

He mourned still, and wept full sore;
I sweare by the holy roode
The teares he for his master wept;
Were blent water and blonde.

And that beheard his deare master
As he stood at his garden pale:
Sayses, Ever allacke, my little foot-page,
What causes thee to wail?

Hath any one done to thee wronge
Any of thy fellows here?
Or is any of thy good friends dead,
That thou shedst manye a tearre?

Or, if it be my head bookes-man,
Agrieved he shal bee:
For no man here within my howse,
Shall doe wrong unto thee.

O, it is not your head bookes-man,
Nor none of his degree:
But, on to-morrow ere it be noone,
All deemed to die are yee.

And of that bethank your head steward,
And thank your gay ladie.
If this be true, my little foot-page,
The heyre of my land thoust bee.

If it be not true, my dear master,
No good death let me die.
If it be not true, thou little foot-page,
A dead corse shalt thou lie.

O call now downe my faire ladie,
O call her downe to mee:
And tell my ladye gay how sicke,
And like to die I bee.

Downe then came his ladye faire,
All clad in purple and pall:
The rings that were in her fingers,
Cast light thorrow the hall.

What is your will, my owne wed-lord?
What is your will with mee?
O see, my ladye deere, how sicke,
And like to die I bee.

And thou be sicke, my own wed-lord,
Soo sore it grieveth me:
But my five maydens and myselfe
W'ilf ' watch thy' bedde for thee.

And at the waking of your first sleepe,
We will a holt drinke make:
And at the waking of your ' next' sleepe,
Your sorowes we will shike.

He put a silk cote on his backe,
And mail of manye a fold:
And hee putt a Steele cap on his head,
Was gilt with good red gold.

He layd a bright brownw sword by his side,
And another at his feete:
"And twentye good knights he placed at hand,
To watch him in his sleepe."

And about the middle time of the night,
Came twentye-four traitours inn:
Sir Giles he was the foremost man,
The leader of that ginn.
Old Robin with his bright browne sword,
Sir Gyles hied soon did winne:
And scant of all those twenty-four,
Went out one quick agen.

None save only a little foot-page,
Crept forth to a window of stone:
And he had two armes when he came in,
And he went back with one.

Upp then came that ladie gaye
With torches burning bright:
She thought to have brought Sir Gyles a drinke,
But she found her owne wedd knight.

The first thinge that she stumbled on
It was Sir Gyles his foote:
Sayes, Ever alacke, and woe is mee!
Here lyes my sweete hart-roote.

The next thinge that she stumbled on
It was Sir Gyles his heade:
Sayes, Ever, alacke, and woe is mee!
Heree lyes my true love deade.

Hee cutt the pappes beside her brest,
And did her body spille;
He cutt the eares beside her heade,
And bade her love her fill.

He called then up his little foot-page,
And made him there his heyre;
And sayd, henceforth my worldlye goodes
And countrye I forsweare.

He shope the crosse on his right shoulder,
Of the white ' cloth' and the redde *;
And went into the holy land,
Whereas Christ was quicke and dead.

* * * In the foregoing piece, Giles, steward to a rich old merchant trading to Portugal, is qualified with the title of Sir, not as being a knight, but rather, I conceive, as having received an inferior order of priesthood.

IX.

CHILD WATERS.

Child is frequently used by our old writers, as a Title. It is repeatedly given to Prince Arthur in the " Faerie Queen:" and the son of a king is in the same poem called " Child Tristram." [B. S. c. 11. st. 8. 13.—B. 6. 6. 2. st. 36.—Ibid. c. 8. st. 15.] In an old ballad quoted in "Shakespeare's King Lear," the hero of Ariosto is called Child Roland. Mr. Theobald supposes this use of the word was received along with their romances from the Spaniards, with whom Infantes signifies a " Prince." A more eminent critic tells us, that "in the old times of chivalry, the noble youth, who were candidates for knighthood, during the time of their probation were called Infans, Varlets, Damayets, Bacheliers. The most noble of the youth were particularly called Infans." [Vid. Warh. Shakesp.] A late commentator on Spenser observes, that the Saxon word cnikes knight, signifies also a " Child." [See Upton's Gloss, to the F. Q.]

The Editor's folio MS. whence the following piece is taken (with some corrections), affords several other ballads, wherein the word Child occurs as a title: but in none of these it signifies " Prince." See the song intituled Gill Morrice, in this volume.

It ought to be observed, that the word Child or Childe is still used in North Britain to denominate a Man, commonly with some contemptuous character affixed to him, but sometimes to denote Man in general.

Childe Waters in his stable stooed
And stroak his milke white steede:
To him a faire yonge ladye came
As ever were womans weede.

Sayes, Christ you save, good Childe Waters ;
Sayes, Christ you save, and see:
My girdle of gold that was too longe,
Is now too short for mee.
If you will my foot-page be, Ellèn,
As you doe tell to mee;
Then you must cut your gowne of greene,
An inch above your knee:
40
Soe must you doe your yellowe lockes,
An inch above your ee;
You must tell no man what is my name;
My foot-page then you shall see.
Shee, all the long day Child Waters rode,
Ran barefoote by his side;
Yet he was never soe courteoue a knighte,
To say, Ellèn, will you ryde?
Shee, all the long day Child Waters rode,
Ran barefoote thorow the broome;
Yet he was never soe courteoue a knighte,
To say, put on your shoon.
Ride softlye, shee sayd, O Childe Waters,
Why doe you ryde soe fast?
The childe, which is no mans but thine,
My bodye itt will brast.
Hee sayd, seest thou yonder water, Ellèn,
That flows from banke to brimmee.—
I trust to God, O Child Waters,
You never will see* mee swimme.
But when shee came to the waters side,
Shee sayled to the chinnee:
Except the Lord of heaven be my speed,
Now must I learne to swimme.
The salt waters bare up her clothes;
Our Ladye bare upp her chinnee:
Childe Waters was a woé man, good Lord,
To see faire Ellèn swimme.
And when shee over the water was,
Shee then came to his knee:
He said, Come hithe, thou faire Ellèn,
Loo yonder what I see.
Seest thou not yonder hall, Ellèn?
Of reed gold shines the yate:
Of twenty foure faire ladyes there,
The fairest is my mate.
Seest thou not yonder hall, Ellèn?
Of reed gold shines the towre:
There are twenty four faire ladyes there,
The fairest is my paramoure.
I see the hall now, Child Waters,
Of reed gold shines the yate:
God give you good now of yourselfe,
And of your worthye mate.
I see the hall now, Child Waters,
Of reed golde shines the towre:
God give you good now of yourselfe,
And of your paramoure.
There twenty four fayre ladyes were
A playing att the ball:
And Ellèn the fairest ladye there,
Must bring his steed to the stall.
There twenty four fayre ladyes were
A playinge at the chesse;
And Ellèn the fairest ladye there,
Must bring his horse to gresse.
And then bespoke Child Waters sister,
These were the words said shee:
You have the prettiest foot-page, brother:
That ever I saw with mine ee.
But that his bellye it is soe bigg,
His girdle goes wondrous high:
And let him, I pray you, Childe Waters,
Goe into the chamber with mee.
It is not fit for a little foot-page,
That has run throughe mosse and myre,
To go into the chamber with any ladye,
That weares soe riché attyre.
It is more meete for a little foot-page,
That has run throughe mosse and myre,
To take his supper upon his knee,
And sitt downe by the kitchen fyer.
But when they had supped every one,
To bedd they tooke theyr waye:
He sayd, come hithe, my little foot-page,
And bearken what I saye.
Goe thee downe into yonder towne,
And low into the street;
The fairest ladye that thou can finde,
Hyer in mine armes to sleepe,
And take her up in thine armes twayne.
For filinge* of her feete.
Ellen is gone into the towne,
And low into the streete:
The fairest ladye that shee cold find,
Shee hyred in his armes to sleepe;
And tooke her up in her armes twayne,
For filing of her feete.
I pray you nowe, good Childe Watèrs,
Let mee lye at your bedds feete;
For there is noe place about this house,
Where I may 'saye† a sleepe.
'He gave her leave, and faire Ellèn
'Down at his beds feet lay:'
This done the nighte drove on apace,
And when it was neare the daye,
Hee sayd, Rise up, my little foot-page,
Give my steede corne and haye;
And soe doe thou the good blacke oates,
To carry mee better apace.
Up then rose the faire Ellèn,
And gave his steede corne and hay;
And soe shee did the good blacke oates,
To carry him the better apace.
Shee leaned her backe to the manger side,
And grievouslye did groane:
She leaned her back to the manger side,
And there shee made her moane.

* i. e. defiling. See Warton's Observ. vol. II. p. 158.
† i. e. essay, attempt.
And that beheard his mother deere, 150
Shee heard her there monand*. She sayd, Rise up, thou Childre Watiers, 155
I think thee a cursed man.

For in thy stable is a ghost, Or else some woman labours of childre Shee is soe woe-begone,
That grievouslye doth grone: Shew she rose Childre Waters soon, Up then rose Childre Waters soon,
And did on her shirt of alke, And did on her shirt of alke; And then he put on his other clothes,
And then he put on his other clothes, On his body as white as milke. On his body as white as milke.

And when he came to the stable dore, Full still there he did stand,
That hee mighte hear his fayre Ellên, Howe shee made her monand.

She sayd, Lullabye, mine owne deere child, Lullabye, dere child, dere;
I wold thy father were a king, I wold thy father were a king,
Thy mother layd on a biere. Thy mother layd on a biere.

Peace now, hee said, good faire Ellên, Peace now, hee said, good faire Ellên,
Be of good cheere, I pray; Be of good cheere, I pray;
And the bridal and the churching both And the bridal and the churching both Shall bee upon one day. Shall bee upon one day.

PHILLIDA AND CORYDON.

This Sonnet is given from a small quarto MS. in the Editor's possession, written in the time of Queen Elizabeth. Another Copy of it, containing some variations, is reprinted in the Museus Library, p. 295, from an ancient miscellany, intitled England's Heilicon, 1600, 4to. The author was Nicholas Breton, a writer of some fame in the reign of Elizabeth; who also published an interlude intitled "An old man's lesson and a young man's love," 4to. and many other little pieces in prose and verse, the titles of which may be seen in Winstanley, Ames' Typog, and Osborne's Harl. Catalog. &c.—He is mentioned with great respect by Meres, in his second part of "Wit's Commonwealth," 1598, p. 283, and is alluded to in Beaumont and Fletcher's "Scornful Lady," Act 2. and again in "Wit without Money," Act 3.—See Whalley's Ben Jona, vol. III. p. 103. The present Edition is improved by a copy in "England's Heilicon," vol. III, edit. 1614, 8vo.

In the merrie moneth of Maye, In a morne by break of daye, When anon by a wood side, Where as Maye was in his pride, Much adoie there was, god wot; He wold love, and she wold not. She sayde, never man was trewe; He sayes, none was false to you.

In the merrie moneth of Maye, In a morne by break of daye, When anon by a wood side, Where as Maye was in his pride, Much adoie there was, god wot; He wold love, and she wold not. She sayde, never man was trewe; He sayes, none was false to you.
He sayde, hee had lورد his longe:
She sayes, love should have no wronge.
Corydon wold kisse her then:
She sayes, maydes must kisse no men,
Tyll they doe for good and all:
When she made the shepperde call:
All the heavens to wytynes true:
Never loved a true youth.

Then with manie a prettie othe, Yea and nay, and faith and trothe;
Suche as seelie shepperdes use
When they will not love abuse;

Love, that had bene long deluded,
Was with kisses sweete concluded;
And Phyllida with garlands gaye
Was made the lady of the Maye.

†† The foregoing little pastoral of "Phyllida and Corydon" is one of the songs in "The Honourable Entertainment gien to the Queenes Majestie in Progressse at Elvedham in Hampshire, by the R. H. the Earle of Hersford, 1591," 4to. [Printed by Wolfe. No name of author.] See in that pamphlet,
"The thirde daies Etertainment."

"On Wednesday morning about 9 o'clock, as her Majesty opened a casement of her gallery window, ther were 3 excellent musitians, who being disguised in auncient country attire, did greete her with a pleasant song of "Corydon and Phyllida," made in 3 parts of purpose. The song, as well for the worth of the dittie, as the aptnesse of the note thereto applied, it pleased her Highnesse after it had been once sung to command it againe, and highly to grace it with her cheerefull acceptance and commendation.

"The Plowman's Song."
"In the merrie month of Maye, &c."

The splendour and magnificence of Elizabeth's reign is no where more strongly painted than in these little diaries of some of her summer excursions to the houses of her nobility; nor could a more acceptable present be given to the world, than a reproduction of the following, intitled, "The Progresses and Public Processions of Queen Elizabeth, &c."

 Since the above was written, the Public hath been gratified with a most complete work on the foregoing subject, intitled, "The Progresses and Public Processions of Queen Elizabeth, &c."

Ver. 4, the wode, MS.
* Sic in MS. i.e. moaning, bemoaning, &c.
XI.

LITTLE MUSGRAVE AND LADY BARNARD.

This ballad is ancient, and has been popular; we find it quoted in many old plays. See Beaum. and Fletcher’s Knight of the Burning Pestle, 4to, 1613, Act 5. The Variety, a comedy, 12mo. 1649, Act 4, &c. In Sir William Davenant’s play, “The Witts,” Act 3, a gallant thus boasts of himself:

“Limerb and sound! besides I sing Musgrave,
And for Chevy-chace no lark comes near me.”

In the Pepys Collection, vol. III. p. 314, is an imitation of this old song, in 33 stanzas, by a more modern pen, with many alterations, but evidently for the worse.

This is given from an old printed copy in the British Museum, with corrections; some of which are from a fragment in the Editor’s folio MS. It is also printed in Dryden’s Collection of Miscellaneous Poems.

As it fell out on a highe holye daye,
As many bee in the yeares,
When yong men and maides together do goe,
Their masses and mattins to heare,

Little Musgrave came to the church door,
The priest was at the mass;
But he had more mind of the fine women,
Then he had of our Ladys grace.

And some of them were clad in greene,
And others were clad in pail;
And then came in my Lord Barnardes wife,
The fairest among them all.

Shee cast an eye on little Musgrave
As bright as the summer sunne:
O then bethought him little Musgrave,
This ladys heart I have wonne.

Quoth she, I have loved thee, little Musgrave,
Fulle long and manye a daye.
So have I loved you, ladye faire,
Yet word I never durst saye.

I have a bowe at Bucklesford-Bury*,
Full daintilye bedight,
If thoul wend whither, my little Musgrave,
Thoust lig in mine armes all night.

Quoth bee, I thanke yee, ladye faire,
This kindness yee shew to mee;
And whether it be to my weale or woe,
This night will I lig with thee.

All this beheard a little foot-page,
By his ladys coach as he ranne;
Quoth he, thoughe I am my ladys page,
Yet Ime my Lord Barnardes manne.

My Lord Barnard shall knowe of this,
Although I lose a limbe.
And ever whereas the bridges were broke,
He layd him downe to swimme.

Asleep or awake, thou Lord Barnard,
As thou art a man of life,
Lo! this same night at Bucklesford-Bury
Little Musgrave’s in bed with thy wife.

If it be trow, thou litle foote-page,
This tale thou hast told to mee,
Then all my lands in Bucklesford-Bury
I freelye will give to thee.

But and it be a lye, thou litle foot-page,
This tale thou hast told to mee,
On the highest tree in Bucklesford-Bury
All hanged shal about thee.

Rise up, rise up, my merry men all,
And saddle my good steede;
This night must I to Bucklesford-Bury;
God wott, I had never more neede.

Then some they whistled, and some they sang,
And some did loudlye saye,
Whenever Lord Barnardes hore it blewe,
awaye, Musgrave, awaye.

Methinks I heare the throstle cocke,
Methinks I heare the jay,
Methinks I heare Lord Barnards hore;
I would I were awaye.

Lye still, lye still, thou little Musgrave,
And huggle me from the cold;
For it is but some shephardes boye
A whistling his sheepe to the fold.

Is not thy hawe upon the pearche,
Thy horse eating corne and haye?
And thou a gay lady within thine armes:
And wouldst thou be awaye?

By this Lord Barnard was come to the dore,
And lighted upon a stone:
And he pulled out three silver keyes,
And opened the dores ech one.

He lifted up the coverlett,
He lifted up the sheete;
How now, how now, thou little Musgrave,
Dost find my gaye ladye sweete?

I find her sweete, quoth little Musgrave,
The more is my griefe and paine;
Ie gladlye give three hundred poundes
That I were on yonder plaine.

* Bucklesford-herry, fol. MS.
Arise, arise, thou little Musgrave,
And put thy cloathes nowe on,
It shall never be said in my countree,
That I killed a naked man.

I have two swordes in one scabbirde,
Full deare they cost my purse;
And thou shalt have the best of them,
And I will have the worse.

The first stroke that little Musgrave strucke,
He hurt Lord Barnard sore;
The next stroke that Lord Barnard strucke,
Little Musgrave never strucke more.

With that bespake the ladye faire,
In bed whereas she laye,
Althought thou art dead, my little Musgrave, 95
Yet for the I will praye:

And wishe well to thy soule will I,
So long as I have life;
So will I not do for thee, Barnard,
Though I am thy wedded wife. 100

He cut her pappes from off her brest;
Great pitye it was to see
The drops of this fair ladyes blood
Run trickling downe her knee.

Wo worth, wo worth ye, my merrye men all, 105
You never were borne for my goode:
Why did you not offer to stay my hande,
When you sawe me wax so woode!

For I have slaine the fairest sir knighte,
That ever rode on a steede;
So have I done the fairest lady,
That ever ware womans weede.

A grave, a grave, Lord Barnard cryde,
To putt these lovers in;
But lay my ladye o' the upper hande,
For shee comes o' the better kin.

†† That the more modern copy is to be dated about the middle of the last century, will be readily conceived from the tenor of the concluding stanzas, viz.

"This sad Mischief by Lust was wrought;
Then let us call for Grace
That we may shun the wicked vice,
And fly from Sin a-page."
This ballad (given from an old black-letter Copy, with some corrections) was popular in the time of Queen Elizabeth, being usually printed with her picture before it, as Hearne informs us in his preface to "Gul. Neubrig, Hist. Oxon, 1719, 8vo, vol. I. p. lxx;" It is quoted in Fletcher's comedy of the Pilgrim, Act 4, sc. 1.

THE KNIGHT, AND SHEPHERD'S DAUGHTER.

He hath not robbed mee, my leige, 45
Of purple nor of pall:
But he hath gotten my maiden head,
Which grieves mee worst of all.

Now if he be a batchelor,
His bodye Ile give to thee;
But if he be a married man,
High hanged he shall bee.

He called downe his merrye men all,
By one, by two, by three;
Sir William used to bee the first.
But nowe the last came bee.

He brought her downe full fortye pounde,
Tyed up withinne a glove:
Faire maide, Ile give the same to thee;
Go, seeke thee another love.

O Ile have none of your gold, she sayde,
Nor Ile have none of your ree;
But your faire bodye I must have,
The king hath granted mee.

Sir William ranne and fetchd her then
Five hundred pound in goldie,
Saying, faire maide, take this to thee,
Thy fault will never be tolde.

Tis not the gold that shall mee tempt,
These words then answered shee,
But your own bodye I must have,
The king hath granted mee.

Would I had dranke the water cleare,
When I did drinke the wine,
Rather than any shephers brat
Shold bee a ladye of mine!

Would I had drank the puddle foule,
When I did drinke the ale,
Rather than ever a shepherds brat
Shold tell me such a tale!

A shepherds brat even as I was,
You mote have let me bee,
I never had come othe kings faire courte,
To crave any love of thee.

He seth her on a milk-white steede,
And himselfe upon a graye;
He hung a bugle about his necke,
And seethey rode awaye.

Ver. 50, His bodye Ile give to thee.] This was agreeable to the feudal customs; The lord had a right to give a wife to his vassals. See Shakspere's "All's well, that ends well."
LORD THOMAS AND FAIR ELINOR.

But when they came unto the place,
Where marriage-rites were done,
She proved herself a dukes daughter,
And he but a squire some.

Now marry me, or not, sir knight,
Your pleasure shall be free:
If you make me ladie of one good towne,
He make you lord of three.

Ah! cursed be the gold, he sayd,
If thou hast not been trewe,
I shold have forsaken my sweet love,
And have changed her for a newe.

And now their hearts being linked fast,
They joyned hand in hande:
Thus he had both purse, and person too,
And all at his commande.

XIV.

THE SHEPHERDS ADDRESS TO HIS MUSE.

This Poem, originally printed from the small MS volume mentioned above in No. X. has been improved by a more perfect copy in "England's Helicon," where the author is discovered to be N. Breton.

Good Muse, rocke me aslepe
With some sweete harmony:
This wearey eyes is not to kepe
Thy wary company.

Sweete Love, begun a while,
Thou seest my heavines:
Beautie is borne but to beguyle
My harte of happines.

See howe my little flocke,
That lovde to feede on highe,
Doe headlonge tumble downe the rocke,
And in the valley dye.

The bushes and the trees,
That were so freshe and greene,
Doe all their deintie colors leese,
And not a leafe is seen.

The blacke birdie and the thrushe,
That made the woodes to ringe,
With all the rest, are now at huse,
And not a note they singe.

Swete Philomele, the birde
That hath the heavenly throte,
Doth nowe, alas! not once afforde
Recordinge of a note.

The flowers have had a frost,
The herbes have loste their savoure;
And Phillida the faire hath lost
"For me her wasted favoure.

Thus all these careful sights
So kill me in conceit:
That now to hope upon delights,
It is but meere deceite.

And therefore, my sweete muse,
That knovest what helpe is best,
Doe nowe thy hevenlie conninge use
To sett my harte at rest:

And in a dreame bewraie
What fate shal be my frende;
Whether my life shall still decaye,
Or when my sorrowes ende.

XV.

LORD THOMAS AND FAIR ELINOR,

--- is given (with corrections) from an ancient copy in black letter, in the Pepys collection, intitled, "A tragical ballad on the unfortunate love of Lord Thomas and fair Ellinor, together with the downfall of the browne girl."—In the same collection may be seen an attempt to modernize this old song, and reduce it to a different measure: a proof of its popularity.

Lord Thomas he was a bold forrrester,
And a chaser of the kings deere;
Faire Ellinor was a fine woman,
And Lord Thomas he loved his deare.

Come riddle my riddle, dear mother, he sayd,
And riddle us both as one;
Whether I shall marry with faire Ellinor,
And let the browne girl alone?

The browne girl she has got houses and lands,
Faire Ellinor she has got none,
And therefore I charge thee on my blessing,
To bring me the browne girl home.

And as it befelle on a high holidaye,
As many there are beside,
Lord Thomas he went to faire Ellinör,
That should have been her bride.
And when he came to faire Ellinors bower,
He knocked there at the ring,
And who was so ready as faire Ellinor,
To lett Lord Thomas within. 20

What newes, what newes, Lord Thomas, she sayd? 25
What newes dost thou bring to mee?
I am come to bid thee to my wedding,
And that is bad news for thee.

O God forbid, Lord Thomas she sayd,
That such a thing should be done;
I thought to have been the bride my selfe,
And thou to have been the bridgrome.

Come riddle my riddle, dear mother, she sayd,
And riddle it all in one;
Whether I shall goe to Lord Thomas his wedding,
Or whether shall tarry at home?

There are manye that are your friends, daughter,
And manye a one your foe,
Therefore I charge you on my blessing,
To Lord Thomas his wedding don't goe.

There are manye that are your friends, mother;
But were every one your foe,
Bettie me life, bettie me death,
To Lord Thomas his wedding I'll goe.

She cloathed herself in gallant attire,
And her merrye men all in greene;
And as they rid through every towne,
They took her to be some queene.

But when she came to Lord Thomas his gate, 45
She knocked there at the ring;
And who was so ready as Lord Thomàs,
To lett faire Ellinor in.

Is this your bride, fair Ellinor sayd?
Methinks she looks wonderous browne;
Thou mightest have had as faire a woman,
As ever trod on the grounde.

Despise her not, fair Ellin, he sayd,
Despise her not unto mee;
For better I love thy little fingèr,
Than all her whole bodéè.

This browne bride had a little penknife,
That was both long and sharpe,
And betwixt the short ribs and the long,
She prick'd faire Ellinor's harte.

O Christ thee save, Lord Thomas, hee sayd,
Methinks thou lookst wondrous wan;
Thou usedst to look with as fresh a colour,
As ever the sun shone on.

Oh, art thou blind, Lord Thomas? she sayd,
Or canst thou not very well see?
Oh! dost thou not see my owne hearts bloode
Run trickling down my knee.

Lord Thomas he had a sword by his side;
As he walked about the halle,
He cut off his brides head from her shoulders,
And threw it against the walle.

He set the hilte against the grounde,
And the point against his harte.
There never three lovers together did meete,
That sooner againe did parte.

* * * The reader will find a Scottish song on a similar subject to this, towards the end of this volume, intituled, "Lord Thomas and Lady Annet."

XVI.

CUPID AND CAMPASPE.

This elegant little sonnet is found in the third act of an old play, intituled, "Alexander and Campaspe;"
written by John Litle, a celebrated writer in the time of Queen Elizabeth. That play was first printed in 1591: but this copy is given from a later edition.

Cupid and my Campaspe playd
At cardes for kisses; Cupid payd:

He stakes his quiver, bow and arrows,
His mothers doves, and teame of sparrows;
Loses them too; then down he throwes
The coral of his lippe, the rose
Growing on's check (but none knows how),
With these, the crystal of his browe,
And then the dimple of his chinne;
All these did my Campaspe winne.
At last he set her both his eyes,
She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
O Love! has she done this to thee?
What shall, alas! become of mee?
is given from a written copy, containing some improvements (perhaps modern ones), upon the popular ballad, intitled, "The famous flower of Serving-men; or the Lady turned Serving-man,"

You beastous ladies, great and small,
I write unto one and all,
Whereby that you may understand
What I have suffered in the land.

I was by birth a lady faire,
An ancient barons only heire,
And when my good old father dyed,
Then I became a young knightes bride.

And there my love built me a bower,
Bedeck'd with many a fragrant flower;
A braver bower you ne'er did see
Then my true love did build for mee.

And there I livde a ladye gay,
Till fortune wrought our loves decay;
For there came foes so fierce a band,
That soon they over-run the land.

They came upon us in the night,
And brest my bower, and slew my knight;
And trembling hid in mans array
I scant with life escap'd away.

In the midst of this extremitie,
My servants all did from me flee:
Thus was I left myself alone,
With heart more cold than any stone.

Yet though my heart was full of care,
Heaven would not suffer me to dispaire,
Wherefore in haste I chang'd my name
From fair Elise, to sweet William:

And therewithall I cut my haire,
Resolv'd my man's attire to weare;
And in my beaver, hose and band,
I travell'd far through many a land.

At length all wearied with my toil,
I sate me down to rest awhile;
My heart it was so fill'd with woe,
That downe my cheeke the teares did flow.

It chanc'd the king of that same place
With all his lords a hunting was,
And seeing me wepe, upon the same
Askt who I was, and whence I came.

Then to his grace I did replye,
I am a poore and friendlesse boye,
Though nobly borne, nowe forc'd to bee
A serving-man of lowe degree.

Stand up, faire youth, the king reply'd,
For the a service I'll provyde;
But tell me first what thou canst do;
Thou shalt be fitted thereunto.
The king, who had a hunting gone,
Grew weary of his sport anon,
And leaving all his gallant traine,
Turn'd on the sudden home againe:
And when he reach'd his stately eye tower, 105
Hearing one sing within his bower,
He stoop to listen, and to see
Who sung there so melodiously.
Thus heard he ev'ry word I said,
And saw the pearlie teares I shed,
And found to his amazenement there,
Sweete William was a ladye faire.

Then stepping in, Faire ladye rise,
And dry, said he, those lovelye eyes,
For I have heard thy mournful tale,
The which shall turn to thy availe.
A crimson dye my face creespred,
I blusht for shamee, and hung my head,
To find my sex and story knowne,
When as I thought I was alone. 120
But to be briefe, his royall grace
Grew so enamour'd of my face,
The richest gifts he proffered mee,
His mistresse if that I would bee.
Ah! no, my liege, I firmlye sayd,
I'll rather in my grave be layd,
And though your grace hath won my heart,
I ne'er will act soe base a part.
Faire ladye, pardon me, sayd bee,
Thy virtue shall rewarded bee,
And since it is soe fairlye tryde
Thou shaltt become royl my bride.
Then strait to end his amorous strife,
He tooke sweet William to his wife,
The like before was never seene,
A serving-man became a queen.

**

XVIII.

GIL MOURICE.

A SCOTTISH BALLAD.

The following piece hath run through two editions in Scotland: the second was printed at Glasgow in 1755, 8vo. Prefixed to them both is an advertisement, setting forth that the preservation of this poem was owing "to a lady, who favoured the printers with a copy, as it was carefully collected from the mouths of old women and nurses:" and "any reader that can render it more correct or complete," is desired to oblige the public with such improvements. In consequence of this advertisement, sixteen additional verses have been produced and handed about in manuscript, which are here inserted in their proper places: (these are from verse 109 to verse 121, and from verse 124 to verse 129, but are perhaps, after all, only an ingenious interpolation.)

As this poem lays claim to a pretty high antiquity, we have assigned it a place among our early pieces: though, after all, there is reason to believe it has received very considerable modern improvements: for in the Editor's ancient MS collection is a very old imperfect copy of the same ballad: wherein though the leading features of the story are the same, yet the colouring here is so much improved and heightened, and so many additional strokes are thrown in, that it is evident the whole has undergone a revision.

N. B. The Editor's MS. instead of "Lord Barnard," has "John Stewart;" and instead of "Gil Morrice," "Child Maurice," which last is probably the original title. See above, p. 209.

Gil Morrice was an erës son,
His name it waxed wide;
It was nae for his great riches,
Nor zet his mickle pride;
Bot it was for a lady gay,
That livd on Carron side.

Quhair sall I get a bonny boy,
That will win hose and shoen;
That will gae to Lord Barnards ha',
And bid his lady cum?
And ze maun rin my errand, Willie;
And ze may rin wi' pride;
Quhen other boys gae on their foot,
On horse-back ze shall ride.

O no! Oh no! my master dear!
I dare nae for my life;
I'll no gae to the baule barons,
For to triest furth his wife.
My bird Willie, my boy Willie;
My dear Willie, he sayd:
How can ze strive against the stream?
For I sall be obeyd.

Bot, O my master dear! he cryd,
In gree wave ze're zour laun;
Gi owre sic thochtis, I walde ze rede,
For fear ze should be tain.
Haste, haste, I say, gae to the ha',
Bid hir cum here wi' speid;
If ze refuse my heigh command,
I'll gar zour body bleid.

Gae bid hir take this gyt mantel,
'Tis a' gowd bot the hem;
Bid hir cum to the gude gree wode,
And bring nane bot hir laun;
And there it is, a silken sarke,
Hir ain hand sewd the sleeve;
And bid hir cum to Gill Morrice,
Spier nae baule barons leave,

Ver. 11, something seems wanting here. V. 32, and 69, perhaps, 'bout the hem.
Yes, I will gae zour black errand,
Though it be to zour cost;
40
Sen ze by me will nae be warn'd,
In it ze saill find frost.
The baron he is a man of might,
He nair could hide to taunt,
45
As ze will see before its nicht,
How sma' ze hae to vaunt.

And sen I maun zour errand rin
Sae sair against my will;
I'se mak a vow and kep it trow,
It sall be done for ill.
50
And quhen he came to broken brigue,
He bent his bow and swam;
And quhen he came to grass growing,
Set down his feet and ran.

And quhen he came to Barnards ha',
Would neither chap nor ca';
Bot set his bent bow to his breist,
And lightly lap the wa'.
55
He wald sae tell the man his errand,
Though he stude at the gait;
Bot straith into the ha' he cam,
Qhair they were set at meit.

Hail! hail! my gentle sire and dame!
My message winna waite;
Dame, ze maun to the gude grene wod
Before that it be late.
60
Ze're bidden tak this gay mantel,
Tis a' gowd bot the hem:
Zou maun gae to the gude grene wode,
Ev'n by your sel alane.

And thare it is, a silken sarke,
Your ain hand sewd the sleive;
Ze maun gae speik to Gill Morrice:
Speir nae baud barons leave.
65
The lady stamped wi' her foot,
And winked wi' her e'e;
Bot a' that she could say or do,
Forbidden he wad nae bee.

Its surely to my bow'r-womân;
It neir could be to me.
80
I brocht it to Lord Barnards lady;
I trow that ze be she.
Then up and spack the wylie nurse,
(The bairn upon her knee)
If it be cum frae Gill Morrice,
It's dei're welcum to mee.

Ze leid, ze leid, ze filthy nurse,
Sae loud I heird ze lee;
I brocht it to Lord Barnards lady;
I trow ze be nae shee.
90
Then up and spack the baud baron,
An angry man was hae;
He's tain the table wi' his foot,
Sae has he wi' his knee;
Till siller cup and ' mazer *' dish
In finders he gard free.

Gae bring a robe of zour cliding,
That hings upon the pin;
And I'll gae to the gude grene wode,
And speik wi' zour lemnân.
100
O bide at hame, now Lord Barnard,
I warte ze be hame at lume;
Neir wyte a man for violence,
That neir wate ze wi' lane.

Gill Morrice state in gude grene wode,
He whistled and he sang:
O what mean a' the folk coming,
My mother turns lang.
105
His hair was like the thread of gold,
Drawne frae Minerva's loome:
His lips like roses drapping dew,
His breath was a' perfume.

His brow was like the mountain snae
Gilt by the morning beam:
His cheeks like living roses glow:
His e'en like azure stream.
110
The boy was clad in robes of grace,
Sweete as the infant spring:
And like the mavis on the bush,
He gart the vallies ring.

The baron came to the grene wode,
Wi' mickle dule and care,
And there he first spied Gill Morrice.
Kameing his zellow hair.
115
That sweetly wawd around his face,
That face beyond compare:
He sang sae sweet it might dispel
A' rage but fell despair.

Nae wonder, nae wonder, Gill Morrice,
My lady loed thee weel,
The fairest part of my bodie
Is blacker than thy heel.
120
Zet neir the less now, Gill Morrice,
For a' thy great beautie,
Ze's rew the day ze eir was born;
That head sall gae wi' me.

Now he has drawn his trusty brand,
And sailt on the strae;
And thro' Gill Morrice' fair body
He's gar cauld iron gae.
125
And he has tain Gill Morrice' head
And set it on a speir;
The meanest man in a' his train
Has gotten that head to bear.

And he has tain Gill Morrice up,
Laid him across his steid,
And brocht him to his painted bowr,
And laid him on a bed.
130
The lady sat on castil wa',
Beheld baith dale and doun;
And there she saw Gill Morrice' head
Cum trailing to the toun.

Far better I loe that bludy head,
Both and that zellow hair,
Than lord Barnard, and a' his lands,
As they lig here and thair.
135

Ver. 58. Could this be the wall of the castle? V. 68. Perhaps, had I say 1 heire.
* i.e. a drinking cup of maple: other Edit. read esar.

Ver. 128. So Milton,
Vernal delight and joy; able to drive
All sadness but despair. B. li. v. 135.
And she has tain her Gill Morice,
And kissed baith mouth and chin:
I was once as low of Gill Morice,
As the hip is o' the stean.

I got ze in my father's house,
Wi' mickle sin and shame;
I brocht thee up in gude grene wode,
Under the heavy rain.

Oft have I by thy cradle sitten,
And fondly seen thee sleip;
But now I gae about thy grave,
The saut tears for to weip.

And syne she kissed his bluidy cheik,
And syne his bluidy chin:
O better I loe my Gill Morice
Than a' my kith and kin!

Away, away, ze ill woman,
And an il deith maist ze dee:
Gin I had kent he'd bin zour son,
He'd neir bin slain for mee.

Obraid me not, my Lord Barnard!
Obraid me not for shame!
Wi' that saim speir 0 pierce my heart!
And put me out o' pain.

Since nothing hot Gill Morice head
Thy jelous rage could quell,
Let that saim hand now tak hir life,
That neir to thee did ill.

To me nce after days nor nichts
Will eir be saft or kind;
I'll fill the air with heavy sighs,
And greet till I am blind.

Enough of blood by me's bin spilt,
Seek not zour death frae mee;
I rather lourd it had been my sel
Than eather him or thee.

With waefo wae I hear zour plaint;
Sair, sair I rew the deid,
That eir this cursed hand of mine
Had gard his body bleid.

Dry up zour tears, my winsome dame,
Ze neir can heal the wound;
Ze see his head upon the speir,
His heart's blude on the ground.

I curse the hand that did the deid,
The heart that thocht the ill;
The feet that bore me wi' silk speid,
The comely zouth to kill.
I'll ay lament for Gill Morice,
As gin he were mine ain;
I'll neir forget the dreiry day
On which the zouth was slain.

" This little pathetic tale suggested the plot of the tragedy of "Douglas."

Since it was first printed, the Editor has been assured that the foregoing ballad is still current in many parts of Scotland, where the hero is universally known by the name of "Child Maurice," pronounced by the common people Child or Cheild; which occasioned the mistake. It may be proper to mention, that other copies read ver. 110 thus:

"Shot frae the golden sun."
And ver. 116 as follows:
"His een like azure sheene."

---

THE END OF THE FIRST BOOK.

---

SERIES THE THIRD.

BOOK II.

---

I.

THE LEGEND OF SIR GUY

--- contains a short summary of the exploits of this famous champion, as recorded in the old story books; and is commonly intituled, "A pleasant song of the valiant deeds of chivalry achieved by that noble knight Sir Guy of Warwick, who, for the love of fair Phelis, became a hermit, and dyed in a cave of craggy rocke, a mile distant from Warwick."

The history of Sir Guy, though now very properly resigned to children, was once admired by all readers of wit and taste; for taste and wit had once their childhood. Although of English growth, it was early a favourite with other nations: it appeared in French in 1525; and is alluded to in the old Spanish romance Tirante et blanco, which, it is believed, was written not long after the year 1430. See advertisement to the French translation, 2 vols. 12mo.

The original whence all these stories are extracted is a very ancient romance in old English verse, which is quoted by Chaucer as a celebrated piece even in his time, (viz.)

"Men spoken of romances of price,
Of Horne childe and Ippotis,
Of Bevis, and Sir Guy, &c." R. of Thop.)
and was usually sung to the harp at Christmas dinners and braceales, as we learn from Puttenham's Art of Poetry, 4to. 1589.

This ancient romance is not wholly lost. An imperfect copy in black letter, "Imprinted at London," for William Copland," in 54 sheets 4to, without date, is still preserved among Mr. Garrick's collection of old plays. As a specimen of the poetry of this antique rhymer, take his description of the dragon mentioned in ver. 105 of the following ballad:

"A messenger came to the king,
Sy king, he sayd, lysten me now,
For bad tydings I bring you,
In Northumberlande there is no man,
But that they be slayne evrychone:
For there dare no man route,
By twenty myle rounde aboute,
For doubt of a fowle dragon,
That sleath men and beasts downe.
He is blacke as any cole
Rugged as a rough fole;
His bodye from the navill upwarde
No man may it pierce it is so harde;
His neck is great as any sumner;
He runneth as swifte as any distrere;
Pawes he hath as a lyon:
All that he toucheth he sleath dead downe.
Great winges he hath to flight,
That is no man that bare him might.
There may no man fight him agayne,
But he that sleath him certayne:
For a fowler beast then is he,
Ywis of none never heard ye."

Sir William Dugdale is of opinion that the story of Guy is not wholly apocryphal, though he acknowledges the monks have sounded out this praises too hyperbolically. In particular, he gives the duel fought with the Danish champion as a real historical truth, and fixes the date of it in the year 926, aet. Guy 47. See his Warwickshire.

The following is written upon the same plan as ballad V. Book I. but which is the original, and which the copy, cannot be decided. This song is ancient, as may be inferred from the idiom preserved in the margin, ver. 94. 102: and was once popular, as appears from Fletcher's Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act 2, sc. ult.

It is here published from an ancient MS copy in the Editor's old folio volume, collated with two printed ones, one of which is in black letter in the Pepys collection.

Was ever knight for ladies sake
Sce tost in love, as I Sir Guy
For Phelis fayre, that lady bright
As ever man beheld with eye?

She gave me leave myself to try,
The valiant knight with sheeld and speare,
Ere that her love shoule wold grant me;
Which made me venture far and neare.

Then proved I a baron bold,
In deeds of armes the doughtyeast knight
That in those dayes in England was,
With sworde and speare in field to fight.

An English man I was by birth:
In faith of Christ a christyan true:
The wicked laws of infidells
I sought by prowess to subdue.

Nine' hundred twenty yeere and odd
After our Saviour Christ his birth,
When King Athelstone wore the crowne,
I lived heere upon the earth.

Sometime I was of Warwickc e erle,
And, as I sayd, of very truth
A ladies love did me constraine
To seeke strange ventures in my youth.

To win me fame by feats of armes
In strange and sundry heathen lands;
Where I achieved for her sake
Right dangerous conquests with my hands.

For first I sayled to Normandye,
And there I stoutlye wan in fight
The emperours daughter of Almaine,
From manye a vallyant worthye knight.

Then passed I the seas to Greece
To helpe the emperour in his right;
Against the mightye souldans hoste
Of puissant Persians for to fight.

Where I did slay of Sarazen,
And heathen pagans, manye a man;
And slew the souldans cozen deere,
Who had to name doughtye Coldran.

Espeldered a famous knight
To death likewise I did pursue:
And Eelmanye King of Tyre alse,
Most terrible in fight to viewe,
I went into the souldans host,
Being thither on embassage sent,
And brought his head awaye with mee;
I having slaine him in his tent.

There was a dragon in that land
Most fiercelye mett mee by the waye
As hee a lyon did pursue,
Which I myselfe did alse slay.

Then soon I past the seas from Greece,
And came to Pavye land aright;
Where I the duke of Pavye killed,
His hainous treason to requite.
To England then I came with speede,
To wedd faire Phelis lady bright:
For love of whomse I travelled farr
To try my manhood and my sight.

But when I had espoused her,
I stayd with her but fortye dayes,
Ere that I left this ladye faire,
And went from her beyond the seas.

All cladd in gray, in pilgrim sort,
My voyance from her I did take Unto the blessed Holy-land,
For Jesus Christ my Saviour sakes.

Ver. 9, The proud Sir Guy, PC.
GUY AND AMARANT.

Where I Erle Jonas did redeeme,
And all his sonnes, which were fifteeene,
Who with the cruel Sarazens
In prison for long time had beene.

I slew the gyant Amarant
In battell fiercelye hand to hand:
And doughty Barknard killed I,
A treacherous knight of Payve land.

Then I to England came againe,
And here with Colbronde fell I fought:
An ugly gyant, which the Danes
Had for their champion hither brought.

I overcame him in the feild,
And slew him some right valiantlye;
Whereby this land I did redeeme
From Danish tribute utterlye.

And afterwards I offered upp
The use of weapons solemnlye
At Winchester, whereas I fought,
In sight of manye fair and nye.

But first, neare Winsor, I did slaye
A bore of passing might and strength;
Whose like in England never was
For hugenesse both in breith and length.

Some of his bones in Warwicke yet
Within the castle there doe lye:
One of his sheeld-bones to this day
Hangs in the citie of Coventry.

On Dunsmore heath I alsoe slewe
A monstrous wyld and cruel beast,
Calld the Dun-cow of Dunsmore heath;
Which manye people had opprest.

Some of her bones in Warwicke yet
Still for a monument doe lye;
And there exposed to lookers viewe
As wondrous strange, they may espye.

A dragon in Northumberland
I alsoe did in fight destroye,
Which did bothe man and beast oppresse,
And all the countrye sore annoye.

At length to Warwicke I did come,
Like pilgrim poore, and was not knowne;
And there I lived a hermitts life
A mile and more out of the towne.

Where with my hands I hewed a house
Out of a craggy rocke of stone;
And lived like a palmer poore
Within that cave myselfe alone:

And daylye came to begg my bread
Of Phelias att my castle gate;
Not knowne unto my loved wiffe,
Who daylye mourned for her mate.

Till att the last I fell sore sicke,
Yea sicke soe sore that I must dye;
I sent to her a ring of golde,
By which shee knew me presente.

Then shee repairing to the cave
Before that I gave up the ghost;
Herself clost up my dying eyes:
My Phelis faire, whom I lovde most.

Thus dreadful death did me arrest,
To bring my corpes unto the grave;
And like a palmer dyed I,
Wherby I sought my soule to save.

My body that endured this toyle,
Though now it be consumed to mold;
My statue fair engraven in stone,
In Warwicke still you may behold.

The Editor found this Poem in his ancient folio manuscript among the old ballads; he was desirous, therefore, that it should still accompany them; and as it is not altogether devoid of merit, its insertion here will be pardoned.

Although this piece seems not imperfect, there is reason to believe that it is only a part of a much larger poem, which contained the whole history of Sir Guy: for, upon comparing it with the common story book 12mo, we find the latter to be nothing more than this poem reduced to prose: which is only effected by now and then altering the rhyme, and throwing out some few of the poetical ornaments. The disguise is so slight, that it is an easy matter to pick complete stanzas in any page of that book.

Ver. 94, 102, doth lye, MS.

The author of this poem has shown some invention. Though he took the subject from the old romance quoted before, he has adorned it affresh, and made the story entirely his own.

Guy journeies towards that sanctified ground,
Whereas the Jewes fayre citye sometime stood,
Wherein our Saviours sacred head was crownd,
And where for sinfull man he shed his blood:
To see the sepulcher was his intent,
The tombe that Joseph unto Jesus lent.
With tedious miles he tyred his wearye feet,
And passed desert places full of danger,
At last with a most woeful wight * did meet,

* Erle Jonas, mentioned in the foregoing ballad.
A man that unto sorrow was no stranger:
For he had fifteen soones, made captives all
To slavish bondage, in extremest thrall.

A gyant called Amarant detaine them,
Whom noe man durst encounter for his strength:
Who in a castle, which he held, had chaine them: 15
Guy questions, where? and understandst at length
The place not far.—Lend me thy sword, quoth hee,
He lend my manhood all thy soones to free.

With that he goes, and lays upon the dore,
Like one that sayses, I must, and will come in: 20
The gyant never was soe rowes'd before:
For noe such knocking at his gate had bin:
Soe takes his keyses, and clubb, and cometh out.
Staring with trewe countenance about.

Sirra, quoth hee, what business hast thou heere? 25
Art come to feast the crowes about my walls?
Didst never heere, noe mansone can him cleere,
That in the compass of my furey falls:
For making me to take a porters paines,
With this same clubb I will dash out thy braines. 30

Gyant, quoth Guy, y'are quarrelsome I see,
Choller and you seem very neere of kin:
Most dangerous at the clubb belike you bee;
I have bin better armd, though noone goe thin;
But shew thou utmost hate, enlarge thy spight,
Keene is my weapon, and shall doe me right. 35

Soe draws his sword, salutes him with the same
About the head, the shoulders, and the side:
Whilst his erected clubb doth death proclaime,
Standinge with huge Colossus' spacious stride,
Putting such vigour to his knotty beame,
That like a furnace he did smoke extreme.

But on the ground he spent his strokes in vaine,
For Guy was nimble to avoyde them still,
And ever ere he had his clubb againe,
Did brush his plated coat against his will:
Att such advantage Guy wold never fayle,
To bang him soundlye in his coate of mayle.

Att last through thirst the gyant feeble grewe,
And sayd to Guy, As thou'rt of humane race, 45
Shew it in this, give nature wants their dewe,
Let me but goe, and drink in yonder place:
Thou canst not yeeld to 'me' a smaller thing,
Than to graunt life, thats given by the spring.

I graunt thee leave, quoth Guye, goe drink thy last, 55
Go pledge the dragon, and the salvage bone:
Succeed the tragedies that they have past,
But never thinke to taste cold water more:
Drinke deepe to death and unto him carcouse:
Bid him receive thee in his earthen house.

Soe to the spring he goes, and shakes his thirst;
Taking the water in extremely like
Some wracked shipp that on a rocke is burst,
Whose forced fulke against the stone does stryke;
Scooping it in soe fast with both his hands, 65
That Guy admiring to behold it stands.

Come on, quoth Guy, let us to worke againe,
Thou staysest about thy liquor overlong;
The fish, which in the river doe remaine,
Will want thereby; thy drinking doth them wrong:
But I will see their satisfaction made,
With gyants blood they must, and shall be payd.

Villaine, quoth Amarant, Ile crush thee streight;
Thy life shall pay thy daring touns offence:
This clubb, which is about some hundred weight, 75
Is death's commission to dispatch thee hence:
Dresse thee for ravens dyett I must needs;
And brake thy bones, as they were made of reedes.

Incensed much by these bold pagan hostes,
Which worthye Guy cold ill endure to heare, 80
He Hewes upon those bigg supporting postes,
Which like two pillars did his body beare:
Amarant for those wounds in choller groves
And desperatlye att Guy his clubb he throwes:
Which did directly on his body light, 85
Soe violent, and weightly therewithall,
That downe to ground on sudden came the knight;
And, ere he cold recover from the fall,
The gyant gott his clubb againe in fayt,
And amud a stroke that wonderfullie mist.
90

Traytor, quoth Guy, thy falshood Ile repay,
This coward act to intercept my bloode.
Saves Amarant, Ile murther any way,
With enemies all vantages are good:
O could I poysin in thy nostrills blowe, 95
Bsure of it I wold dispach thee soe.

Its well, said Guy, thy honest thoughts appeare,
Within that beastlye bulke where devills dwell;
Which are thy tenants while thou livest heare,
But will be landlords when thou comest in hell:
Vile miscreant, prepare thee for their den, 101
Inhumane monster, hatefull unto men.

But breathe thy selfe a time, while I goe drinke,
For flameing Phoebus with his fyere eye
Torments me with burning heat, I think;
My thirst wold serve to drive an ocean drye:
Forbear a little, as I delft with thee.
Quoth Amarant. 'Thou hast noe foole of mee. 105

Noe, silye wretch, my father taught more witt,
How I shold use such enemies as thou; 110
By all my gods I doe rejoice at it,
To understand that thirst constraines thee now;
For all the treasure, that the world contains,
One drop of water shall not coole thy vaines.

Relieve my fooe! why, 'twere a madmans part: 115
Refresh an adversarye to my wrong!
If thou imagine this, a child thou art:
Noe, fellow, I have known the world too long
To be soe simple: now I know thy want,
A minutes space of breathing I'll not grant. 120
And with these words heaving aloft his clubb
Into the ayre, he swings the same about:
Then shakes his lockes, and doth his temples rubb,
And, like the Cyclops, in his pride doth stout:
Sirra, says bee, I have you at a lift, 125
Now you are come unto your latest shift.
Perish forever: with this stroke I send thee
A medicine, that will doe thy thirst much good;
Take more care for drinke before I end thee,
And then wee'll have carouses of thy blood; 130
Here's at thee with a butcher's downright blow,
To please my furye with thine overthrow.

Infervall, false, obdurate feend, said Guy,
That seemst a lump of crueltie from hell;
Ungratefull monster, since thou dost deny 135
The thing to me wherein I used thee well:
With more revenge, than ere my sword did make,
On thy accursed head revenge Ie take.

Thy gyants longitude shall shorter shrinke,
Except thy sun-scorcht skin be weapon proof:140
Farewell my thirst; I doe disdain to drinke;
Streams keepe your waters to your owne behoof;
Or let wild beasts be welcome thereunto;
With those pearle drops I will not have to do.

Here, tyrant, take a taste of my good-will,
For thus I doe begin my bloodye bout:
You cannot chase but like the gilting ill;
It is not that same clubb will bearre you out;
And take this payment on thy shaggye crowne—
A blowe that brought him with a vengeance downe.

Then Guy sett foot upon the monsters brest,
And from his shoulders did his head divide;
Which with a yawninge mouth did gape, unblest;
Noe dragons jaws were ever seene soe wide
To open and to shut, till life was spent. 155
Then Guy tooke keyes, and to the castle went.

Where manye woefull captives he did find,
Which had beene tyred with extremeties;
Whom he in freindly manner did unbind,
And reasoned with them of their miseries; 160
Eche told a tale with teares, and sighes, and cryes,
All weeping to him with complaining eyes.

There tender ladies in darke dungeons lay,
That were surprised in the desert wood,
And had noe other dyett eve day,
But flesh of humane creatures for their food:
Some with their lovers bodys had beene fed,
And in their wombs their husbands buryed.

Now he bethinkes him of his being there,
To enlarce the wronged brethren from their woes:
And, as he searcheth, doth great clamours heare, 171
By which sad sound's direction on he goes,
Until he findes a darksome obscure gate,
Arm'd strongly over all with iron plate.

That he unlockes, and enters, where appeares
The strangest object that he ever saw;
Men that with famishement of manye years,
Wore like deathes picture, which the painters draw;
Divers of them were hanged by eche thome;
Others head-downward: by the middle some. 180

With diligence he takes them from the walls,
With lybertye their thraldome to acquaint:
Then the perplexed knight their father calls,
[flaint
And sayes, Receive thy sonnes though poore and I promised you their lives, accept of that;
But did not warrant you they shold be fat.

The castle I doe give thee, heere's the keyes,
Where tyranye for manye yeeres did dwell:
Procure the gentle tender ladyes ease,
For pityes sake, use wronged women well:
Men easlye revenge the wrongs men do;
But poore weake women have not strength thereto,
The good old man, even overjoyed with this,
Fell on the ground, and wold have kist Guyes feete:
Father, quoth he, refraine soe base a kiss,
For age to honor youth I hold unmeet:
Ambitious pryde hath hurt mee all it can,
I goe to mortifie a sinfull man.

 The foregoing poem on "Guy and Amaran" has been discovered to be a fragment of "The famous historie of Guy earle of Warwick," by Samuel Rowlands, London, printed by J. Bell, 1649," 4to. in xi cantos, beginning thus:

"When dreadful Mars in armour every day."

Whether the edition in 1649 was the first is not known, but the author Sam. Rowlands was one of the minor poets who lived in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and James I. and perhaps later. His other poems are chiefly of the religious kind, which makes it probable that the history of Guy was one of his earliest performances.—There are extant of his (1.) "The betraying of Christ, Judas in despair, the seven words of our Saviour on the cross, with other poems on the passion, &c. 1598, 4to. [Ames Typ. p. 428.]—(2) A Theatre of delightful Recreation. Lond. printed for A. Johnson, 1605," 4to. (Penes editor.) This is a book of poems on subjects chiefly taken from the Old Testament. (3.) "Memory of Christ's miracles, in verse. Lond. 1618, 4to." (4.) "Heaven's glory, earth's vanity, and hell's horror." Lond. 1638, 8vo. [These two in Bod. Cat.]

In the present edition the foregoing poem has been much improved from the printed copy.
I have not been able to meet with a more ancient copy of this humorous old song, than that printed in the Tea-Table Miscellany, &c. which seems to have admitted some corruptions.

Late in an evening forth I went
A little before the sun gade down,
And there I chanc't, by accident,
To light on a battle new begun:
A man and his wife were fawn in a strife,
I canna weel tell ye how it began;
But aye she wail'd her wretched life,
Cryeng, Evir alake, mine auld goodman!

Thy auld goodman, that thou tells of,
The country kens where he was born,
Was but a silly poor vagabond,
And ilk a'ne laugh him to scorn:
For he did spend and make an end
Of gear ' his fathers nevir' wan;
He gart the poor stand frae the door;
Sae tell nae mair of thy auld goodman.

My heart, alake! is liken to break,
When I think on my winsome John,
His blinkan ee, and gait sae free,
Was naething like thee, thou dosend drone;
Wi' his rosie face, and flaxen hair,
And skin as white as ony swan,
He was large and tall, and comely withall;
Thou't nevir be like mine auld goodman.

Then coming was the night sae dark,
And gane was a' the light of day:
The carle was fear'd to miss his mark,
And therefore wad nae longer stay:
Then up he gat, and ran his way,
I trowe, the wife the day she wan;
And aye the owreword of the fray
Was, Evir alake! mine auld goodman.

These lines have acquired an importance by giving birth to one of the most beautiful ballads in our own or any language. See the song entitled "Margaret's Ghost" at the end of this volume.

Since the first edition some improvements have been inserted, which were communicated by a lady of the first distinction, as she had heard this song repeated in her infancy.

As it fell out on a long summer's day
Two lovers they sat on a hill:
They sat together that long summer's day,
And could not talk their fill.

I see no harm by you, Margarét,
And you see none by mee:
Before to-morrow at eight o' the clock
A rich wedding you shall see.
BARBARA ALLEN'S CRUELTY.

Fair Margaret sat in her bower-window,
Combing her yellow hair; 10
There she spied sweet William and his bride,
As they were a riding near.

Then down she layd her ivory combe,
And braided her hair in twain; 15
She went alive out of her bower,
But ne'er came alive in't again.

When day was gone, and night was come,
And all men fast asleep,
Then came the spirit of fair Margret,
And stood at Williams feet. 20

Are you awake, sweet William? shee said;
Or, sweet William, are you asleep?
God give you joy of your gay bride-bed,
And me of my winding sheet.

When day was come, and night was gone, 25
And all men wake'd from sleep,
Sweet William to his lady sayd,
My dear, I have cause to weep.

I dreamt a dream, my dear ladye,
Such dreams are never good: 30
I dreamt my bower was full of red wine,
And my bride-bed full of blood.

Such dreams, such dreams, my honoured sir,
They never do prove good:
To dream thy bower was full of red wine, 35
And thy bride-bed full of blood.

He called up his merry men all,
By one, by two, and by three;
Saving, I'll away to fair Margret's bower,
By the leave of my ladye. 40

And when he came to fair Margret's bower,
He knocked at the ring;
And who so ready as her seven brethren
To let sweet William in.

Then he turned up the covering-sheet, 45
Pray let me see the dead:
Methinks she looks all pale and wan,
She hath lost her cherry red.

I'll do more for thee, Margret,
Than any of thy kin; 50
For I will kiss thy pale wan lips,
Though a smile I cannot win.

With that bespoke the seven brethren,
Making most piteous moan:
You may go kiss your jolly brown bride,
And let our sister alone.

If I do kiss my jolly brown bride,
I do but what is right;
I neer made a vow to yonder poor corpse
By day, nor yet by night. 60

Deal on, deal on, my merry men all,
Deal on your cake and your wine*:
For whatever is dealt at her funeral to-day,
Shall be dealt to-morrow at mine.

Fair Margaret dyed to-day, to-day, 65
Sweet William dyed the morrow:
Fair Margaret dyed for pure true love,
Sweet William dyed for sorrow.

Margaret was buryed in the lower chancel,
And William in the higher: 70
Out of her breast there sprang a rose,
And out of his a brier.

They grew till they grew unto the church top,
And then they could grow no higher; 75
And there they tyed in a true lovers knot,
Which made all the people admire.

Then came the clerk of the parish,
As you the truth shall hear,
And by misfortune cut them down,
Or they had now been there.

V.

BARBARA ALLEN'S CRUELTY.

Given, with some corrections, from an old black letter copy, entitled, "Barbary Allen's cruelty, or the Young Man's Tragedy."

In Scarlet towne, where I was borne,
There was a faire maid dwellin,
Made every youth crye, Wel-awaye! 5
Her name was Barbara Allen.

All in the merrye month of May,
When greene buds they were swellin,
Yong Jenmye Grove on his death-bed lay,
For love of Barbara Allen.

Ver. 31, 35, swine, PCC.

He sent his man unto her then,
To the town where shee was dwellin; 10
You must come to my master deare,
Giff your name be Barbara Allen.

For death is printed on his face,
And ore his hart is steelin; 15
Then haste away to comfort him,
O lovelye Barbara Allen.

Though death be printed on his face,
And ore his harte is steelin,
Yet little better shall he bee
For bonny Barbara Allen. 20

* Alluding to the dole antiently given at funerals.
SWEET WILLIAM'S GHOST.

From Allan Ramsay's Tea-Table Miscellany. The concluding stanza of this piece seems modern.

There came a ghost to Margaret's door,
With many a grievous groane,
And ay he bittred at the pin;
But answer made she none.

Is this my father Philip?
Or is't my brother John?
Or is't my true love Willie,
From Scotland new come home?

'Tis not thy father Philip:
Nor yet thy brother John:
But 'tis thy true love Willie
From Scotland new come home.

O sweet Margret! O dear Margret!
I pray thee speak to mee:
Give me my faith and troth, Margret,
As I gave it to thee.

Thy faith and troth thou'se nevir get,
'Of me shalt nevir win,'
Till that thou come within my bower,
And kiss my cheek and chin.

If I should come within thy bower,
I am no earthly man:
And should I kiss thy rosy lipp,
Thy days will not be lang.

O sweet Margret, O dear Margret,
I pray thee speak to mee:
Give me my faith and troth, Margret,
As I gave it to thee.

My bones are buried in a kirk yard
Afar beyond the sea,
And it is but my sprite, Margret,
That's speaking now to thee.

She stretched out her lily-white hand,
As for to do her best:
Hae there your faith and troth, Willie,
God send your soul good rest.

Now she has kilted her robes of green,
A piece below her knee:
And a' the live-lang winter night
The dead corps followed shee.

VI.

SWEET WILLIAM'S GHOST.

A SCOTTISH BALLAD.

So slowly, slowly, she came up,
And slowly she came nye him;
And all she sayd, when there she came,
Yong man, I think y'are dying.

He turnd his face unto her strait,
With deadlye sorrow sighing;
O lovely maid, come pity mee,
Ime on my deth-bed lying.

If on your death-bed you doe lye,
What needs the tale you are tellin;
I cannot keep you from your death;
Farewell, sayd Barbara Allen.

He turnd his face unto the wall,
As deadlye pangs he fell in:
Adieu! adieu! adieu to you all,
Adieu to Barbara Allen.

As she was walking o're the fields,
She heard the bell a knellin;
And every stroke did seem to saye,
Unworthy Barbara Allen.

She turnd her bodye round about,
And spied the corps a coming:
Laye down, laye down the corps, she sayd,
That I may look upon him.

With scornful eye she looked downe,
Her cheeke with laughter swellin:
Whilst all her friends cryd out amaine;
Unworthy Barbara Allen.

When he was dead, and laid in grave,
Her harte was struck with sorrowe;
O mother, mother, make my bed,
For I shall dye to-morrowe.

Hard-harted creature him to slight,
Who loved me so deurlye;
O that I had beene more kind to him,
When he was alive and neare me!

She, on her death-bed as she laye,
Beg'd to be buried by him;
And sore repent'd of the daye,
That she did ere denye him.

Farewell, she sayd, ye virgins all,
And shun the fault I fell in:
Henceforth take warning by the fall
Of cruel Barbara Allen.
THE BALIFF’S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON.

Is there any room at your head, Willie?
Or any room at your feet?
Or any room at your side, Willie,
Wherein that I may creep?
There’s nae room at my head, Margret.
There’s nae room at my feet,
There’s no room at my side, Margret,
My coffin is made so meet.
Then up and crew the red red cock,
And up then crew the gray:

Tis time, tis time, my dear Margret,
That ’T were gone away.
No more the ghost to Margret said,
But, with a grievous groan,
Evansh'd in a cloud of mist,
And left her all alone.
O stay, my only true love, stay,
The constant Margret cried:
Wan grew her true love, stay,
Stretch'd her saft limbs, and died.

VII.

SIR JOHN GREHME AND BARBARA ALLAN.

A SCOTTISH BALLAD.

Printed, with a few conjectural emendations, from a written copy.

Ir was in and about the Martinmas time,
When the greene leaves wer a fallan;
That Sir John Grehme o’ the west countrye,
Fell in luve wi’ Barbara Allan.

He sent his man down throw the towne,
To the plaise wher she was dwellan:
O haste and cum to my maister deare,
Gin ye bin Barbara Allan.

O hooly, hooly raise she up,
To the plaise wher he was lyan;
And whan she drew the curtain by,
Young man I think ye’re dyan*.

O its I’m sick, and very very sick,
And its a’ for Barbara Allan.
O the better for me ye’re never be,
Though your harts blude wer spillan.

Remember ye nat in the tavern, sir,
Whan ye the cups wer spillan;
How ye made the healths gae round and round,
And slighted Barbara Allan?

He turn’d his face unto the wa’,
And death was with him dealan;
Adie! adie! my dear friends a’,
Be kind to Barbara Allan.

Then hooly, hooly raise she up,
And hooly, hooly left him;
And sighan said, she could not stay,
Since death of life had reft him.

She had not gane a mile but twa,
Whan she heard the deid-bell knellan;
And everye jow the deid-bell gied,
Cried, Wae to Barbara Allan!

O mither, mither, mak my bed,
O mak it saft and narrow:
Since my love died for me to day,
Ise die for him to morrowe.

VIII.

THE BALIFF’S DAUGHTER OF ISLINGTON.

From an ancient black-letter copy in the Pepys Collection, with some improvements communicated by a lady as she had heard the same recited in her youth. The full title is, "True love requited: Or, the Baliff’s daughter of Islington."

Islington in Norfolk is probably the place here meant,

There was a youthe, and a well-beloved youthe,
And he was a squires son:
He loved the bailiff’s daughter deare,
That lived in Islington.

* An ingenious friend thinks the rhymes Dyand and Lyand ought to be transposed: as the lines Young man, I think ye’re lyand, would be very characteristic.

Yet she was cove, and would not believe
That he did love her soe,
Noo nor at any time would she
Any countenance to him showe.

But when his friends did understand
His fond and foolish minde,
They sent him up to faire London
An apprentice for to binde.

And when he had been seven long yeares,
And never his love could see:
Many a teare have I shed for her sake,
When she little thought of mee.
Then all the maids of Islington
Went forth to sport and playe,
All but the baylifes daughter deare;
She secretely stole awaye.  20

She pulled off her gowne of greene,
And put on ragged attire,
And to faire London she would go
Her true love to enquire.

And as she went along the high road,  25
The weather being hot and drye,
She sat her downe upon a green bank,
And her true love came riding bye.

She started up, with a colour soe redd,
Catching hold of his bridle-reine;
One penny, one penny, kind sir, she sayd,
Will ease me of much paine.

Before I give you one penny, sweet-heart,
Praye tell me where you were borne.

At Islington, kind sir, sayd shee,
Where I have had many a scorn.

I prythee, sweet-heart, then tell to mee,
O tell me, whether you knowe
The baylifes daughter of Islington.
She is dead, sire, long agoe.

If she be dead, then take my horse,
My saddle and bridle also;
For I will into some farre countrie,
Where noe man shall me knowe.

O staye, O staye, thou goodlye youthe,
She standeth by thy side;
She is here alive, she is not dead,
And readye to be thy bride.

O farewell grieue, and welcome joye,
Ten thousand times therefore;
For nowe I have founde mine owne true love,
Whom I thought I should never see more.

IX.
THE WILLOW TREE.
A PASTORAL DIALOGUE.

From the small black-letter collection, intitled,
"The Golden Garland of princely Delights," collated with two other copies, and corrected by conjecture.

WILLY.
How now, shepherde, what means that?
Why that willowe in thy hat?
Why thy scarffes of red and yellowe
Turn'd to branches of greene willowe?

CUDDY.
They are chang'd, and so am I;
Sorrowes live, but pleasures die:
Phillis hath forsaken mee,
Which makes me weare the willowe-tree.

WILLY.
Phillis! shee that lov'd thee long?
Is shee the lass hath done thee wrong?
Shee that lov'd thee long and best,
Is her love turned to a jest?

CUDDY.
Shew that long true love profest,
She hath robb'd my heart of rest:

For she a new love loves, not mee;
Which makes me wear the willowe-tree.

WILLY.
Come then, shepherde, let us joine,
Since thy happ is like to mine:
For the maid I thought most true
Mee hath also bid adieu.

CUDDY.
Thy hard happ doth mine appease,
Companye doth sorrowe ease:
Yet, Phillis, still I pine for thee,
And still must weare the willowe-tree.

WILLY.
Shepherde, he advis'd by mee,
Cast of grief and willowe-tree:
For thy grief brings her content,
She is pleas'd if thou lament.

CUDDY.
Herdsman, I'll be rul'd by thee,
There lyes grief and willowe-tree:
Henceforth I will do as they,
And love a new love every day.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>The Lady's Fall</th>
<th>Think on thy former promises,</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>is given (with corrections) from the editor's ancient folio MS. collated with two printed copies in black-letter; one in the British Museum, the other in the Pepys Collection. Its old title is, “A lamentable ballad of the Lady's fall.” To the tune of “In Pescod Time, &amp;c.”—The ballad here referred to is preserved in the “Muses Library,” svo. p. 284. It is an allegory or vision, intitled, “The Shepherd's Slumber,” and opens with some pretty rural images, viz.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;In pescod time when bound to horn</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gives eare till buck be kil'd,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And little lads with pipes of corne</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sate keeping beasts a-field.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;I went to gather strawberries</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>By woods and groves full fair, &amp;c.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marke well my heavy dolefull tale,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>You loyall lovers all,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And heedfully heare in your brest</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A gallant ladys fall.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Long was she wooed, ere she was wonne,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To lead a wedded life,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But folly wrought her overthrowe</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Before shee was a wife.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Too soone, alas! shee gave consent</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And yeluded to his will,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Though he protested to be true,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And faithfull to her still.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shee felt her body altered quite,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Her bright hue waxed pale,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Her loveyche cheeks chang'd color white,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Her strength began to fayle.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Soe that with many a sorrowful sigh,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>This beauteous ladye milde,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With greeved hart, perceived herself</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To have conceived with child.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shee kept it from her parents sight</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>As close as close might bee</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And soe put on her silken gowne</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>None might her swelling see.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Unto her lover secretly</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Her greefe shee did bewray,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And, walking with him hand in hand,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>These words to him did say;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Behold, quoth shee, a maids distress</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>By love brought to thy bowe,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Behold I goe with childle by thee,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tho none thereof doth knowe.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The little babe springs in my wombe</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To heare its fathers voyce,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loo it not be a bastard called,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sith I made thee my choyce;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Come, come, my love, perform thy vowe</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And wed me out of hand;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O leave me not in this extreme</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of griefe, alas! to stand.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>45</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>50</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>55</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>60</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>70</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>75</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>85</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>90</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>95</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
XI.

WALY WALY, LOVE BE BONNY.

This is a very ancient song, but we could only give it from a modern copy. Some editions instead of the four last lines in the second stanza have these, which have too much merit to be wholly suppressed:

"Whan cockle shells turn siller bells,
And muscles grow on every tree,
When frost and snow shall warm us aw'
Than shall my love prove true to me."

See the Orpheus Caledonius, &c.

Arthur's-seat, mentioned in ver. 17, is a hill near Edinborough; at the bottom of which is St. Anthony's well.

O waly waly up the bank,
And waly waly down the brae,
And waly waly you burn side,
Where I and my love wer wont to gae.
I leant my back unto an aik,
I thought it was a trusty tree!
But first it bow'd and syne it brak,
Sae my true love did lichtly me.

O waly waly, gin love be bonny,
A little time while it is new;
But when its auld, it waxeth cauld,
And fades awa' like morning dew

O wherofeu shoul I busk my head?
Or wherofeu shoul I kame my hair?
For my true love has me forsook,
And says he'll never loe me mair.

Now Arthur-seat sall he my bed,
The sheets shall neir be fyl'd by me:
Saint Anton's well sall be my drink,
Since my true love has forsaken me.
Mart'lis mas wind, when wilt thou blaw,
And shake the green leaves aff the tree?
O gentle death, when wilt thou cum?
For of my life I am wareie.

Tis not the frost, that freezes fell,
Nor blazing snaws inclemencie;
Tis not sic cauld, that makes me cry,
But my loves heart grown caulde to me.
When we came in by Glasgow town,
We were a comely sight to see,
My love was cled in black velvet,
And I my sell in cramisie.

But had I wist, before I kisst,
That love had been sae ill to win;
I had lockt my heart in a case of cowd,
And pin'd it with a siller pin.
And, oh! if my young babe were born,
And set upon the nurses knees,
And I my sell were dead and gane!
For a maid again Ise never be.
From two ancient copies in black-letter: one in the Pepys Collection; the other in the British Museum.

To the tune of "The Lady's Fall."

Come mourn, come mourn with mee, You loyall lovers all;
Lament my losse in weeds of woe, Whom griping grief doth thrall.

Like to the drooping vine, Cut by the gardener's knife,
Even so my heart, with sorrow shine, Doth bleed for my sweet wife.

By death, that grislye ghost, My turtle dove is shine,
And I am left, unhappy man, To spend my dayes in paine.

Her beauty late so bright, Like roses in their prime,
Is wasted like the mountain snowe, Before warme Phoebus' shine.

Her faire red colour'd cheeks Now pale and wan; her eyes,
That late did shine like crystal stars, Alas, their light it dies: 20

Her prettie lilly hands, With fingers long and small,
In colour like the earthly claye, Yea, cold and stiff withall.

When as the morning-star Her golden gates had spred,
And that the glitttering sun arose Forth from fair Thetis' bed;

Then did my love awake, Most like a lilly-flowre,
And as the lovely queene of heaven, So shone shee in her bower.

Attired was shee then Like Flora in her pride,
Like one of bright Diana's nymphs, So look'd my loving bride.

And as fair Helens face Did Grecian dames besmirche, So did my dear exceed in sight All virgins in the church.

When we had knitt the knott Of holy wedlock-band,
Like alabaster joynd to jett, So stood we hand in hand

Then lo! a chilling cold Strucke every vital part, And gripping grieue, like pangs of death, Seiz'd on my true love's heart.

Come mourn, come mourn with mee, You loyall lovers all;
Lament my losse in weeds of woe, Whom griping grief doth thrall.

Like to the drooping vine, Cut by the gardener's knife,
Even so my heart, with sorrow shine, Doth bleed for my sweet wife.

By death, that grislye ghost, My turtle dove is shine,
And I am left, unhappy man, To spend my dayes in paine.

Her beauty late so bright, Like roses in their prime,
Is wasted like the mountain snowe, Before warme Phoebus' shine.

Her faire red colour'd cheeks Now pale and wan; her eyes,
That late did shine like crystal stars, Alas, their light it dies: 20

Her prettie lilly hands, With fingers long and small,
In colour like the earthly claye, Yea, cold and stiff withall.

When as the morning-star Her golden gates had spred,
And that the glitttering sun arose Forth from fair Thetis' bed;

Then did my love awake, Most like a lilly-flowre,
And as the lovely queene of heaven, So shone shee in her bower.

Attired was shee then Like Flora in her pride,
Like one of bright Diana's nymphs, So look'd my loving bride.

And as fair Helens face Did Grecian dames besmirche, So did my dear exceed in sight All virgins in the church.

When we had knitt the knott Of holy wedlock-band,
Like alabaster joynd to jett, So stood we hand in hand

Then lo! a chilling cold Strucke every vital part, And gripping grieue, like pangs of death, Seiz'd on my true love's heart.

Down in a swoon she fell, As cold as any stone;
Like Venus picture lacking life, So was my love brought home.

At length her rosye red, Throughout her comely face,
As Phoebus beames with watry clouds Was cover'd for a space.

When with a grievous groane, And voice both hoarse and drye,
Farewell, quoth she, my loving friend, For I this daye must dye;

The messenger of God With golden trumpe I see, With manye other angels more, Which sound and call for mee.

Instead of musick sweet, Go toll my passing-bell; And with sweet flowers strow my grave, That in my chamber smell.

Strip off my bride's arraye, My cork shoes from my feet; And, gentle mother, be not coyse To bring my winding-sheet.

My wedding dinner dreke, Besowe upon the poor, And on the hungry, needy, mainde, Now craving at the door.

Instead of virgins yong, My bride-bed for to see, Go cause some cunning carpenter, To make a chest for mee.

My bride laces of silk Bestow'd, for maidens meet, May fitly serve, when I am dead, To tye my hands and feet.

And thou, my lover true, My husband and my friend, Let me intreat thee here to staye, Until my life doth end.

Now leave to talk of love, And humlye on your knee, Direct your prayers unto God: But mourn no more for mee.

In love as we have livde, In love let us depart; And I, in token of my love, Do kiss thee with my heart.

O staunch those bootless teares, Thy weeping tis in vaine; I am not lost; for wee in heaven Shall one daye meet againe.
DULCINA.

With that shee turn'd aside,
As one dispos'd to sleep,
And like a lamb departed life:
Whose friends did sorely weep.

Her true love seeing this,
Did fetch a grievous groane,
As tho' his heart would burst in twaine,
And thus he made his moane.

O darke and dismal daye,
A daye of grief and care,
That hath bereft the sun so bright,
Whose beams refresh the air.

Now woe unto the world,
And all that therein dwell,
O that I were with thee in heaven
For here I live in hell.

And now this lover lives
A discontented life,
Whose bride was brought unto the grave
A maiden and a wife.

A garland fresh and faire
Of lilies there was made,
In sign of her virginitye,
And on her coffin laid.

Six maidens all in white,
Did beare her to the ground:
The bells did ring in solemn sort,
And made a dolefull sound.

In earth they laid her then,
For hungry wormes a prey:
So shall the fairest face alive
At length be brought to claye.

XIII.

DULCINA.

Given from two ancient copies, one in black-print, in the Pepys Collection, the other in the Editor's folio MS. Each of these contained a stanza not found in the other. What seemed the best readings were selected from both.

This song is quoted as very popular in "Walton's Compleat Angler," chap. 2. It is more ancient than the ballad of "Robin Good-Fellow" printed below, which yet is supposed to have been written by Ben Jonson.

As at noone Dulcina rested
In her sweete and shady bower,
Came a shepherd, and requested
In her lapp to sleepe an hour.
But from her looke
A wounde he tooke
Soo deepe, that for a further Boone
The nymph he prays.
Wherto shee sayses,
Forgoe me now, come to me socne.

But in vayne shee did conjure him
To depart her presence soe;
Having a thousand tongues to allure him,
And but one to bid him goe:
Where lipps invite,
And eyes delight,
And cheekes, as fresh as rose in June,
Persuade delay;
What boots, she says,
Forgoe me now, come to me socne?

He demands what time for pleasure
Can there be more fit than now:
She says, night gives love that leysure,
Which the day can not allow.
He says, the sight
makes bold, shee sayses;
Forgoe me now, come to mee socne.

But what promise or profession
From his hands could purchase scope?
Who would sell the sweet possession
Of suche beautye for a hope?
Or for the sight
Of lingering night
Forgoe the present joyes of noone?
Though ne'er soe faire
Her speeches were,
Forgoe me now, come to me socne.

How, at last, agreed these lovers?
Shee was sayre, and he was young:
The tongue may tell what th'eye discovers;
Joyes unsene are never sung.
Did shee consent,
Or he relent;
Accepts he night, or grants shee noone;
Left he her a mayd,
Or not; she says
Forgoe me now, come to me socne.
XIV.
THE LADY ISABELLA'S TRAGEDY.

This ballad is given from an old black-letter copy in the Pepys Collection, collated with another in the British Museum, H. 263, folio. It is there intitled, "The Lady Isabella's Tragedy, or the Step-Mother's Cruelty: being a relation of a lamentable and cruel murther, committed on the body of the Lady Isabell, the only daughter of a noble Duke, &c. To the tune of, The Lady's Fall." To some copies are annexed eight more modern stanzas, intitled, "The Duchess's and Cook's Lamentation."

There was a lord of worthy fame,
And a hunting he would ride,
Attended by a noble traine
Of gentry by his side.

And while he did in chase remaine,
To see both sport and playe;
His ladye went, as she did figne,
Unto the church to praye.

This lord he had a daughter deare,
Whose beauty shone so bright,
She was belov'd, both far and neare,
Of many a lord and knight.

Fair Isabella was she call'd,
A creature faire was shee;
She was her fathers only joye;
As you shall after see.

Therefore her cruel step-mother
Did envy her so much,
That daye by daye she sought her life,
Her malice it was such.

She bargain'd with the master-cook,
To take her life awaye;
And taking of her daughters book,
She thus to her did saye.

Go home, sweet daughter, I thee praye,
Go hasten presentlie;
And tell unto the master-cook
These wordes that I tell thee.

And bid him dresse to dinner streight
That faire and milk-white doe,
That in the park doth shine so bright,
There's none so faire to showe.

This ladye fearing of no harme,
Obey'd her mothers will;
And presently she hasted home,
Her pleasure to fullfill.

She straight into the kitchen went,
Her message for to tell;
And there she spied the master-cook,
Who did with malice swell.

Nowe, master-cook, it must be see,
Do that which I thee tell:
You needes must dresse the milk-white doe,
Which you do knowe full well.

Then streight his cruel bloodye hands,
He on the ladye layd;
Who quivering and shaking stands,
While thus to her he sayd;

Thou art the doe that I must dresse;
See here, behold my knife;
For it is pointed presently
To ridd thee of thy life.

O then, cried out the scullion-boye,
As loud as loud might bee;
O save her life, good master-cook,
And make your pyes of mee!

For pityes sake do not destroye
My ladye with your knife;
You know shee is her father's joye,
For Christes sake save her life.

I will not save her life, he sayd,
Nor make my pyes of thee;
Yet if thou dost this deed bewraye,
Thy butcher I will bee.

Now when this lord he did come home
For to sit down and eat;
He called for his daughter deare,
To come and carve his meat.

Now sit you downe, his ladye sayd,
O sit you downe to meat;
Into some nunnerie she is gone;
Your daughter deare forget.

Then solemnlye he made a vowe,
Before the companie:
That he would neither eat nor drinke,
Until he did her see.

O then bespake the scullion-boye,
With a loud voice so hie;
If now you will your daughter see,
My lord cut up that pye:

Wherein her fleshe is minced small,
And parched with the fire;
All caused by her step-mother,
Who did her death desire.

And cursed bee the master-cook,
O cursed may he bee!
I proffered him my own heart's blood,
From death to set her free,
THE KING OF FRANCE'S DAUGHTER.

Then all in blacke this lord did mourn:
And for his daughters sake,
He judged her cruel step-mother
To be burnt at a stake.
Likewise he judg'd the master-cook
in boiling lead to stand;
And made the simple scullion-boys
The heire of all his land.

XV.

A HUE AND CRY AFTER CUPID.

This song is a kind of Translation of a pretty poem of Tasso's, called Amore fugitivo, generally printed with his "Aminta," and originally imitated from the first Idyllium of Moschus.
It is extracted from Ben Jonson's Masque at the marriage of Lord Viscount Hadington, on Shrove-Tuesday 1608. One stanza, full of dry mythology, is here omitted, as it had been dropt in a copy of this song printed in a small volume called "Le Prince d'Amour. Lond. 1660," 8vo.

Beauties, have ye a toy,
Called Love, a little boy,
Almost naked, wanton, blinde;
Cruel now, and then as kinds?
If he be amongst ye, say;
He is Venus' run away.

Shee, that will but now discover
Where the winged wag doth hover,
Shall to-night receive a kiss;
How and where herselfe would wish:
But who brings him to his mother
Shall have that kiss, and another.

Markes he hath about him plente;
You may know him among twentie;
All his body is a fire,
And his breath a flame entire;
Which, being shot, like lightning, in,
Wounds the heart, but not the skin.

Wings he hath, which though ye clip,
He will leape from lip to lip,
Over liver, lights, and heart;
Yet not stay in any part.
And, if chance his arrow misses,
He will shoot himselfe in kisses.

He doth beare a golden bow,
And a quiver hanging low,
Full of arrows, which outbrave
Dian's shafts; where, if he have Any head more sharpe than other,
With that first he strikes his mother.

Still the fairest are his fuell,
When his daies are to be cruel;
Lovers hearts are all his food,
And his baths their warmest bloud:
Nought but wounds his hand doth season,
And he hates none like to Reason.

Trust him not: his words, though sweet,
Seldom with his heart doe meet:
All his practice is deceit;
Everie gift is but a bait:
Not a kiss but poysen beares;
And most treason's in his teares.

Idle minutes are his rainge;
Then the straggler makes his game,
By presenting maids with toyes
And would have ye thinke hem joyes;
'Tis the ambition of the elfe
To have all childish as himselfe.

If by these ye please to know him,
Beauties, be not nice, but show him.
Though ye had a will to hide him,
Now, we hope, ye'l not abide him,
Since ye hear this falser's play,
And that he is Venus' run-away

XVI.

THE KING OF FRANCE'S DAUGHTER.

The story of this Ballad seems to be taken from an incident in the domestic history of Charles the Bald, King of France. His daughter Judith was betrothed to Ethelwulph King of England: but before the marriage was consummated, Ethelwulph died, and she returned to France: whence she was carried off by Buldwyn, Forester of Flanders; who, after many crosses and difficulties, at length obtained the king's consent to their marriage, and was made Earl of Flanders. This happened about A. D. 863.—See Rapin, Henault, and the French Historians. The following copy is given from the Editor's ancient folio MS. collated with another in black-letter in the Pepys Collection, intitled, "An excellent Ballad of a prince of England's courtship to the King of France's daughter, &c. To the tune of Crimson Velvet." Many breaches having been made in this old song by the hand of time, principally (as might be expected) in the quick returns of the rhyme; an attempt is here made to repair them.

In the daies of old,
When faire France did flourish,
Storyes plaine have told,
Lovers felt annoy.
The queene a daughter bare,
Whom beautye's queene did nourish:
She was loveley faire,
She was her fathers joye.
A prince of England came,
Whose deeds did merit fame,
But he was exild, and outcast:
Love his soul did fire,
Shee granted his desire,
Their hearts in one were linked fast.
Which when her father proved,
Sorelye he was moved,
And tormented in his minde.
He sought for to prevent them;
And, to discontent them,
Fortune cross'd these lovers kinde.

When these princes twaine
Were thus barr'd of pleasure,
Through the kinges disdain,
Which their joyes with thoode:
The lady soon prepar'd
Her jewels and her treasure:
Having no regard
For state and royall bloode;
In homelye poore array
She went from court away,
To meet her joye and hearts delight;
Who in a forrest great
Had taken up his seat,
To wayt her coming in the night.
But, lo! what sudden danger
To this princely stranger
Chanced, as he sate alone!

By outlaws he was robbed,
And with ponyards stabbed,
Uttering many a dying groane.

The princesse, arm'd by love,
And by chaste desire,
All the night did rove
Without dread at all:
Still unknowne she past
In her strange attire;
Coming at the last
Within echoes call,—
You faire woods, quoth shee,
Honoured may you bee,
Harbouring my hearts delight;
Which encompass here
My joye and only deare,
My truste, friend, and comelye knight.
Sweete, I come unto thee,
Sweete, I come to woo thee;
That thou mayst not angry bee
For my long delaying;
For thy curteous staying
Soone amends I le make to thee.

Passing thus alone
Through the silent forest,
Many a grievous groane
Sounded in her ears:

She heard one complayne
And lament the sorest,
Seeming all in payne,
Shedding deadly teares.
Farewell, my deare, quoth hee.
Whom I must never see;
For why my life is att an end,
Through villaines crueltye:
For thy sweet sake I dye,
To show I am a faithfull friend.
Here I lye a bleeding,
While my thoughts are feeding
On the rarest beautye found.
O hard happ, that may be!
Little knowes my ladye
My heartes blood lyes on the ground.

With that a groane he sends
Which did burst in sunder
All the tender bands
Of his gentle heart.
She, who knewe his voice,
At his wordes did wonder;
All her former joyes
Did to griefe convert.
Strait she ran to see.
Who this man shold bee,
That soe like her love did seeme:
Her lovely lord she found
Lye slaine upon the ground,
Smeard with gore a ghastlye streame.
Which his lady spying,
Shrinking, fainting, crying,
Her sorrows could not uttered bee:
Fate, she cryed, too cruel:
For thee—my dearest jewel,
Would God! that I had dyed for thee.

His pale lippes, alas!
Twentie times she kissed,
And his face did wash
With her trickling teares:
Every gaping wound
Tenderlye she pressed,
And did wipe it round
With her golden haires.
Speake, faire love, quoth shee,
Speake, faire prince, to mee,
One sweete word of comfort give:
Lift up thy deare eyes,
Listen to my cries,
Thinke in what sad griefe I live.
All in vain she sued,
All in vain she wood,
The prince's life was fled and gone.
There stood she still mourning,
Till the suns returning,
And bright day was coming on

In this great distresse
Weeping, wayling ever,
Of shee cryed, alas!
What will become of mee?
To my fathers court
I returne will never:
But in lowlye sort
I will a servant bee.
While thus she made her mone,
Weeping all alone.
In this deep and deadly fear:
A forster all in green,
Most comely to be seen,
Ranging the woods did find her there.
Moved with her sorrow, 135
Maid, quoth she, good morrow,
What hard hap has brought thee here?
Harder hap did never
Two kindes hearts disserver:
Here liyes slaine my brother deare. 140

Where may I remaine,
Gentle forster, shew me,
'Till I can obtaine
A service in my neede!
Paines I will not spare:
This kindes favour doe mee,
It will ease my care;
Heaven shall be thy neede.
The forster all amazed,
On her beautye gazed,
Till his heart was set on fire.
If, faire maid, quoth shee,
You will goe with mee,
You shall have your hearts desire.
He brought her to his mother,
And above all other
He sett forth this maidens praise.
Long was his heart inflamed,
At length her love he gained,
And fortune crown'd his future dayes. 160
Thus unknowne he wedde
With a kings faire daughter:
Children seven they had,
Ere she told her birth.
Which when once he knew,
Humlybe he besought her,
He to the world might shew
Her rank and princelye worth.
He cloth'd his children then,
(Not like other men)
In party-colours strange to see:
The right side cloth of gold,
The left side to behold,
Of woollen cloth still framed hee.*
Men thereat did wonder;
Golden fame did thunder

This strange deed in every place:
The King of France came thither,
It being pleasant weather,
In those woods the hart to chase. 180
The children then they bring,
So their mother will'd it,
Where the royall king
Must of force come bye:
Their mothers riche array:
Was of crimson velvet:
Their fathers all of gray,
Seemelye to the eye,
Then this famous king,
Noting every thing,
Askt how he durst be so bold
To let his wife soe weare,
And decke his children there
In costly robes of pearl and gold.
The forrester replying,
And the cause deseryng,*
To the king these words did say,
Well may they, by their mother,
Weare rich clothes with other,
Being by birth a princesse gay. 190
The king aroused thus,
More heedfulllye beheld them,
Till a crimson blush
His remembrance crost.
The more I fix my mind
On thy wife and children,
The more methinks I find
The daughter which I lost.
Falling on her knee,
I am that child, quoth shee;
Paragon mee, my soveraine liege,.
The king perceiving this,
His daughter deare did kiss,
While joyfull teares did stopp his speache.
With his traine he tourned, 215
And with them sojourned.
Strait he dubb'd her husband knight;
Then made him Erle of Flanders,
And chiefe of his commanders:
Thus were their sorrowes put to flight. 220

---

THE SWEET NEGLECT.

* This will remind the reader of the livery and device of Charles Brandon, a private gentleman, who married the Queen Dowager of France, sister of Henry VIII. At a tournament which he held at his wedding, the trappings of his horse were half cloth of gold, and half frieze, with the following motto:

"Cloth of Gold, do not despise,
Cloth of Frize, be not too bold,
Thee thou art match with Cloth of Frize;
Cloth of Gold, do not despise.

---

XVII.

Still to be neat, still to be drest,
As you were going to a feast:
Still to be poud'rd, still perfum'd:
Lady it is to be presum'd,
Though art's hid causes are not found,
All is not sweet, all is not sound.

Give me a looke, give me a face,
That makes simplicitie a grace;
Robes loosely flowing, hair as free:
Such sweet neglect more taketh me,
Than all th' adulteries of art,
That strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

* I. e. describing. See Gloss.
XVIII.

THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD.

The subject of this very popular ballad (which has been set in so favourable a light by the Spectator, No. 83,) seems to be taken from an old play, entitled, "Two lamentable Tragedies; the one of the murder of Maister Beech, a chandler in Thames-streete, &c. The other of a young child murdered in a wood by two ruffins, with the consent of his uncle. By Rob. Yarrington, 1601, 4to." Our ballad-maker has strictly followed the play in the description of the father and mother's dying charge: in the uncle's promise to take care of their issue: his hiring two ruffians to destroy his ward, under pretence of sending him to school: their choosing a wood to perpetrate the murder in: one of the ruffians relenting, and a battle ensuing, &c. In other respects he has departed from the play. In the latter the scene is laid in Padua: there is but one child: which is murdered by a sudden stab of the unrelenting ruffian: he is slain himself by his less bloody companion; but ere he dies gives the other a mortal wound: the latter living just long enough to impeach the uncle: who, in consequence of this impeachment, is arraigned and executed by the hand of justice, &c. Whoever compares the play with the ballad, will have no doubt but the former is the original: the language is far more obsolete, and such a vein of simplicity runs through the whole performance, that, had the ballad been written first, there is no doubt but every circumstance of it would have been received into the drama: whereas this was probably built on some Italian novel.

Printed from two ancient copies, one of them in black letter in the Pepys collection. Its title at large is, "The Children in the Wood: or, the Norfolk Gentleman's Last Will and Testament: to the tune of Rogerio, &c."

Now ponder well, you parents deare,
These wordes, which I shall write;
A doleful story you shall heare,
In time brought forth to light.
A gentleman of good account
In Norfolk dwelt of late,
Who did in honour far surmount
Most men of his estate.

Sore sick he was, and like to dye,
No helpe his life could save;
His wife by him as sick did lye,
And both possesst one grave.
No love between these two was lost,
Each was to other kinde,
In love they liv'd, in love they dyed,
And left two babes behinde:

The one a fine and pretty boy,
Not passing three yeares old;
The other a girl more young than he,
And fram'd in beautyes molde.
The father left his little son,
As plainlye doth appeare,
When he to perfect age should come,
Three hundred pounds a yeare.

And to his little daughter Jane
Five hundred pounds in gold,
To be paid downe on marriage-day,
Which might not be controll'd:
But if the children chance to dye,
Ere they to age should come,
Their uncle should possesse their wealth;
For so the wille did run.

Now, brother, said the dying man,
Look to my children deare;
Be good unto my boy and girl,
No friends else have they there:
To God and you I recommend
My children deare this day;
But little while be sure we have
Within this world to stay.

You must be father and mother both,
And uncle all in one;
God knowes what will become of them,
When I am dead and gone.
With that bespeak their mother deare,
O brother kinde, quoth shee,
You are the man must bring our babes
To wealth or miserie:

And if you keep them carefully,
Then God will you reward;
But if you otherwise should deal,
God will your deedes regard.
With lippes as cold as any stone,
They kist their children small:
God bless you both, my children deare;
With that the teares did fall.

These speeches then their brother spake
To this sicc couple there,
The keeping of your little ones
Sweet sister, do not feare:
God never prosper me nor mine,
Nor aught else that I have,
If I do wrong your children deare,
When you are layd in grave.

The parents being dead and gone,
The children home he takes,
And brings them strait unto his house,
Where much of them he makes.
He had not kept these pretty babes
A twelvemonth and a daye,
But, for their wealth, he did devise
To make them both awaye.

He bargain'd with two ruffians strong,
Which were of furious mood,
That they should take these children young,
And slaye them in a wood.
He told his wife an artful tale,
He would the children send
To be brought up in faire London,
With one that was his friend.
A LOVER OF LATE.

Printed, with a few slight corrections, from the Editor's folio MS.

A LOVER of late was I,
For Cupid would have it soe,
The boy that hath never an eye,
As every man doth know:
I sighed and sobbed, and cried, alas!
For her that laughed, and called me ass.

Then knew not I what to doe,
When I saw it was in vaine
A lady soe coy to woe,
Who gave me the asse soe plaine:
Yet would I her asse freely bee,
Soe shee would helpe, and beare with mee.

An' I were as faire as shee,
Or shee were as kind as I,
What payre cold have made, as wee,
Soe prettie a sympathye:
I was as kind as shee was faire,
But for all this wee cold not paire.

Paire with her that will for mee,
With her I will never paire;
That cunningly can be coy,
For being a little faire.
The asse Ile leave to her disdainne;
And now I am myselfe againe.

Ver. 122, these . . . babes, PP. V. 13, faine, MS.

Thus wandered these poor innocents,
Till death did end their grief,
In one anothers armes they dyed,
As wanting due relief:
No burial ' this pretty' pair'
Of any man receives,
Till Robin-red-breast piously
Did cover them with leaves.

And now the heavy wrathes of God
Upon their uncle fell;
Yea, fearfull fiends did haunt his house,
His conscience felt an hell:
His barnes were fir'd, his goodes consum'd,
His landes were barren made,
His cattle dyed within the field,
And nothing with him stayd,

And in a voyage to Portugal
Two of his sonnes did dye;
And to conclude, himself was brought
To want and miserye:
He pawn'd and mortgaged all his land
Ere seven years came about.
And now at length this wicked act
Did by this means come out:

The fellowe, that did take in hand
These children for to kill,
Was for a robbery judg'd to dye,
Such was God's blessed will;
Who did confess the very truth,
As here hath been display'd:
Their uncle having dyed in gool,
Where be for debt was layd.

You that executors be made,
And overseers eke
Of children that be fatherless,
And infants mild and meek;
Take you example by this thing,
And yield to each his right,
Lest God with such like miserye
Your wicked minds requisite.
THE KING AND MILLER OF MANSFIELD.

XX.

THE KING AND MILLER OF MANSFIELD.

It has been a favourite subject with our English ballad-makers to represent our kings conversing, either by accident or design, with the meanest of their subjects. Of the former kind, besides this song of the King and the Miller, we have King Henry and the Soldier; King James I. and the Tinker; King William III. and the Forester, &c. Of the latter sort, are King Alfred and the Shepherd; King Edward IV. and the Tanner; King Henry VIII. and the Cobbler, &c. — A few of the best of these are admitted into this collection. Both the author of the following ballad, and others who have written on the same plan, seem to have copied a very ancient poem, intitled "John the Reeve," which is built on an adventure of the same kind, that happened between King Edward Longshanks and one of his Reeves or Bailiffs. This is a piece of great antiquity, being written before the time of Edward IV. and for its genuine humour, diverting incidents, and faithful picture of rustic manners, is infinitely superior to all that have been since written in imitation of it. The Editor has a copy in his ancient folio MS. but its length rendered it improper for this volume, it consisting of more than 900 lines. It contains also some corruptions, and the Editor chuses to defer its publication, in hopes that some time or other he shall be able to remove them.

The following is printed, with corrections, from the Editor's folio MS. collated with an old black-letter copy in the Pepys collection, intitled, "A pleasant ballad of King Henry II. and the Miller of Mansfield, &c."

PART THE FIRST.-

Henry, our royll king, would ride a hunting
To the green forest so pleasant and faire;
To see the harts skipping, and the buck gallantly,
Till the dark evening forc'd all to turn home. 10
Then at last, riding fast, he had lost quite
All his lords in the wood, late in the night,
Wandering thus wearilie, all alone, up and downe,
With a rude Miller he mett at the last; 15
Sir, quoth the Miller, I mean not to jest,
Yet I thinke, what I thinke, sooth for to say,
You do not lightely ride out of your way.

Why, what dost thou think of me, quoth our king merrily,
Passing thy judgment upon me so brie? 20
Good faith sayd the Miller, I mean not to flatter thee,
I guess thee to bee but some gentleman thieve;
Stand thee backe, in the darke; light not adowne,
at that I presentelye crack thy knaves crowne. 24

Thou dost abuse me much, quoth the king, saying
I am a gentleman; lodging I lacke. 25
Thou hast not quoth th' Miller, one groat in thy purse;
All thy inheritance hangs on thy backe.

• I have gold to discharge all that I call;
If it be forty pence I will pay all. 30

If thou beest a true man, then quoth the Miller,
I sware by my toll-dish, I'll lodge thee all night.
Here's my hand, quoth the king, that was I ever.
Nay, soft, quoth the Miller, thou may'st be a sprite.
Better I'll know thee, ere hands we will shake; 35
With none but honest men hands will I take.

Thus they went all along unto the millers house:
Where they were seething of puddings and souse:
The miller first enter'd in, after him went the king;
Never came bee in soe smakye a house. 40
Now, quoth hee, let me see here what you are.
Quoth the king, looke your fill, and doe not spare.

I like well thy countenance, thou hast an honest face:
With my son Richard this night thou shalt lye.
Quoth his wife, by my troth, it is a handsome youth,
Yet it's best, husband, to deal warily,
Art thou no run away, prythee, youth, tell? 45
Show me thy passport, and all shall be well.

Then our king presentelye, making lowe courtesy,
With his hatt in his hand, thus he did say; 50
I have no passport, nor never was servitor,
But a poor courtyer, rode out of my way:
And for your kindness here offered to mee,
I will requite you in everye degree,

Then to the miller his wife whisper'd secretlye, 55
Saying, It seemeth, this youth's of good kin,
Both by his apparel, and eke by his manners;
To turne him out certainlye, were a great sin.
Yea, quoth hee, you may see, he hath some grace
When he doth speake to his betters in place. 60

Well, quo'the millers wife, young man, ye're welcome
And, though I say it, well lodged shall be: here;
Fresh straw will I have, laid on thy bed so brave,
And good brown hempen sheets likewise, quoth she.

Aye, quoth the good man; and when that is done,
Thou shalt lye with no worse than our own sonne.

Nav, first, quoth Richard, good-fellowe, tell me true,
Hast thou noe creepers within thy gay hose? 70
Or art thou not troubled with the scabbest?
I pray, quoth the king, what creatures are those?
Art thou not loway, nor scabby? quoth he:

If thou beest, surely thou lyest not with mee.

* The king says this.
THE KING AND MILLER OF MANSFIELD.

This caus'd the king, suddenly, to laugh most heartily,
Till the tears trickled fast downe from his eyes.
Then to their supper were they set orderly,
With hot bag-puddings, and good apple-pies;
Nappy ale, good and stale, in a browne bowlle,
Which did about the board merrily trowle.

Here, quoth the miller, good fellowe, I drinke to thee,
And to all 'cuckholds, whereever they bee,' 80
I pledge thee, quoth our king, and thank thee heart.
For my good welcome in everye degree: [ilye
And here, in like manner, I drinke to thy sonne.
Do then, quoth Richard, and quake let it come.

Wife, quoth the miller, fetch me forth lightfoothe, 85
And of his sweetesesse a little we'll taste,
A fair vun'son pastye brought she out presentlee.
Este, quoth the miller, but, sir, make no waste.
Here's dainty lightfoothe? In faith, sayd the king,
I never before est so daintye a thing.

I wis, quoth Richard, no daintye at all it is,
For we doe eate of it everye time.
In what place, sayd our king, may he bought like to?
We never pay pennye for it, by my say: [this? 91
From merry Sherwood we fetch it home here;
Now then and we make bold with our kings deer.

Then I thinke, sayd our king, that it is venison.
Eche foole, quoth Richard, full well may know that.
Never are wee without two or three in the roof,
Very well fleshed, and excellent fat.
But, prythee, say nothing whereever thou goe;
We would not, for two pence, the king should it knowe.

Doubt not, then sayd the king, my promisest sercese;
The king shall never know more on't for mee.
A cupp of lambs-wool they dranke unto him then,
And to their beds they past presentellie.

The nobles, next morning, went all up and down,
For to seeke out the king in everie towne.
At last, at the millers 'cott,' soone they espy'd him out,
As he was mounting upon his faire steede;
To whom they came presently, falling down on their knee;
Which made the millers heart wofully bleede;
Shaking and quaking, before he stood,
Thinking he should have been hang'd, by the rood.

The king perceiving him fearfully trembling,
Drew forth his sword, but nothing he said:
The miller downe did fall, crying before them all,
Doubling the king would have cut off his head.
But he his kind courtesye for to requite,
Gave him great living, and dubb'd him a knight.

And now, my lords, quoth the king, I am determined Against St. Georges next sumptuous feast;
That this old miller, our new confirm'd knight,
With his son Richard, shall here be my guest: 10
For, in this merryment, 'tis my desire
To talke with the jolly knight, and the young squire.

When as the noble lords saw the kinges pleasantness,
They were right joyfull and glad in their hearts:
A pursuivant there was sent straighte on the business.
The which had often-times been in those parts.

When he came to the place, where they did dwell,
His message orderlye then 'gan he tell.

God save your worshippe, then said the messenger,
And grant your ladye her own hearts desire; 20
And to your sonne Richard good fortune and happiness;
That sweet, gentle, and gallant young squire.
Our king greets you well, and thus he doth say,
You must come to the court on St. George's day;

Therfore, in any case, faile not to be in place.
I wis, quoth the miller, this is an old jest:
What should we doe there? faith, I am halfe afraid.
I doubt, quoth Richard, to be hang'd at the leest.
Nay, quoth the messenger, you doe mistake;
Our king he provides a great feast for your sake.

Then sayd the miller, By my troth, messenger,
Thou hast contented my worshippe full well.
Hold here are three farthings, to quite thy gentleness,
For these happy tydings, which thou dost tell.
Let me see, hear thou mee; tell to our king,
We'll wayt on his mastershipp in everie thing.

The pursuivant smiled at their simplicitye,
And making many legs, tooke their reward;
And his leave taking with great humilitye.
To the kings court againe he repair'd;
Shewing unto his grace, merry and free,
The knighting most liberall gift and bountie.

When he was gone away, thus gan the miller say,
Here come expenses and charges indeed; [have;
Now must we needs be brave, tho' we spend all we
For of new garments we have great need:
Of horses and serving-men we must have store,
With bridles and saddles, and twentye things more.

Tushe, Sir John, quoth his wife, why should you fret, or frowne?
You shall ne'er be att no charges for mee;
For I will turne and trim up my old russet gowne,
With everye thing else as fine as may bee;
And on our mill-horses swift we will ride,
With pillowes and pannells, as we shall provide.

In this most statelie sort, rode they unto the court,
Their jolly son Richard rode foremost of all;
Who set up, for good hap, a cocks feather in his cap,
And so they jetted downe to the kings hall;
The merry old miller with hands on his side;
His wife, like maid Marian, did mince at that tide.

Ver. 57, for good hap: i. e. for good luck; they were going on an heroic expedition. Ver. 69, Maid Marian in the Morris dance, was represented by a man in woman's clothes, who was to take short steps in order to sustain the female character.
The king and his nobles that heard of their coming,
Meeting this gallant knight with his brave traine;
Welcome, sir knight, quoth he, with your gay lady:
Good Sir John Cockle, once welcome againe:
And so is the squire of courage soe free, 65
Quoth Dicke, A bots on you! do you know mee?

Quoth our king gentlye, how should I forget thee?
That wast my owne bed-fellowe, well it I wot.
Yea, sir, quoth Richard, and by the same token,
Thou with thy farthing didst make the bed hot. 70
Thou whors-son unhappy knave, then quoth the knight.
Speake cleanly to our king, or else go sh.

The king and his courtiers laugh at this heartily,
While the king taketh them both by the hand;
With the court-dames, and maides, like to the queen of spades 75
The millers wife did soe orderly stand.
A milk-maids courteysy at every word;
And downe all the folkes were set to the board.

There the king royally, in princelye majestye,
Sate at his dinner with joy and delight;
When they had eaten well, then he to jesting fell,
And in a bowle of wine dranke to the knight;
Here's to you both, in wine, ale and beer;
Thanking you heartily for my good cheer.

Quoth Sir John Cockle, I'll pledge you a pottle, 85
Were it the best ale in Nottinghamshire:
But then said our king, now I think of a thing:
Some of your lightfoote I would we had here.
Ho! ho! quoth Richard, full well I may say it,
'Tis knavery to cete it, and then to betray it.

Why art thou angry? quoth our king merrylye;
In faith, I take it now very unkind:
I thought thou wouldest pledge me in ale and wine heartily.

Quoth Dicke, You are like to stay till I have din'd:
You feed us with twatling dishes soe small;
Zounds, a blaccke-pudding is better than all.

Aye, marry, quoth our king, that were a daintye thing,
Could a man get but one here for to eate. [hose,
With that Dicke straitely arose, and pluckt one from his
Which with heat of his breech gan to sweat. 100
The king made a proffer to snatch it away:
'Tis meat for your master: good sir, you must stay.

Thus in great merriment was the time wholly spent;
And then the ladies prepared to dance.
Old Sir John Cockle, and Richard, incontinent
Unto their places the king did advance.
Here with the ladies such sport they did make,
The nobles with laughing did make their sides ake.

Many thanks for their paines did the king give them,
Asking young Richard then, if he would wed; 110
Among these ladies free, tell me which liketh thee?
Quoth he Jugg Grumball, Sir, with the red head:
She's my love, she's my life, her will I wed;
She hath sworn I shall have her maidenhead.

Then Sir John Cockle the king call'd unto him, 115
And of merry Sherwood made him o'er soer;
And gave him out of hand three hundred pound yearlye:
Take heed now you steale no more of my deer:
And once a quarter let's here have your view;
And now, Sir John Cockle, I bid you adieu. 120

XXI.

THE SHEPHERDS RESOLUTION.

This beautiful old song was written by a poet, whose name would have been utterly forgotten, if it had not been preserved by Swift, as a term of contempt. " Dryden and Wither" are coupled by him like the " Bavius and Mavius" of Virgil. Dryden however has had justice done him by posterity: and as for Wither, though of subordinate merit, that he was not altogether devoid of genius, will be judged from the following stanzas. The truth is, Wither was a very voluminous party-writer: and as his political and satirical strokes rendered him extremely popular in his life-time: so afterwards, when these were no longer relished, they totally consigned his writings to oblivion.

George Wither was born June 11, 1588, and in his younger years distinguished himself by some pastoral pieces, that were not inelegant; but growing afterwards involved in the political and religious disputes in the times of James I. and Charles I.
he employed his poetical vein in severe pasquils on the court and clergy, and was occasionally a sufferer for the freedom of his pen. In the civil war that ensued, he exerted himself in the service of the Parliament, and became a considerable sharer in the spoils. He was even one of those provincial tyrants, whom Oliver distributed over the kingdom, under the name of Major Generals; and had the fleecing of the county of Surrey: but, surviving the Restitution, he outlived both his power, and his aflu-ence; and giving vent to his chagrin in libels on the court, was long a prisoner in Newgate and the Tower. He died at length on the 5d of May, 1667.
During the whole course of his life, Wither was a continual publisher; having generally for opponent, Taylor the Water-poet. The long list of his productions may be seen in Wood's Athenae Oxon.
volum. II. His most popular satire is intitled "Abuses whipt and stript." 1613. His most poetical pieces were eclogues, intitled, " The Shepherd's Hunting," 1613,
8vo. and others printed at the end of Brown's
" Shepherd's Pipe," 1614, 8vo. The following sonnet is extracted from a long pastoral piece of his, intitled, "The Mistresse of Philaretia," 1622, 8vo.
which is said in the preface to be one of the Author's first poems; and may therefore be dated as early as any of the foregoing.
XXII.

QUEEN DIDO.

Such is the title given in the Editor's folio MS.
to this excellent old ballad, which, in the common printed copies, is inscribed, "Eneas wandering Prince of Troy." It is here given from that MS. collated with two different printed copies, both in black letter, in the Pepys collection.
The reader will smile to observe with what natural and affecting simplicity, our ancient ballad-maker has engrafted a Gothic conclusion on the classic story of Virgil, from whom, however, it is probable he had it not. Nor can it be denied, but he has dealt out his poetical justice with a more impartial hand than that celebrated poet.

When Troy towned had, for ten yeeres 'past,'
Withstood the Greekes in manfull wise,
Then did their foes encrease soe fast,
That to resist none could suffice:
Wast lye those walls, that were soe good,
And corne now grows where Troy towned stooed.

Æneas, wandering prince of Troy,
When he for land long time had sought,
At length arriving with great joy,
To mighty Carthage walls was brought;
Where Dido queene, with sumptuous feast,
Did entertaine that wandering guest.

And, as in hall at meate they sate,
The queene, desirous newes to heare,
'Savs, of thy Troys unhappy fate'
declare to me thou Trojan deare:
The heavy hap and chance soe bad,
That thou, poore wandering prince, hast had.

Ver. 1, 21, war, MS. and PP

Be shee with that goodnesse blest,
Which may merit name of Best;
If shee be not such to me,
What care I how good she be?

Cause her fortune seems too high,
Shall I play the fool and dye?
Those that beare a noble minde,
Where they want of riches find,
Thinke what with them they would doe,
That without them dare to woe;
And, unless that minde I see,
What care I how great she be?

Great or good, or kind or faire,
I will ne'er the more dispaire;
If she love me, this belieue;
I will die ere she shall grieve.
If she slight me when I woee,
I can scorne and let her goe:
If shee be not fit for me,
What care I for whom she be?

And then anon this comelye knight,
With words demure, as he cold well,
Of his unhappy ten yeares 'fight,'
Soo true a tale began to tell.
With words soe sweete, and sighs soe deepe,
That oft he made them all to weep.

And then a thousand sighes he let,
And every sigh brought teares amaine;
That where he sate the place was wet,
As though he had seen those wars again.
Soo that the queene, with ruth therfore,
Said, Worthy prince, enough, no more.

And then the darksome night drew on,
And twinkling starrs the skye bespred;
When he his doefull tale had done,
And every one was layd in bedd:
Where they full sweettly tooke their rest,
Save only Dido's boiling brest.

This silly woman never slept.
But in her chamber, all alone,
As one unhappie, alwayes wept,
And to the walls shee made her mone;
That she shold still desire in vaine
The thing, she never must obtaine.

And thus in grieffe she spent the night,
Till twinkling starrs the skye were fied,
And Phoebus, with his glistering light,
Through misty cloudes appeared red;
Then tidings came to her anon,
That all the Trojan ships were gone.
XXIII.

THE WITCHES' SONG.

The Editor thought it incumbent on him to insert some old pieces on the popular superstition concerning witches, hobgoblins, fairies, and ghosts. The last of these make their appearance in most of the tragical ballads; and in the following songs will be found some description of the former.

It is true, this song of the Witches, falling from the learned pen of Ben Jonson, is rather an extract from the various incantations of classical antiquity, than a display of the opinions of our own vulgar. But let it be observed, that a parcel of learned wise-aces had just before busied themselves on this sub-

Ver. 120, MS. Hath made my breath my life forsooke.
ROBIN GOOD-FELLOW.

ject, in compliment to King James I, whose weakness on this head is well known: and these had so ransacked all writers, ancient and modern, and so blended and kneaded together the several superstitions of different times and nations, that those of genuine English growth could no longer be traced out and distinguished.

By good luck the whimsical belief of fairies and goblins could furnish no pretences for torturing our 同胞-creatures, and therefore we have this handed down to us pure and unsophisticated.

1 witch.
I have been all day looking after
A raven feeding upon a quarter;
And, soone as she turn'd her beak to the south,
I snatch'd this morsell out of her mouth.

2 witch.
I have beene gathering wolves haires,
The madd dogges foames, and adders eares;
The spurring of a deadmans eyes:
And all since the evening starre did rise.

3 witch.
I last night lay all alone
O' the ground, to heare the mandrake grone;
And pluck't him up, though he grew full low:
And, as I had done, the cocke did crow.

4 witch.
And I ha' beene chusing out this scull
From charnell houses that were full;
From private grotts, and publike pits;
And frighted a sexton out of his wits.

5 witch.
Under a cradle I did crepe
By day; and, when the childe was a-sleepe
At night, I suck'd the breath; and rose,
And pluck'd the nodding nurse by the nose.

6 witch.
I had a dagger: what did I with that?
Killed an infant to have his fat.
A piper it got at a church-ale.
I bade him again blow wind i' the taille.

7 witch.
A murderer, yonder, was hung in chains;
The sunne and the wind had shrunkke his veins.
I bit off a sinew; I clipp'd his haire;
I brought off his ragges, that danc'd i' the ayre.

8 witch.
The scrich-owles egges and the feathers blacke,
The bloud of the frogge, and the bone in his backe
I have been getting; and made of his skin
A purset, to keepe Sir Cramion in.

9 witch.
And I ha' beene plucking (plants among)
Hemlock, henbane, adders-tongue,
Night-shade, moone-wort, libbards-bane;
And twise by the dogges was like to be tane.

10 witch.
I from the jawes of a gardiner's bitch
Did snatch these bones, and then leap'd the ditch:
Yet went I back to the house againe,
Kill'd the blacke cat, and here is the braine.

11 witch.
I went to the toad, breedes under the wall,
I charmed him out, and he came at my call;
I scratch'd out the eyes of the owle before;
I tore the batts wing: what would you have more?

DAME.
Yes: I have brought, to helpe your vows,
Horned poppie, cypresse bougges,
The fig-tree wild, that grows on tombe;
And juice, that from the larch-tree comes,
The basiliskes bloud, and the vipers skin:
And now our orgies let's begin.

XXIV.

ROBIN GOOD-FELLOW,

—alias Pucke, alias Hobgoblin, in the creed of ancient superstition, was a kind of merry sprite, whose character and achievements are recorded in this ballad, and in those well-known lines of Milton's L'Allegro, which the antiquarian Peck supposes to be owing to it:

"Tells how the drudging Goblin swet
To earn his creame-bowle duly set:
When in one night, ere glimpse of morne,
His shadowy dall hath thresh'd the corn.
That ten day-labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fiend,
And stretch'd out all the chimneys length,
Banks at the fire his hairy strength,
And crop-full out of doors he flings,
Ere the first cock his matins rings."

The reader will observe that our simple ancestors had reduced all these whimsies to a kind of system, as regular, and perhaps more consistent, than many parts of classic mythology: a proof of the extensive influence and vast antiquity of these superstitions.

Mankind, and especially the common people, could not everywhere have been so unanimously agreed concerning these arbitrary notions, if they had not prevailed among them for many ages. Indeed, a learned friend in Wales assures the Editor, that the existence of Fairies and Goblins is alluded to by the most ancient British Bards, who mention them under various names, one of the most common of which signifies "The spirits of the mountains,"
See also Preface to Song XXV.

This song, which Peck attributes to Ben Jonson (though it is not found among his works) is chiefly printed from an ancient black-letter copy in the British Museum. It seems to have been originally tended for some Masque.

This Ballad is intituled, in the old black-letter copies, "The merry Pranks of Robin Goodfellow To the tune of Dulcina," &c. (See No. XIII above.)
From Oberon, in fair ye land,
The king of ghosts and shadowes there,
Mad Robin, at his command,
Am sent to viewe the night-sports here,
What revel rout
Is kept about,
In every corner where I go,
I will o'ersSea,
And merry bee,
And make good sport, with ho, ho, ho !

More swift than lightening can I flye
About this aery welkin soone,
And, in a minutes space, deserye
Each thing that's done belowe the moone,
There's not a hag
Or ghost shall wag,
Or cry, ware Goblins! where I go ;
But Robin I
Their feates will spy,
And send them home, with ho, ho, ho !

Whene'er such wanderers I meete,
As from their night-sports they trudge home;
With counterfeiting voice I greete,
And call them on, with me to roame
Thro' woods, thro' lakes,
Thro' bogs, thro' brakes ;
Or else, unseene, with them I go,
All in the niche
To play some tricke
And frolick it, with ho, ho, ho !

Sometimes I meete them like a man ;
Sometimes, an ox, sometimes, a hound ;
And to a horse I turne me can ;
To trip and trot about them round.
But if, to ride,
My bucke they stride,
More swift than winde away I go,
Ore hedge and lands,
Thro' pools and ponds
I whirry, laughing, ho, ho, ho !

When lads and lasses merry be,
With posssets and with juncates fine ;
Unseene of all the company,
I eat their cakes and sip their wine ;
And, to make sport,
I fart and snort ;
And out the candles I do blow :
The maids I kiss ;
They shrike—Who's this ?
I answer nought, but ho, ho, ho !

Yet now and then, the maids to please,
At midnight I card up their wooll;
And while they sleepe, and take their ease,
With wheel to threads their flax I pull.
I grind at mill
Their malt up still ;
I dress their hemp, I spin their tow.
If any 'wake, And would me take,
I wend me, laughing, ho, ho, ho !

When house or harth doth sluttish lye,
I pinch the maidens black and blue ;
The bed-clothes from the bedd pull I
And lay them naked all to view.
'Twixt sleepe and wake,
Do them take,
And on the key-cold floor them throw.
If out they cry,
Then forth I fly,
And loudly laugh out, ho, ho, ho !

When any need to borrowe ought,
We lend them what they do require.
And for the use demand we nought;
Our owne is all we do desire.
If to repay,
They do delay,
Abroad amongst them then I go,
And night by night,
I them affright
With pinchings, dreams, and ho, ho, ho !

When lazie queans have noght to do,
But study how to cog and lye ;
To make debate and mischief too,
'Twixt one another secretlye :
I marke their gloze,
And it disclose,
To them whom they have wronged so,
When I have done,
I get me gone,
And leave them scolding, ho, ho, ho !

When men do traps and engins set
In loope holes, where the vermine creepe,
Who from their foldes and houses, get
Their duckes and geese, and lambe and sheepe :
I spy the gin,
And enter in,
And seeme a vermine taken so ;
But when they there
Approach me neare,
I leap out laughing, ho, ho, ho !

By wells and rills, in meadowes greene,
We nightly dance our hey-day guise;
And to our fairye king and queene
We chant our moon-light minstrelseys.
When larks gin sing,
Away we flie;
And babes new borne steal as we go,
And elles in bed
We leave instead,
And wend us laughing, ho, ho, ho !

From hag-bred Merlin's time have I
Thus nightly rev'ld'to and fro :
And for my pranks men call me by
The name of Robin Good-fellow.
Fiends, ghosts, and sprites, 115
Who haunt the nightes,
The hags and goblins do me know ;
And beldames old
My feates have told ;
So Yale, Yale; ho, ho, ho !

246 ROBIN GOOD-FELLOW.
THE FAIRIES FAREWELL.

XXV.

THE FAIRY QUEEN.

We have here a short display of the popular belief concerning Fairies. It will afford entertainment to a contemplative mind to trace these whimsical opinions up to their origin. Whoever considers, how early, how extensively, and how formally, they have prevailed in these nations, will not readily assent to the hypothesis of those who fetch them from the East so late as the time of the Croisades. Whereas it is well known that our Saxon ancestors, long before they left their German forests, believed the existence of a kind of diminutive demons, or middle species between men and spirits, whom they called Duergar or Dwarfs, and to whom they attributed many wonderful performances, far exceeding human art. Vid. Hervarar Saga Olaj Verelj. 1675. Hickes Thesaur. &c.

This Song is given (with some corrections by another copy) from a book intituled "The Mysteries of Love and Eloquence, &c." Lond. 1649. 8vo.

Come, follow, follow me,
You, fairy elves that be:
Which circle on the greene,
Come follow Mah your queene.
Hand in hand let's dance around,
For this place is fairy ground.

When mortals are at rest,
And snoring in their nest;
Unheard, and unespy'd,
Through key-holes we do glide;
Over tables, stools and shelves,
We trip it with our fairy elves.

And, if the house be foul
With platter, dish, or bowl,
Up stairs we nimbly, creep,
And find the sluts asleep:

There we pinch their armes and thighes;
None escapes, nor none espies.

But if the house be swept,
And from uncleanness kept,
We praise the household maid,
And duely she is paid:
For we use before we goe
To drop a tester in her shoe.

Upon a mushrooms head
Our table-cloth we spread;
A grain of rye, or wheat,
Is manchet, which we eat;
Pearly drops or dew we drink
In acorn cups fill'd to the brink.

The brains of nightingales,
With unctuous fat of snailes,
Between two cockles stew'd,
Is meat that's easily chew'd;
Tales of worms, and narrow of mice
Do make a dish, that's wonderous nice.

The grasshopper, gun, and fly,
Serve for our minstrelie;
Grace said, we dance a while,
And so the time beguile:
And if the moon doth hide her head,
The glowe-worm lights us home to bed.

On tops of dewie grasse
So nimbly do we passe,
The young and tender stalk
Ne'er bends when we do walk;
Yet in the morning may be seen
Where we the night before have been.

XXVI.

THE FAIRIES FAREWELL.

This humorous old song fell from the hand of the witty Dr. Corbet (afterwards Bishop of Norwich, &c.) and is printed from his Poetica Stromata, 1648, 12mo. (compared with the third edition of his poems, 1672.) It is there called "A proper new Ballad, entitled, The Fairies Farewell, or God-a-mercy Will, to be sung or whistled to the tune of The Meddow Brow, by the learned; by the unlearned, to the tune of Fortune."

The departure of Fairies is here attributed to the abolition of monkery: Chaucer has, with equal humour, assigned a cause the very reverse, in his "Wife of Bath's Tale."

"In olde dayes of the King Artour,
Of which that Bretons spoken gret honour,
All was this lond fulfilled of faerie;
The elf-queue, with hire joly compagne
Danced ful oft in many a grene mede.
This was the old opinion as I rede;
I spoke of many hundred yeres ago,
But now can no man see non elves mo,
For now the grete charites and prayeres
Of limitoures and other holy freeres,
That serchen every land and every streme,
As thikke as motes in the some beme,
Blissing bailes, chambers, kichenes, and boures,
Citees and burghes, castels high, and toures,
Thropes and bernes, shepenes and dauries,
This makest that ther ben no faeries:
For ther as wont to walken was an elf,
Ther walketh now the limitour himself."

But if the house be swept,
And from uncleanness kept,
We praise the household maid,
And duely she is paid:
For we use before we goe
To drop a tester in her shoe.

Upon a mushrooms head
Our table-cloth we spread;
A grain of rye, or wheat,
Is manchet, which we eat;
Pearly drops or dew we drink
In acorn cups fill'd to the brink.

The brains of nightingales,
With unctuous fat of snailes,
Between two cockles stew'd,
Is meat that's easily chew'd;
Tales of worms, and narrow of mice
Do make a dish, that's wonderous nice.

The grasshopper, gun, and fly,
Serve for our minstrelie;
Grace said, we dance a while,
And so the time beguile:
And if the moon doth hide her head,
The glowe-worm lights us home to bed.

On tops of dewie grasse
So nimbly do we passe,
The young and tender stalk
Ne'er bends when we do walk;
Yet in the morning may be seen
Where we the night before have been.
In undermeles and in morweninges,
And sayth his Matines and his holy things,
As he goth in his limitation.
Women may now go safely up and doun,
In every bush, and under every tree,
Ther is no other incubus but he,
And he ne will don hem no dishonour."

Tyrv Witt's Chaucer, I. p. 255.

Dr. Richard Corbet, having been bishop of Oxford about three years, and afterwards as long bishop of Norwich, died in 1635, atat 52.

FAREWELL rewards and Fairies!

Good housewives now may say;
For now foule sluts in dairies,
Doe fare as well as they:
And though they sweepe their hearths no less
Than mayds were wont to doe,
Yet who of late for cleanliness
Finds sixe-pence in her shoe?

Lament, lament old Abbies,
The fairies lost command;
They did but change priests babies,
But some have chang'd your land:
And all your children stoln from thence
Are now growne Puritaines,
Who live as changelings ever since,
For love of your demaines.

At morning and at evening both
You merry were and glad,
So little care of sleep and sloth,
These prettie ladies had.
When Tom came home from labour,
Or Ciss to milking rose,
Then merrily went their labour,
And nimbly went their toes.

Witness those rings and roundelayes
Of theirs, which yet remaine;
Were footed in Queene Maries days
On many a grassy playne.
But since of late Elizabeth
And later James came in;
They never dance'd on any heath,
As when the time hath bin.

By which wee note the fairies
Were of the old profession:
Their songs were Ave Marias,
Their dances were procession.
But now, alas! they all are dead,
Or gone beyond the seas,
Or farther for religion fled,
Or else they take their ease.

A tell-tale in their company
They never could endure;
And whoso kept not secretly
Their mirth, was punish'd sure:
It was a just and Christian deed
To pinch such blacke and blue:
O how the common-wealth doth need
Such justices as you!

Now they have left our quaters;
A Register they have,
Who can preserve their charters,
A man both wise and grave.

An hundred of their merry pranks
By one that I could name
Are kept in store; con twenty thanks
To William for the same.
To William Churne of Staffordshire
Give laud and praises due,
Who every meale can mend your cheare
With takes both old and true:
To William all give audience,
And pray yee for his noble:
For all the fairies evidence
Were lost, if it were addle.

 After these songs on the fairies, the reader may be curious to see the manner in which they were formerly invoked and bound to human service. In Ashmole's collection of MSS. at Oxford [Num. 8259, 1406, 2.] are the papers of some Alchymist, which contain a variety of Incantations and Forms of Conjuring both Fairies, Witches, and Demons, principally, as it should seem, to assist him in his great work of transmuting metals. Most of them are too impious to be reprinted; but the two following may be very innocently laughed at.

Whoever looks into Ben Jonson's "Alchymist," will find that these impostors, among their other secrets, affected to have a power ouer Fairies: and that they were commonly expected to be seen in a christol glass appears from that extraordinary book, "The Relation of Dr. John Dee's actions with Spirits, 1639," folio.

"An excellent way to get a Fayrie. (For myself I call Margaret Barmnce; but this will obtaine any one that is not already bownd.)"

"First, get a broad square cristall or Venice glass, in length and breadth three inches. Then lay that glass or cristall in the bloud of a white henne, three Wednesdayes, or three Fridays. Then take it out, and wash it with holy aq, and fumigate it. Then take three hazle sticks, or wands of an yeare groth: pill them fayre and white; and make 'them' soe longe, as you write the Spirits name, or Fayries name, which you call, three times on every sticke being made flat on one side. Then bury them under some hill, whereas you suppose Fayries haunt, the Wednesday before you call her: and the Friday followinge take them uppe, and call her at eight or three or ten of the clocke, which be good planetts and hours for that turne: but when you call, be in cleane life, and turne thy face towards the east. And when you have her, bind her to that stone or glass."

"An unguent to annoynt under the eyelids, and upon the eyelids eveninge and morninge: but especially when you call; or find your sight not perfect.

"R. A pint of sallet-oyle, and put it into a vial glass: but first wash it with rose-water, and marygold-water: the flowers 'to' be gathered towards the east. Wash it till the oyle come white; then put it into the glasse, ut supra: and then put thereto the budds of holyhocke, the flowers of marygold, the flowers or toppes of wild thyme, the budds of young hazel: and the thyme must be gathered neare the side of a hill where Fayres use to be: and 'take' the grasse of a fayrie throne, there. All these put into the oyle, into the glasse: and set it to dissolve three daies in the sunne, and then keep it for thy use; ut supra."
The Birth of St. George.

After this receipt for the unguent follows a Form of Incantation, wherein the Alchymist conjures a Fairy, named Elaby Gathon, to appear to him in that chrystall glass, meekly and mildly; to resolve him truly in all manner of questions; and to be obedient to all his commands, under pain of damnation, &c.

One of the vulgar opinions about Fairies is, that they cannot be seen by human eyes, without a particular charm exerted in favour of the person who is to see them: and that they strike with blindness such as, having the gift of seeing them, take notice of them mal a-propos.

As for the hazle sticks mentioned above, they were to be probably of that species called the "Witch Hazle," which received its name from this manner of applying it in incantations.

The End of Book the Second.

Series the Third.

Book III.

I.

The Birth of St. George.

The incidents in this, and the other ballad of "St. George and the Dragon," are chiefly taken from the old story-book of the Seven Champions of Christendome; which, though now the playing of children, was once in high repute. Bp. Hall, in his Satires, published in 1597, ranks "St. George's sorell, and his cross of blood," among the most popular stories of his time; and an ingenious critic thinks that Spencer himself did not disdain to borrow hints from it; though I much doubt whether this popular romance were written so early as the Faery Queen.

The Seven Champions, though written in a wild inflated style, contains some strong Gothic painting; which seems for the most part, copied from the metrical romances of former ages. At least the story of St. George and the fair Sabra is taken almost verbatim from the old poetical legend of "Sir Bevis of Hampton."

This very antique poem was in great fame in Chaucer's time [see above pag. 220], and is so continued till the introduction of printing, when it ran through several editions, two of which are in black letter. 4to. "imprinted by Wylym Copland," without date; containing great variations.

* Mr. Wharton. Vid, Observations on the Fairy Queen, 2 vol. 1762, 12mo. passim.
Sir Bevis's dragon is evidently the parent of that in the Seven Champions, see Chap. III. viz. "The dragon no sooner had a sight of him [St. George] but he gave such a terrible peal, as though it had thundered in the elements. . . . Betwixt his shoulders and his tail were fifty feet in distance, his scales glistering as bright as silver, but far more hard than brass; his belly of the colour of gold, but bigger than a tun. Thus wetter he from his den, &c. . . . The champion . . . gave the dragon such a thrust with his spear, that it shivered in a thousand pieces: whereat the furious dragon so fiercely smote him with his venomous tail, that down fell man and horse: in which fall two of St. George's ribs were so bruised, &c. . . . St. George smote the dragon under the wing where it was tender without scale, whereby his good sword Ascalon with an easie passage went to the very hilt through both the dragon's heart, liver, bone, and blood.—Then St. George cut off the dragon's head, and pitcht it upon the truncheon of a spear, &c."

The History of the Seven Champions, being written just before the decline of books of chivalry, was never, I believe, translated into any foreign language: but "Le Roman de Beuves de Hantonne" was published at Paris in 1502, 4to. Let. Gothique.

The learned Selden tells us, that about the time of the Norman invasion was Bevis famous with the title of Earl of Southampton, whose residence was at Duncton in Wiltshire: but he observes, that the monkish enlargements of his story have made his very existence doubted. See Notes on Poly-Olbion, Song III.

This hath also been the case of St. George himself, whose martial history is allowed to be apocryphal. But, to prove that there really existed an orthodox Saint of this name (although little or nothing, it seems, is known of his genuine story) is the subject of "An Historical and Critical Inquiry into the Existence and Character of Saint George, &c. by the Rev. J. Milner, F.S.A. 1792, 8vo."

The Equestrian Figure worn by the Knights of the Garter, has been understood to be an emblem of the Christian warrior, in his spiritual armour, vanquishing the old serpent.

But on this subject the inquisitive reader may consult "A Dissertation on the Original of the Equestrian Figure of the George and of the Garter, ensigns of the most noble order of that name. Illustrated with copper-plates. By John Pettingal, A.M. Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, London, 1735," 4to. This learned and curious work the author of the Historical and Critical Inquiry would have done well to have seen.

It cannot be denied, but that the following ballad is for the most part modern: for which reason it would have been thrown to the end of the volume, had not its subject procured it a place here.

LISTEN, lords, in bower and hall,
I sing the wonderous birth
Of brave St. George, whose valorous arm
Rid monsters from the earth:

Distressed ladies to relieve
He travell'd many a day;
In honour of the Christian faith,
Which shall endure for aye.

In Coventry sometime did dwell
A knight of worthy fame,
High steward of this noble realm;
Lord Albert was his name.

He had to wif with princely dame,
Whose beauty did excell,
This virtuous lady, being with child,
In sudden sadness fell:

For thirty nights no sooner sleep
Had clos'd her wakeful eyes,
But, lo! a foul and fearful dream
Her fancy would surprize:

She dreamt a dragon fierce and fell
Conceiv'd within her womb;
Whose mortal fangs her body rent
Ere he to life could come.

All woe-begone, and sad was she;
She nourish'd constant woe;
Yet strove to hide it from her lord,
Lest he should sorrow know.

In vain she strove; her tender lord,
Who watch'd her slightest look,
Discover'd soon her secret pain,
And soond that pain partook.

And when to him the fearful cause
She weeping did impart,
With kindest speech he strove to heal
The anguish of her heart.

Be comforted, my lady dear,
Those pearly drops refrain;
Betide me weal, betide me woe,
I'll try to ease thy pain.

And for this foul and fearful dream,
That causeth all thy woe,
Trust me I'll travel far away
But I'll the meaning knowe.

Then giving many a fond embrace,
And shedding many a teare,
To the weird lady of the woods,
He purpos'd to repaire.

To the weird lady of the woods,
Full long and many a day,
Thro' lonely shades and thickets rough
He winds his weary way.

At length he reach'd a dreary dell
With dismal yews o'erhanging;
Where cypress spred its mournful boughs,
And pois'nous nightshade sprung.

No cheerful gleams here pierc'd the gloom,
He hears no cheerful sound;
But shrill night-ravens' yelling scream,
And serpents hissing round.

The shriek of fiends and damned ghosts
Ran howling thro' his ear;
A chilling horror froze his heart,
Tho' all un'dus't to fear
Three times he strives to win his way, 65
And pierce those sickly dews:
Three times to bear his trembling corse
His knocking knees refuse.

At length upon his beating breast
He signs the holy cross;
And, rousing up his wonted might,
He treads th' unhallowed mosses.

Beneath a pendant craggy cliff,
All vailed like a grave,
And opening in the solid rock,
He found the enchanted cave.

An iron gate clos'd up the mouth,
All hideous and forlorn;
And, fasten'd by a silver chain,
Hear hung a brazed horne.

Then offering up a secret prayer,
Three times he blows amainne:
Three times a deep and hollow sound
Did answer him againe.

"Sir knight, thy lady beares a son,
Who, like a dragon bright,
Shall prove most dreadful to his foes,
And terrible in fight.

"His name advanc'd in future times
On banners shall be worn:
But lo! thy lady's life must passe
Before he can be born."

All sore opprest with fear and doubt
Long time Lord Albert stood;
At length he winds his doubtful way
Back thro' the dreary wood.

Eager to clasp his lovely dame
Then fast he travels back:
But when he reach'd his castle gate,
His gate was hung with black.

In every court and hall he found
A sullen silence reign'd;
Save where, amid the lonely towers,
He heard her maidens plaine;

And bitterly lament and weep,
With many a grievous groane:
Then sore his bleeding heart misgave,
His lady's life was gone.

With faltering step he enters in,
Yet half afraid to goe;
With trembling voice asks why they grieve,
Yet fears the cause to knowe.

"Three times the sun hath rose and set;"
They said, then stopt to weep:
"Since heaven hath laid thy lady deare
In death's eternal sleep.

"For, ah! in travel sore she fell
So sore that she must dye;
Unless some shrewd and cunning leech
Could ease her presentlye."
II.

ST. GEORGE AND THE DRAGON.

The following ballad is given (with some corrections) from two ancient black-letter copies in the Pepys Collection: one of which is in 12mo, the other in folio.

Or Hector's deeds did Homer sing;
And of the sack of stately Troy,
What griefs fair Helena did bring,
Which was Sir Paris' only joy:
And by my pen I will recite
St. George's deeds, an English knight.

Against the Sarazens so rude
Fought he full long and many a day;
Where many gyaunts he subdu'd,
In honour of the Christian way:
And after many adventures past
To Egypt land he came at last.

Now, as the story plain doth tell,
Within that country there did rest
A dreadful dragon fierce and fell,
Whereby they were full sore oppress'd,
Who by his poisonous breath each day,
Did many of the city slay.

The grief whereof did grow so great
Throughout the limits of the land,
That they were wise men did intreat
To shew their cunning out of hand;
What way they might this hind destroy,
That did the country thus annoy.

The wise men all before the king
This answer fram'd incontinent;
The dragon none to death might bring
By any means they could invent;
His skin more hard than brass was found,
That sword nor spear could pierce nor wound.

When this the people understood,
They eryed out most piteously,
The dragon's breath infects their blood,
That every day in heaps they dye:
Among them such a plague it bred,
The living scarce could bury the dead.

No means there were, as they could hear,
For to appease the dragon's rage,
But to present some virgin clear,
Whose blood his fury might asswage;
Each day he would a maiden eat,
For to allay his hunger great.

This thing by art the wise-men found,
Which truly must observed be;
Wherefore throughout the city round
A virgin pure of good degree
Was by the king's commission still Taken up to serve the dragon's will.

Thus did the dragon every day
Untimely crop some virgin flow'r,
Till all the maids were worn away,
And none were left him to devour:
Saving the king's fair daughter bright,
Her father's only heart's delight.

Then came the officers to the king
That heavy message to declare,
Which did his heart with sorrow sting;
She is, quoth he, my kingdom's heir:
O let us all be poisoned here,
Ere she should die, that is my dear.

Then rose the people presently,
And to the king in rage they went;
They said his daughter dear should dye,
The dragon's fury to prevent:
Our daughters all are dead, quoth they,
And have been made the dragon's prey:

And by their blood we rescued were,
And thou hast sav'd thy life thereby;
And now in sooth it is but fair,
For us thy daughter soould die.
O save my daughter said the king;
And let me feel the dragon's sting.

Then fell fair Sabra on her knee,
And to her father dear did say,
O father, strive not thus for me,
But let me be the dragon's prey;
It may be for my sake alone
This plague upon the land was thrown.
'Tis better I should dye, she said,
Than all your subjects perish quite;
Perhaps the dragon here was laid,
For my offence to work his spite:
And after he hath sucked my gore,
Your land shall feel the grief no more.

What hast thou done, my daughter dear,
For to deserve this heavy scourge?
It is my fault, as may appear,
Which makes the gods our state to purge;
Then ought I die, to stint the strife,
And to preserve thy happy life.

Like mad-men, all the people cried,
Thy death to us can do no good;
Our safety only doth abide
In making her the dragon's food.
Lo! here I am, I come, quoth she,
Therefore do what you will with me.

Nay stay, dear daughter, quoth the queen,
And as thou art a virgin bright,
That last for vertue famous been,
So let me clathe thee all in white;
And crown thy head with flowers sweet,
An ornament for virgins meet.

And when she was attired so,
According to her mother's mind,
Unto the stake then did she go;
To which her tender limbs they bind:
And being bound to stake a thrall,
She bade farewell unto them all.

Farewell, my father dear, quoth she,
And my sweet mother meek and mild;
Take you no thought nor weep for me,
For you may have another child:
Since for my country's good I dye,
Death I receive most willingely.

The king and queen and all their train
With weeping eyes went then their way
And let their daughter there remain,
To be the hungry dragon's prey:
But as she did there weeping lye,
Behold St. George came riding by.

And seeing there a lady bright
So rudely tyed unto a stake,
As well became a valiant knight,
He straight to her his way did take:
Tell me, sweet maiden, then quoth he,
What caufit thus abuseth thee?

And, lo! by Christ his cross I vow,
Which here is figured on my breast,
I will revenge it on his brow,
And break my lance upon his chest:
And speaking thus whereas he stood,
The dragon issued from the wood.

The lady that did first espy
The dreadful dragon coming so,
Unto St. George aloud did cry.

Here comes that cursed fiend quoth she,
That soon will make an end of me.

St. George then looking round about,
The fiery dragon soon espy'd,
And like a knight of courage stout,
Against him did most fiercely ride;
And with such blows he did him greet,
He fell beneath his horse's feet.

For with his lance that was so strong,
As he came gaping in his face,
In at his mouth he thrust along;
For he could pierce no other place:
And thus within the lady's view
This mighty dragon straight he slew.

The savour of his poisoned breath
Could do this holy knight no harm.
Thus he the lady sav'd from death,
And home he led her by the arm;
Which when King Ptolemy did see,
There was great mirth and melody.

When as that valiant champion there
Had slain the dragon in the field,
To court he brought the lady fair,
Which to their hearts much joy did yield.
He in the court of Egypt said
Till he most falsely was betray'd.

That lady dearly lov'd the knight,
He countéd her his only joy;
But when their love was brought to light,
It turn'd unto their great annoy:
Th' Morocco king was in the court,
Who to the orchard did resort,

Dayly to take the pleasant air,
For pleasure sake he us'd to walk,
Under a wall he oft did hear
St. George with Lady Sabra talk:
Their love he shew'd unto the king,
Which to St. George great woe did bring.

Those kings together did devise
To make the Christian knight away,
With letters him in courteous wise
They straightway sent to Persia:
But wrote to the sophy him to kill,
And treacherously his blood to spill.

Thus they for good did him reward
With evil, and most subtilly
By such vile meanses they had regard
To work his death most cruelly;
Who, as through Persia land he rode,
With zeal destroy'd each idol god.

For which offence he straight was thrown
Into a dungeon dark and deep;
Where, when he thought his wrongs upon,
He bitterly did wail and weep:
Yet like a knight of courage stout,
At length his way he digged out.

Three grooms of the King of Persia
By night this valiant champion slew,
Though he had fasted many a day;
And then away from thence he flew
LOVE WILL FIND OUT THE WAY.

On the best steed the sophy had;
Which when he knew he was full mad.

Towards Christendom he made his flight,
But met a gyant by the way,
With whom in combat he did fight
Most valiantly a summer's day:
Who yet, for all his bats of steel,
Was forc'd the sting of death to feel.

Back o'er the seas with many bands
Of warlike soldiery soon he past,
Vowing upon those heathen lands
To work revenge; which at the last,
Ere thrice three years were gone and spent,
He wroug'd unto his heart's content.

Save onely Egypt land he spar'd
For Sabra bright her only sake,
And, ere for her he had regard,
He meant a tryal kind to make:
Mean while the king, o'ercome in field,
Unto saint George did quickly yield.

Then straight Morocco's king he slew,
And took fair Sabra to his wife,
But meant to try if she were true
Ere with her he would lead his life;
And, tho' he had her in his train,
She did a virgin pure remain.

Toward England then that lovely dame
The brave St. George conducted strait,
An eunuch also with them came,
Who did upon the lady wait;
These three from Egypt went alone.
Now mark St. George's valour shown.

When as they in a forest were,
The lady did desire to rest:
Mean while St. George to kill a deer,
For their repast did think it best:

Leaving her with the eunuch there,
Whilst he did go to kill the deer.

But lo! all in his absence came
Two hungry lions fierce and fell,
And tore the eunuch on the same
In pieces small, the truth to tell;
Down by the lady then they laid,
Whereby they shew'd, she was a maid.

But when he came from hunting back,
And did behold this heavy chance,
Then for his lovely virgin's sake
His courage strait he did advance,
And came into the lions sight,
Who ran at him with all their might.

Their rage did him no whit dismay,
Who, like a stout and valiant knight,
Did both the hungry lions slay
Within the Lady Sabra's sight:
Who all this while sad and demure,
There stood most like a virgin pure.

Now when St. George did surely know
This lady was a virgin true,
His heart was glad, that erst was woe,
And all his love did soon renew:
He set her on a palfrey steed,
And towards England came with speed.

Where being in short space arriv'd
Unto his native dwelling place;
Therein with his dear love he liv'd,
And fortune did his nuptials grace:
They many years of joy did see,
And led their lives at Coventry.

III.

LOVE WILL FIND OUT THE WAY.

This excellent song is ancient: but we could only give it from a modern copy.

Over the mountains,
And over the waves;
Under the fountains,
And under the graves;
Under floods that are deepest,
Which Neptune obey;
Over rocks that are steepest,
Love will find out the way.

Where there is no place
For the glow-worm to lye;
Where there is no space
For receipt of a fly;

Where the midge dares not venture,
Lest herself fast she hay;
If love come, he will enter,
And soon find out his way.

You may esteem him
A child for his might;
Or you may deem him
A coward from his flight;
But if she, whom love doth honour,
Be conseed'd from the day,
Set a thousand guards upon her,
Love will find out the way.

Some think to lose him,
By having him confin'd;
And some do suppose him,
Poor thing, to be blind;

Where the best steed the sophy had;
Which when he knew he was full mad.

Towards Christendom he made his flight,
But met a gyant by the way,
With whom in combat he did fight
Most valiantly a summer's day:
Who yet, for all his bats of steel,
Was forc'd the sting of death to feel.

Back o'er the seas with many bands
Of warlike soldiery soon he past,
Vowing upon those heathen lands
To work revenge; which at the last,
Ere thrice three years were gone and spent,
He wroug'd unto his heart's content.

Save onely Egypt land he spar'd
For Sabra bright her only sake,
And, ere for her he had regard,
He meant a tryal kind to make:
Mean while the king, o'ercome in field,
Unto saint George did quickly yield.

Then straight Morocco's king he slew,
And took fair Sabra to his wife,
But meant to try if she were true
Ere with her he would lead his life;
And, tho' he had her in his train,
She did a virgin pure remain.

Toward England then that lovely dame
The brave St. George conducted strait,
An eunuch also with them came,
Who did upon the lady wait;
These three from Egypt went alone.
Now mark St. George's valour shown.

When as they in a forest were,
The lady did desire to rest:
Mean while St. George to kill a deer,
For their repast did think it best:

Leaving her with the eunuch there,
Whilst he did go to kill the deer.

But lo! all in his absence came
Two hungry lions fierce and fell,
And tore the eunuch on the same
In pieces small, the truth to tell;
Down by the lady then they laid,
Whereby they shew'd, she was a maid.

But when he came from hunting back,
And did behold this heavy chance,
Then for his lovely virgin's sake
His courage strait he did advance,
And came into the lions sight,
Who ran at him with all their might.

Their rage did him no whit dismay,
Who, like a stout and valiant knight,
Did both the hungry lions slay
Within the Lady Sabra's sight:
Who all this while sad and demure,
There stood most like a virgin pure.

Now when St. George did surely know
This lady was a virgin true,
His heart was glad, that erst was woe,
And all his love did soon renew:
He set her on a palfrey steed,
And towards England came with speed.

Where being in short space arriv'd
Unto his native dwelling place;
Therein with his dear love he liv'd,
And fortune did his nuptials grace:
They many years of joy did see,
And led their lives at Coventry.
LORD THOMAS AND FAIR ANNET.

But if ne'er so close ye wall him, 30
Do the best that you may,
Blind love, if so ye call him,
Will find out his way.

You may train the eagle
To stoop to your list;

Or you may inveigle
The phœnix of the east;
The lioness, ye may move her
To give o'er her prey;
But you'll ne'er stop a lover:
He will find out his way.

---seems to be composed (not without improvements) out of two ancient English ones, printed in the former part of this volume. See book I. ballad XV. and book II. ballad IV.—If this had been the original, the authors of those two ballads would hardly have adopted two such different stories: besides, this contains enlargements not to be found in either of the others. It is given, with some corrections, from a MS. copy transmitted from Scotland.

LORD THOMAS and fair Annet
Sate a' day on a hill;
When night was cum, and sun was sett,
They had not talkt their fill.

Lord Thomas said a word in jest,
Fair Annet took it ill:
"A'! I will nevir wed a wife
Against my sin friends will.

Gif ye wall nevir wed a wife,
A' wife wull neir wed yee.
Sae he is bame to tell his mither,
And knelt upon his knee:

O rede, O rede, mither, he says,
A gude rede gie to me;
O sal I tak the nut-browne bride,
And let faire Annet bee?

The nut-browne bride haes gowd and gear,
Fair Annet she has gat nane,
And the little beauty fair Annet has,
O it wull soon be gane!

And he has till his brother gane:
Now, brother, rede ye mee;
A' sal I marrie the nut-browne bride,
And let faire Annet bee?

The nut-browne bride has oxen, brother,
The nut-browne bride has kye;
I wad bae ye marrie the nut-browne bride,
And cast faire Annet bye.

Her oxen may dye i' the house, Billie,
And her kye into the byre;
And I sall hae nothing to my sell,
Bot a fat fadge by the fye.

And he has till his sister gane:
Now, sister, rede ye mee;
O sal I marrie the nut-browne bride,
And set faire Annet free?

Ise rede ye tak fair Annet, Thomas,
And let the browne bride alane;
Least ye sould sigh and say, Alace!
What is this we brought hame?

No, I will tak my mithers, counsel,
And marrie me owt o' hand;
And I will tak the nut-browne bride;
Fair Annet may leve the land.

Up then rose fair Annets father
Twa hours or it wer day,
And he is gane into the bower,
Wherein fair Annet lay.

Rise up, rise up, fair Annet, he says,
Put on your silken sheene;
Let us gae to St. Maries kirke,
And see that rich weddeen.

My maides, gae to my dressing-room,
And dress to me my hair;
Whair-eir yee laid a plait before,
See yee lay ten times mair.

My maids, gae to my dressing-room,
And dress to me my smock;
The one half is o' the hollond fine,
The other o' needle-work.

The horse fair Annet rade upon
He amblit like the wind,
Wi' siller he was shod before,
W' burning gowd behind.

Four and twantye siller bells
Wer a' tyed till his mane,
And yae tift o' the norland wind,
They tinkled ane by ane.

Four and twantye gay gude knichts
Rade by fair Annets side,
And four and twantye fair ladis,
As gin she had bin a bride.

And when she cam to Maries kirk,
She sat on Maries stean:
The cleading that fair Annet had on
It skinkled in their een.

And when she cam into the kirk,
She shimmer'd like the sun;
The belt that was about her waist,
Was a' wi' pearles bedone.
She sat her by the nut-browne bride,
And her een they wer sae clear,
Lord Thomas he clean forgot the bride,
Whan fair Annet she drew near.

He had a rose into his hand,
And he gave it kisses three,
And reaching by the nut-browne bride.
Laid it on fair Annets knee.

Up than spak the nut-browne bride,
She spak wi' meikle spite;
And whair ye that rose-water,
That does mak yee sae white?

O I did get the rose-water
Whair ye wull neir get none,
For I did get that very rose-water
Into my mithers wame.

The bride she drew a long bodkin,
Frae out her gay head-gear,
And strake fair Annet unto the heart,
That word she nevir spak mair.

Lord Thomas he saw fair Annet wex pale,
Aud marvellt what mote bee:
But when he saw her dear hearts blude,
A' wood-wroth wexed hee.

He drew his dagger, that was sae sharp,
That was sae sharp and meet,
And drave into the nut-browne bride,
That fell deid at his feit.

Now stay for me, dear Annet, he sed,
Now stay, my dear, he cry'd;
Then strake the dagger untilt his heart,
And fell deid by her side.

Lord Thomas was buried without kirk-wa,
Fair Annet within the quiere;
And o' the tane thair grew a birk,
The other a bonny briere.

And ay they grew, and ay they threw,
As they wad faine be neare;
And by this ye may ken right weil,
They were twa luvers deare.

V.

UNFADING BEAUTY.

This little beautiful sonnet is reprinted from a small volume of "Poems by Thomas Carew, Esq., one of the gentlemen of the privie-chamber, and sewer in ordinary to his majesty (Charles L.) Lond. 1640." This elegant and almost-forgotten writer, whose poems have been deservedly revived, died, in the prime of his age, in 1639.

In the original follows a third stanza; which, not being of general application, nor of equal merit, I have ventured to omit.

Her, that loves a rosie cheeke,
Or a corall lip admires,

Or from star-like eyes doth seeke
Fuell to maintaine his fires,
As old time makes these decay,
So his flames must waste away.

But a smooth and stedfast mind,
Gentle thoughts, and calme desires,
Hearts with equal love combin'd,
Kindle never-dying fires:
Where these are not, I despise
Lovely cheekes, or lips, or eyes.

VI.

"GEORGE BARNWELL.

The subject of this ballad is sufficiently popular from the modern play which is founded upon it. This was written by George Lillo, a jeweller of London, and first acted about 1730.—As for the ballad, it was printed at least as early as the middle of the last century.

It is here given from three old printed copies, which exhibit a strange intermixture of Roman and black letter. It is also collated with another copy in the Ashmole Collection at Oxford, which is thus intitled, "An excellent ballad of George Barnwell, an apprentice of London, who . thrice robbed his master and murdered his vncle in Ludlow." The tune is "The Merchant." This tragical narrative seems to relate a real fact; but when it happened I have not been able to discover.

THE FIRST PART.

All y outh of fair England
That dwell both far and near,
Regard my story that I tell,
And to my song give ear.
A London lad I was,
A merchant's prentice bound;
My name George Barnwell; that did spend
My master many a pound.

Take heed of harlots then,
And their enticing trains;
For by that means I have been brought
To hang alive in chains.

As I, upon a day,
Was walking through the street
About my master's business,
A wanton I did meet.

A gallant dainty dame,
And sumptuous in attire;
With smiling look she greeted me,
And did my name require.

Which when I had declar'd,
She gave me then a kiss,
And said, if I would come to her,
I should have more than this.

Fair mistress, then quoth I,
If I the place may know,
This evening I will be with you,
For I abroad must go.

To gather monies in,
That are my master's due:
And ere that I do home return,
I'll come and visit you.

Good Barnwell, then quoth she,
Do thou to Shoreditch come,
And ask for Mrs. Millwood's house,
Next door unto the Gun.

And trust me on my truth,
If thou keep touch with me,
My dearest friend, as my own heart
Thou shalt right welcome be.

Thus parted we in peace,
And home I passed right;
Then went abroad, and gathered in,
By six o'clock at night,

An hundred pound and one:
With bag under my arm
I went to Mrs. Millwood's house,
And thought on little harm;

And knocking at the door,
Straightway herself came down;
Rustling in most brave attire,
With hood and silken gown.

Who, through her beauty bright,
So gloriously did shine,
That she amaz'd my dazzling eyes,
She seemed so divine.

She took me by the hand,
And with a modest grace
Welcome, sweet Barnwell, then quoth she,
Unto this homely place.

And since I have thee found
As good as thy word to be;
A homely supper, ere we part,
Thou shalt take here with me.

O pardon me, quoth I,
Fair mistress, I you pray;
For why, out of my master's house,
So long I dare not stay.

Alas, good sir, she said,
Are you so strictly ty'd,
You may not with your dearest friend
One hour or two abide?

Faith, then the case is hard;
If it be so, quoth she,
I would I were a prentice bound,
To live along with thee:

Therefore, my dearest George,
List well what I shall say,
And do not blame a woman much,
Her fancy to bewray.

Let not affection's force
Be counted lewd desire;
Nor think it not immodesty,
I should thy love require.

With that she turn'd aside,
And with a blushing red,
A mournful motion she bewray'd
By hanging down her head.

A handkerchief she had
All wrought with silk and gold:
Which she to stay her trickling tears
Before her eyes did hold.

This thing unto my sight
Was wondrous rare and strange;
And in my soul and inward thought
It wrought a sudden change:

That I so hardly grew,
To take her by the hand:
Saying, Sweet mistress, why do you
So dull and pensive stand?

Call me no mistress now,
But Sarah, thy true friend,
Thy servant, Millwood, honouring thee,
Until her life hath end.

If thou wouldst here allledge,
Thou art in years a boy;
So was Adonis, yet was he Fair Venus' only joy.

Thus I, who ne'er before
Of woman found such grace,
But seeing now so fair a dame
Give me a kind embrace,

I supt with her that night,
With joys that did abound;
And for the same paid presently,
In money twice three pound,
An hundred kisses then,
For my farewell she gave;
Crying, Sweet Barnwell, when shall I
Again thy company have?

O stay not hence too long,
Sweet George, have me in mind.
Her words bewicht my childishness,
She uttered them so kind:

So that I made a vow,
Next Sunday without fail,
With my sweet Sarah once again
To tell some pleasant tale.

When she heard me say so,
The tears fell from her eye;
O George, quoth she, if thou dost fail,
Thy Sarah sure will dye.

Though long, yet loe! at last,
The appointed day was come,
That I must with my Sarah meet;
Having a mighty sum

Of money in my hand*,
Unto her house went I,
Whereas my love upon her bed
In saddest sort did dye.

What ails my heart's delight,
My Sarah dear? quoth I;
Let not my love lament and grieve,
Nor sighing pine, and die.

But tell me, dearest friend,
What may thy woes amend,
And thou shalt lack no means of help,
Though forty pound I spend.

With that she turn'd her head,
And sickly thus did say,
Oh me, sweet George, my grief is great,
Ten pound I have to pay

Unto a cruel wretch;
And God he knows, quoth she,
I have it not. Tush, rise I said,
And take it here of me.

Ten pounds, nor ten times ten,
Shall make my love decay,
Then from my bag into her lap,
I cast ten pound straightway.

All blithe and pleasant then,
To banqueting we go;
She proffered me to lye with her,
And said it should be so

And after that same time,
I gave her store of coyn,
Yea, sometimes fifty pound at once;
All which I did purloyn.

And thus I did pass on;
Until my master then
Did call to have his reckoning in Cast up among his men.

The which when as I heard,
I knew not what to say:
For well I knew that I was out
Two hundred pound that day.

Then from my master straight
I ran in secret sort;
And unto Sarah Millwood there
My case I did report.

"But how she na'd this youth,
In this his care and woe,
And all a strumpet's wiley ways,
The second part may shewe."

The second part.
Young Barnwall comes to thee
Sweet Sarah, my delight;
I am undone unless thou stand
My faithful friend this night.

Our master to accompts
Hath just occasion found;
And I am caught behind the hand
Above two hundred pound:

And now his wrath to 'scape,
My love, I fly to thee,
Hoping some time I may remaine
In safety here with thee.

With that she knit her brows,
And looking all aquoy,
Quoth she, What should I have to do
With any prentice boy?

And seeing you have purloyn'd
Your master's goods away,
The case is bad, and therefore here
You shall no longer stay.

Why, dear, thou know'st, I said,
How all which I could get,
I gave it, and did spend it all
Upon thee every whit.

Quoth she, Thou art a knave,
To charge me in this sort,
Being a woman of credit fair,
And known of good report

Therefore I tell the flat,
Be packing with good speed,
I do desire thee from my heart,
And scorn thy filthy deed.

Is this the friendship, that
You did to me protest?
Is this the great affection, which
You so to me express?

Now fee on subtle shrews!
The best is, I may speed
To get a lodging any where
For money in my need.
GEORGE BARNWELL.

False woman, now farewell,
   Whilst twenty pound doth last,
My anchor in some other haven
   With freedom will cast.

When she perceiv'd by this,
   I had store of money there
Stay, George, quoth she, thou art too quick:
   Why, man, I did but jeer:

Dost think for all my speech,
   That I would let thee go?
Faith no, said she, my love to thee
   I wiss is more then so.

You scorne a prentice boy,
   I heard you just now swear,
Wherefore I will not trouble you.
   Nay, George, hark in thine ear;

Thou shalt not go to-night,
   What chance so're befall:
But man we'll have a bed for thee,
   O else the devil take all.

So I by wiles bewitcht
   And snar'd with fancy still,
Had then no power to 'get' away,
   Or to withstand her will.

For wine on wine I call'd,
   And cheer upon good cheer;
And nothing in the world I thought
   For Sarah's love too dear.

Whilst in her company,
   I had such merriment;
All, all too little I did think,
   That I upon her spent.

A 6g for care and thought!
   When all my gold is gone,
In faith, my girl, we will have more,
   Whoever I light upon.

My father's rich, why then
   Should I want store of gold?
Nay with a father sure, quoth she,
   A son may well make bold.

I've a sister richly wed,
   I'll rob her ere I'll want.
Nay then, quoth Sarah, they may well
   Consider of you scant.

Nay, I an uncle have:
   At Ludlow he doth dwell:
He is a grazier, which in wealth
   Doth all the rest excel.

Ere I will live in lack,
   And have no coyn for thee;
I'll rob his house, and murder him.
   Why should you not? quoth she:

Was I a man, ere I
   Would live in poor estate:
On father, friends, and all my kin,
   I would my talons grate.

For without money, George,
   A man is but a beast:
But bringing money, thou shalt be Always my welcome guest.

For shouldst thou be pursued
   With twenty hues and cries,
And with a warrant searched for
   With Argus' hundred eyes.

Yet here thou shalt be safe;
   Such privy ways there be,
That if they sought an hundred years,
   They could not find out thee.

And so carousing both
   Their pleasures to content:
George Barnwell had in little space
   His money wholly spent.

Which done, to Ludlow straight
   He did provide to go,
To rob his wealthy uncle there;
   His minion would it so.

And once he thought to take
   His father by the way,
But that he fear'd his master had
   Took order for his stay*.

Unto his uncle then
   He rode with might and main,
Who with a welcome and good cheer
   Did Barnwell entertain.

One fortnight's space he stayed
   Until it chanced so,
His uncle with his cattle did
   Unto a market go.

His kinsman rode with him,
   Where he did see right plain,
Great store of money he had took:
   When coming home again.

Sudden within a wood,
   He struck his uncle down,
And beat his brains out of his head;
   So sore he crackt his crown.

Then seizing fourscore pound,
   To London straight he hyed,
And unto Sarah Millwood all
   The cruel fact descryed.

Tush, 'tis no matter, George,
   So we the money have
To have good cheer in jolly sort,
   And deck us fine and brave.

Thus lived in filthy sort,
   Until their store was gone:
When means to get them any more,
   I wis, poor George had none.

Therefore in railing sort,
   She thrust him out of door:
Which is the just reward of those,
   Who spend upon a whore.

* i. e. for stopping and apprehending him at his father's.
THE STEDFAST SHEPHERD.

O! do me not disgrace
In this my need, quoth he
She call’d him thief and murderer,
With all the sight might be:

To the constable she sent,
To have him apprehended;
And shewed how far, in each degree,
He had the laws offended.

When Barnwell saw her drift,
To sea he got straightway;
Where fear and sting of conscience
Continually on him lay.

Unto the lord mayor then,
He did a letter write;

In which his own and Sarah’s fault
He did at large recite.

Whereby she seized was
And then to Ludlow sent:
Where she was judg’d, condemn’d, and hang’d,
For murder incontinent.

There dyed this gallant queen,
Such was her greatest gains:
For murder in Polonia,
Was Barnwell hang’d in chains.

Lo! here’s the end of youth,
That after harlots haunt;
Who in the spoil of other men,
About the streets do haunt.

VII.

THE STEDFAST SHEPHERD.

These beautiful stanzas were written by George Wither, of whom some account was given in the former part of this Volume: see the Song intitled “The Shepherd’s Resolution,” Book II. Song XXI.

In the first Edition of this work only a small fragment of this Sonnet was inserted. It was afterwards rendered more complete and entire by the addition of five Stanzas more, extracted from Wither’s pastoral poem, intitled, “The Mistress of Philarete,” of which this Song makes a part. It is now given still more correct and perfect by comparing it with another copy, printed by the author in his improved edition of “The Shepherd’s Hunting,” 1620, 8vo.

Hence away, thou Syren, leave me,
Pish! unclasp these wanton armes;
Sugred words can never deceive me,
(Though thou prove a thousand charms).

Fie, fie, forbear;
No common snare
Can ever my affection chaine:
Thy painted baits,
And poore deceits,
Are all bestowed on me in vaine.

I’m no slave to such, as you be;
Neither shall that snowy brest,
Rowling eye, and lip of ruby
Ever rob me of my rest:
Goe, goe, display
Thy beautie’s ray
To some more-soone enamour’d swaine:
Those common wiles
Of sighs and smiles
Are all bestowed on me in vaine.

I have elsewhere vowed a dutie;
Turne away thy tempting eye:
Shew not me a painted beautie;
These impostures I deffe:
My spirit lothes
Where gawdy clothes

And fained othes may love obtaine:
I love her so,
Whose looke sweares No;
That all your labours will be vaine.

Can he prize the tainted posies,
Which on every brest are worn;
That may plucke the virgin roses
From their never-touched thorne?
I can goe rest
On her sweet brest,
That is the pride of Cynthia’s traine:
Then stay thy tongue;
Thy mermaid song
Is all bestowed on me in vaine.

Hee’s a foole, that basely dailles,
Where each peasant mates with him:
Shall I haunt the thronged vallies,
Whilst ther’s noble hils to climbe?
No, no, though clownes
Are scar’d with frownes,
I know the best can but disdaine:
And those lie prove:
So will thy love
Be all bestowed on me in vaine.

I doe scorn to vow a dutie,
Where each lustfull lad may wooe:
Give me her, whose sun-like beautie
Buzzards dare not soare unto:
Shee, shee it is
Affords that blisse
For which I would refuse no paine:
But such as you,
Fond fools, adieu;
You seeke to captive me in vaine.
THE SPANISH VIRGIN, OR EFFECTS OF JEALOUSY.

Leave me then, you Syrens, leave me;
Seeke no more to worke my harmses;
Craftie wiles cannot deceive me,
Who am proofs against your charmes:
You labour may
To lead astray

The heart, that constant shall remaine:
And I the while
Will sit and smile
To see you spend your time in vaine.

VIII.

THE SPANISH VIRGIN, OR EFFECTS OF JEALOUSY.

The subject of this ballad is taken from a folio collection of tragical stories, entitled, "The theatre of God's judgments, by Dr. Beard and Dr. Taylor, 1642." Pt. 2, p. 89.—The text is given (with corrections) from two copies; one of them in black-letter in the Pepys collection. In this every stanza is accompanied with the following distich by way of burden:

"Oh jealousie! thou art nurs't in hell:
Depart from hence, and therein dwell."

All tender hearts, that ake to hear
Of those that suffer wrong;
All you, that never shed a tear,
Give heed unto my song.

Fair Isabell's tragedy
My tale doth far exceed:
Alas, that so much cruelty
In female hearts should breed!

In Spain a lady liv'd of late,
Who was of high degree;
Whose wayward temper did create
Much woe and misery.

Strange jealousies so fill'd her head
With many a vain surmise,
She thought her lord had wrong'd her bed,
And did her love despise.

A gentlewoman passing fair
Did on this lady wait;
With bravest dames she might compare;
Her beauty was compleat.

Her lady cast a jealous eye
Upon this gentle maid;
And taxt her with disloyalty;
And did her oft upbraid.

In silence still this maiden meek
Her bitter taunts would bear,
While oft adown her lovely cheek
Would steal the falling tear.

In vain in humble sort she strove
Her fury to disarm;
As well the meekness of the dove
The bloody hawke might charm.

Her lord, of humour light and gay,
And innocent the while,
As oft as she came in his way,
Would on the damsell smile.

And oft before his lady's face,
As thinking her her friend,
He would the maiden's modest grace
And comeliness commend.

All which incens'd his lady so,
She burnt with wrath extreme;
At length the fire that long did glow,
Burst forth into a flame.

For on a day it so befell,
When he was gone from home,
The lady all with rage did swell,
And to the damsell come.

And charging her with great offence,
And many a grievous fault;
She bade her servants drag her thence,
Into a dismal vault,

That lay beneath the common-shore:
A dungeon dark and deep:
Where they were wont, in days of yore,
Offenders great to keep.

There never light of cheerful day
Dispers'd the hideous gloom;
But dank and noisome vapours play
Around the wretched room.

And adders, snakes, and toads therein
As afterwards was known,
Long in this loathsome vault had bin,
And were to monsters grown.

Into this foul and fearful place,
The fair one innocent
Was cast, before her lady's face;
Her malice to content.

This maid no sooner enter'd is,
But strait, alas! she hears
The toads to croak, and snakes to hiss:
Then grievously she fears.

Soon from their holes the vipers creep,
And fiercely her assail.
Which makes the damsels sorely weep,
And her sad fate bewail.

With her fair hands she striveth in vain
Her body to defend:
With shrieks and cries she doth complain,
But all is to no end.
A servant listning near the door,
Struck with her doleful noise,
Strait ran his lady to implore;
But she'll not hear his voice.

With bleeding heart he goes agen
To mark the maiden's groans;
And plainly hears, within the den,
How she herself bemoans.

Again he to his lady hies
With all the haste he may:
She into furious passion flies,
And orders him away.

Still back again does he return
To hear her tender cries;
The virgin now had ceas'd to mourn;
Which fill'd him with surprize.

In grief, and horror, and affright,
He listens at the walls;
But finding all was silent quite,
He to his lady calls.

Too sure, O lady, now quoth he,
Your cruelty hath sped;
Make hast, for shame, and come and see;
I fear the virgin's dead.

---

IX.

JEALOUSY, TYRANT OF THE MIND.

This song is by Dryden, being inserted in his Tragi-Comedy of "Love Triumphant," &c.—On account of the subject, it is inserted here.

What state of life can be so blest,
As love that warms the gentle brest;
Two souls in one; the same desire
To grant the bliss, and to require?
If in this heaven a hell we find,
Tis all from thee,
O Jealousie!
Thou tyrant, tyrant of the mind.

All other ills, though sharp they prove,
Serve to refine and perfect love:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A servant listning near the door,</th>
<th>She starts to hear her sudden fate,</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Struck with her doleful noise,</td>
<td>And does with torches run:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Strait ran his lady to implore;</td>
<td>But all her haste was now too late,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But she'll not hear his voice.</td>
<td>For death his worst had done.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With bleeding heart he goes agen</td>
<td>The door being open'd, strait they found</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To mark the maiden's groans;</td>
<td>The virgin stretch'd along:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And plainly hears, within the den,</td>
<td>Two dreadful snakes had wrap't her round,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>How she herself bemoans.</td>
<td>Which her to death had stung.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Again he to his lady hies</td>
<td>One round her legs, her thighs, her wast,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With all the haste he may:</td>
<td>Had twin'd his fatal wreath:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>She into furious passion flies,</td>
<td>The other close her neck embrac'd,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And orders him away.</td>
<td>And stop't her gentle breath.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Still back again does he return</td>
<td>The snakes, being from her body thrust,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To hear her tender cries;</td>
<td>Their bellies were so fill'd,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The virgin now had ceas'd to mourn;</td>
<td>That with excess of blood they burst,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Which fill'd him with surprize.</td>
<td>Thus with their prey were kill'd.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In grief, and horror, and affright,</td>
<td>The wicked lady, at this sight,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He listens at the walls;</td>
<td>With horror strait ran mad;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But finding all was silent quite,</td>
<td>So raving dy'd, as was most right,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He to his lady calls.</td>
<td>'Cause she no pity had.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Too sure, O lady, now quoth he,</td>
<td>Let me advise you, ladies all,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Your cruelty hath sped;</td>
<td>Of jealousy beware:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Make hast, for shame, and come and see;</td>
<td>It causeth many a one to fall,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I fear the virgin's dead.</td>
<td>And is the devil's snare.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

In absence, or unkind disdainse,
Sweet hope relieves the lovers paine:
But, oh, no cure but death we find
To set us free
From Jealousie,
Thou tyrant, tyrant of the mind

False in thy glass all objects are,
Some sett too near, and some too far:
Thou art the fire of endless night,
The fire that burns, and gives no light.
All torments of the damn'd we find
In only thee,
O Jealousie!
Thou tyrant, tyrant of the mind.
The ladies are indebted for the following notable documents to the Pepys Collection, where the original is preserved in black-letter, and is intitled, "A Looking-glass for Ladies, or a Mirrour for Married Women. Tune, Queen Dido, or Troy town."

When Greeks and Trojans fell at strife,
And lords in armour bright were seen;
When many a gallant lost his life
About fair Hellen, beauty's queen;
Ulysses, general so free,
Did leave his dear Penelope.

When she this wofull news did hear,
That he would to the wars of Troy;
For grief she shed full many a tear,
At parting from her only joy:
Her ladies all about her came,
To comfort up this Grecian dame.

Ulysses, with a heavy heart,
Unto her then did mildly say,
The time is come that we must part;
My honour calls me hence away;
Yet in my absence, dearest, be
My constant wife, Penelope.

Let me no longer live, she sayd,
Then to my lord I true remain;
My honour shall not be betray'd
Untill I see my love again;
For I will ever constant prove,
As is the loyal turtle-dove.

Thus did they part with heavy cheer,
And to the ships his way he took;
Her tender eyes dropt many a tear;
Still casting many a longing look:
She saw him on the surges glide,
And unto Neptune thus she cry'd:

Thou god, whose power is in the deep,
And rul'est in the ocean main,
My loving lord in safety keep
Till he return to me again:
That his person may behold,
To me more precious far than gold.

Then straight the ships with nimble sails
Were all convey'd out of her sight:
Her cruel fate she then bewails,
Since she had lost her hearts delight.
Now shall my practice be, quoth she,
True virtue and humility.

My patience I will put in ure,
My charity I will extend;
Since for my woe there is no cure,
The helpless now I will befriend:
The widow and the fatherless
I will relieve, when in distress.

Thus she continued year by year
In doing good to every one;
Her fame was noised every where,
To young and old the same was known,
That she no company would mind,
Who were to vanity inclin'd.

Mean while Ulysses fought for fame,
'Mongst Trojans hazarding his life:
Young gallants, hearing of her name,
Came flocking for to tempt his wife:
For she was so lovely, young, and fair,
No lady might with her compare.

With costly gifts and jewels fine,
They did endeavour her to win;
With banquets and the choicest wine,
For to allure her unto sin:
Most persons were of high degree,
Who courted fair Penelope.

With modesty and comely grace
Their wanton suits she did deny:
No tempting charms could e'er deface
Her dearest husband's mem'ry;
But constant she would still remain,
Hopeing to see him once again.

Her book her dayly comfort was,
And that she often did peruse;
She seldom looked in her glass;
Powder and paint she ne'er would use.
I wish all ladies were as free
From pride, as was Penelope.

She in her needle took delight,
And likewise in her spinning-wheel;
Her maids about her every night
Did use the distaff, and the reel:
The spiders, that on rafters twine,
Scarce spin a thread more soft and fine.

Sometimes she would bewail the loss
And absence of her dearest love:
Sometimes she thought the seas to cross,
Her fortune on the waves to prove.
I fear my lord is slain, quoth she,
He stays so from Penelope.

At length the ten years siege of Troy
Did end; in flames the city burn'd;
And to the Grecians was great joy,
To see the towers to ashes turn'd:
Then came Ulysses home to see
His constant, dear, Penelope.

O blame her not if she was glad,
When she her lord again had seen.
Thrice-welcome home, my dear, she said,
A long time absent thou hast been:
The wars shall never more deprive
Me of my lord whilst I'm alive.
XI.

TO LUCASTA, ON GOING TO THE WARS.

By Col. Richard Lovelace: from the volume of his poems, intitled "Lucasta, Lond. 1649," 12mo.
The elegance of this writer's manner would be more admired if it had somewhat more of simplicity.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>True, a new mistresse now I chase,</th>
<th>And vice from virtue to discern:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The first foe in the field;</td>
<td>And let all women strive to be</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And with a stronger faith embrace</td>
<td>As constant as Penelope.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

- 5
- 10

XII.

VALENTINE AND URSINE.

The old story-book of Valentine and Orson (which suggested the plan of this tale, but it is not strictly followed in it) was originally a translation from the French, being one of their earliest attempts at romance. See "Le Bibliotheque de Romans, &c."
The circumstance of the bridge of bells is taken from the old metrical legend of Sir Devis, and has also been copied in the Seven Champions. The original are,

"Over the dyke a bridge there lay, That man and beast might passe away: Under the bridge where sixty belles; Right as the Romans telles; That there might no man passe in, But all they ring with a gyn."

Sign. E. iv.

In the Editor's folio MS. was an old poem on this subject, in a wretched corrupt state, unworthy the press: from which were taken such particulars as could be adopted.

PART THE FIRST.

When Flora 'gins to decke the fields
With colours fresh and fine,
Then holy clerks their mattins sing
To good Saint Valentine!

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Through the deep forest swift they pass,</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Through woods and thickest wild;</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>When down within a lonely dell</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>They found a new-born child;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All in a scarlet kercher lay'd</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of silk so fine and thin;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A golden mantle wrapt him round,</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinn'd with a silver pin.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The sudden sight surpris'd them all;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The courtiers gather'd round;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>They look, they call, the mother seek;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>No mother could be found.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>At length the king himself drew near,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And as he gazing stands,</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The pretty babe look'd up and smil'd,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And stretch'd his little hands.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Now, by the rood, King Pepin says,</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>This child is passing fair:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I wot he is of gentle blood;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Perhaps some prince's heir.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Goe bear him home unto my court</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With all the care ye may:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Let him be christen'd Valentine,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In honour of this day:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And look me out some cunning nurse;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Well nurtur'd let him bee;</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nor ought be wanting that becomes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A bairn of high degree.</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| The King of France that morning fair | 5 |
| He would a hunting ride;             |   |
| To Artois forest prancing forth      |   |
| In all his princelye pride.          |   |

| To grace his sports a courtly train  | 10 |
| Of gallant peers attend;             |   |
| And with their loud and cheerful cryes |   |
| The hills and valleys rend.          |   |
They look'd him out a cunning nurse;
And nurtur'd well was he;
Nor ought was wanting that became
A barn of high degree.

Thus grewe the little Valentine,
Belov'd of king and peers;
And shew'd in all he spake or did
A wit beyond his years.

But chief in gallant feates of arms
He did himself advance,
That ere he grewe to man's estate
He had no peer in France.

And now the early downe began
'To shade his youthful chin;
When Valentine was dubb'd a knight,
That he might glory win.

A boon, a boon, my gracious liege,
I beg a boon of thee!
The first adventure that befalls,
May be reserv'd for mee.

The first adventure shall be thine;
The king did smiling say;
Nor many days, when lo! there came
Three palmers clad in grays.

Help, gracious lord, they weeping say'd;
And knelt, as it was meet:
From Artoys forest we be come,
With weak and wearye feet.

Within those deep and drearye woods
There wends a savage boy;
Whose fierce and mortal rage doth yield
Thy subjects dire annoy.

'Mong ruthless beares he sure was bred;
He lurks within their den:
With beares he lives; with beares he feeds,
And drinks the blood of men.

To more than savage strength he joins
A more than human skill:
For arms, ne cunning may suffice
His cruel rage to still;

Up then rose Sir Valentine,
Claim'd that arduous deed,
Go forth and conquer, say'd the king,
And great shall be thy meed.

Well mounted on a milk-white steed,
His armour white as snow;
As well besee'md a virgin knight,
Who ne'er had fought a foe:

To Artoys forest he repairs
With all the haste he may;
And soon he spies the savage youth
A rending of his prey.

His unkempt hair all matted hung
His shaggy shoulders round:
His eager eye all fiery glow'd:
His face with fury frown'd:

Like eagles' talons grew his nails;
His limbs were thick and strong;
And dreadful was the knotted oak
He bare with him along.

Soon as Sir Valentine approach'd,
He starts with sudden spring;
And yelling forth a hideous howl,
He made the forests ring.

As when a tyger fierce and fell
Hath spyed a passing roe,
And leaps at once upon his throat;
So sprung the savage foe;

So lightly leap'd with furious force
The gentle knight to seize;
But met his tall uplifted spear,
Which sunk him on his knees.

A second stroke so stiff and stern
Had laid the savage low;
But springing up, he rais'd his club,
And aim'd a dreadful blow.

The watchful warrior bent his head,
And shun'd the coming stroke;
Upon his taper spear it fell,
And all to shivers broke.

Then lighting nimbly from his steed,
He drew his burniash brand:
The savage quick as lightning flew
To wrest it from his hand.

Three times he grasp'd the silver hilt;
Three times he felt the blade;
Three times it fell with furious force;
Three ghastly wounds it made.

Now with redoubled rage he roar'd;
His eye-ball flash'd with fire;
Each hairy limb with fury shook;
And all his heart was ire.

Then closing fast with furious gripe
He clasp'd the champion round,
And with a strong and sudden twist
He laid him on the ground,

But soon the knight with active spring,
O'turn'd his hairy foe:
And now between their sturdy fists
Past many a bruising blow.

They roll'd and grappled on the ground,
And there they struggled long;
Skillful and active was the knight;
The savage he was strong.

But brutal force and savage strength
To art and skill must yield;
Sir Valentine at length prevail'd
And won the well-fought field.

Then binding strait his conquer'd foe
Fast with an iron chain,
He tyes him to his horse's tail,
And leads him o'er the plain.
To court his hairy captive soon
Sir Valentine doth bring;
And kneeling down upon his knee,
Prepresents him to the king.

With loss of blood and loss of strength
The savage tamer grew;
And to Sir Valentine became
A servant try'd and true.

And 'cause with beares he erst was bred,
Ursine they call his name;
A name which unto future times
The Muses shall proclaim.

PART THE SECOND.

In high renown with prince and peere
Now liv'd Sir Valentine:
His high renown with prince and peere
Made envious hearts repine.

It chanc'd the king upon a day
Prepar'd a sumptuous feast:
And there came lords, and dainty dames,
And many a noble guest.

Amid their cups, that freely flow'd,
Their revelry and mirth,
A youthful knight tax'd Valentine
Of base and doubtful birth.

The soul reproach, so grossly urg'd,
His generous heart did wound:
And strait he vow'd he ne'er would rest
Till he his parents found.

Then bidding king and peers adieu,
Early one summer's day,
With faithful Ursine by his side,
From court he took his way.

O'er hill and valley, moss and moor,
For many a day they pass;
At length, upon a moated lake,
They found a bridge of brass.

Beyond it rose a castle fair,
Y-built of marble stone:
The battlements were gilt with gold,
And glittered in the sun.

Beneath the bridge, with strange device,
A hundred bells were hung;
That man, nor beast, might pass thereon,
But strait their larum rung.

This quickly found the youthful pair,
Who boldly crossing o'er,
The jangling sound bedeaf their ears,
And rung from shore to shore.

Quick at the sound the castle gates
Unlock'd and opened wide,
And strait a gyant huge and grim
Stalk'd forth with stately pride.

Now yield you, caytiffs, to my will;
He cried with hideous roar;
Or else the wolves shall eat your flesh,
And ravens drink your gore.

Vain boaster, said the youthful knight,
I scorn thy threats and thee;
I trust to force thy brazen gates,
And set thy captives free.

Then putting spurs unto his steed,
He aim'd a dreadful thrust:
The spear against the gyant glanc'd,
And caus'd the blood to burst.

Mad and outrageous with the pain,
He whirl'd his mace of steel;
The very wind of such a blow
Had made the champion reel.

It haply mist; and now the knight
His glittering sword display'd,
And riding round with whirlwind speed
Of made him feel the blade.

As when a large and monstrous oak
Uncessing axes hew:
So fast around the gyant's limbs
The blows quick-darting flew.

As when the boughs with hideous fall
Some hapless woodman crush:
With such a force the enormous foe
Did on the champion rush.

A fearful blow, alas! there came,
Both horse and knight it took,
And laid them senseless in the dust;
So fatal was the stroke.

Then smiling forth a hideous grin,
The gyant strides in haste,
And, stooping, aims a second stroke:
"Now caytiff breathe thy last!"

But ere it fell, two thundering blows
Upon his skull descend:
From Ursine's knotty club they came,
Who ran to save his friend.

Down sunk the gyant gaping wide,
And rolling his grim eyes:
The hairy youth repeats his blows:
He gasps, he groans, he dies.

 Quickly Sir Valentine reviv'd
With Ursine's timely care:
And now to search the castle walls
The venturous youths repair.

The blood and bones of murder'd knights
They found where'er they came:
At length within a lonely cell
They saw a mournful dame.

Her gentle eyes were dim'd with tears;
Her cheeks were pale with woe;
And long Sir Valentine besought
Her doleful tale to know.

"Alas! young knight," she weeping said,
Condole my wretched fate;
A childless mother here you see;
A wife without a mate.
VALENTINE AND URSINE.

"These twenty winters here forlorn
I've drawn my hated breath;
Sole witness of a monster's crimes,
And wishing aye for death.

"Know, I am sister of a king,
And in my early years
Was married to a mighty prince,
The fairest of his peers.

"With him I sweetly liv'd in love
A twelvemonth and a day:
When, lo! a soul and treacherous priest
Y-wrought our loves' decay.

"His seeming goodness wan him pow'r;
He had his master's ear:
And long to me and all the world
He did a saint appear.

"One day, when we were all alone,
He proffer'd odious love:
The wretch with horror I repuls'd,
And from my presence drove.

"He feign'd remorse, and pitious beg'd
His crime I'd not reveal:
Which, for his seeming penitence,
I promis'd to conceal.

"With treason, villany, and wrong,
My goodness he repay'd:
With jealous doubts he fill'd my lord,
And me to woe betray'd.

"He hid a slave within my bed,
Then rais'd a bitter cry.
My lord, possess with rage, condemn'd
Me, all unheard, to dye.

"But, 'cause I then was great with child,
At length my life be spar'd:
But bade me instant quit the realm,
One trusty knight my guard.

"Forth on my journey I depart,
Opprest with grief and woe;
And tow'rds my brother's distant court,
With breaking heart, I goe.

"Long time thro' sundry foreign lands
We slowly pace along:
At length, within a forest wild,
I fell in labour strong:

"And while the knight for succour sought,
And left me there forlorn,
My childbed pains so fast increast
Two lovely boys were born.

"The eldest fair, and smooth, as snow
That tips the mountain hoar:
The younger's little body rough
With hair was cover'd o'er.

"But here afresh begin my woes:
While tender care I took
To shield my eldest from the cold
And wrap him in my cloak;

"A prowling bear burst from the wood,
And seiz'd my younger son:
Affection lent my weakness son:
And after them I run.

"But all forewaryed, weak and spent,
I quickly swoon'd away;
And there beneath the Greenwood shade
Long time I lifeless lay.

"At length the knight brought me relief,
And rais'd me from the ground:
But neither of my pretty babes
Could ever more be found.

"And, while in search we wander'd far,
We met that gyant grim;
Who ruthless slew my trusty knight,
And bare me off with him.

"But charm'd by heav'n, or else my griefs,
He offer'd me no wrong;
Save that within these lonely walls
I've been immur'd so long."

Now, surely, said the youthful knight,
You are Lady Bellisance,
Wife to the Grecian emperor:
Your brother's King of France.

For in your royal brother's court
Myself my breeding had;
Where oft the story of your woes
Hath made my bosom sad.

If so, know your accuser's dead,
And dying own'd his crime;
And long your lord hath sought you out
Thrro' every foreign clime.

And when no tidings he could learn
Of his much-wronged wife,
He vow'd thenceforth within his court
To lead a hermit's life.

Now heaven is kind! the lady said;
And dropt a joyful tear:
Shall I once more behold my lord?
That lord I love so dear?

But, madam, said Sir Valentine,
And knelt upon his knee:
Know you the cloak that wrap your bade,
If you the same should see.

And pulling forth the cloth of gold,
In which himself was found;
The lady gave a sudden shriek
And fainted on the ground.

But by his pious care reviv'd,
His tale she heard anon;
And soon by other tokens found,
He was indeed her son.

But who's this hairy youth? she said;
He much resembles thee:
The bear devour'd my younger son,
Or sure that son were he.
Madam, this youth with bears was bred,
And rear'd within their den.
But recollect ye any mark
To know your son aen?

Upon his little side, quoth she,
Was stamp't a bloody rose.
Here, lady, see the crimson mark
Upon his body grows!

Then clasping both her new-found sons
She bath'd their cheeks with tears;
And soon towards her brothers court
Her joyful course she steers.

What pen can paint King Pepin's joy,
His sister thus restor'd!
And soon a messenger was sent
To cheer her dropping lord:

Who came in haste with all his peers,
To fetch her home to Greece;
Where many happy years they reign'd
In perfect love and peace.

To them Sir Ursine did succeed,
And long the scepter bare.
Sir Valentine he stay'd in France,
And was his uncle's heir.

---

XIII.

THE DRAGON OF WANTLEY.

This humorous song (as a former Editor* has well observed) is to old merical romances and ballads of chivalry, what Don Quixote is to prose narratives of that kind:—a lively satire on their extravagant fictions. But although the satire is thus general, the subject of this ballad is local and peculiar; so that many of the finest strokes of humour are lost for want of our knowing the minute circumstances to which they allude. Many of them can hardly now be recovered, although we have been fortunate enough to learn the general subject to which the satire referred, and shall detail the information with which we have been favoured, in a separate memoir at the end of the poem.

In handling his subject, the Author has brought in most of the common incidents which occur in Romance. The description of the dragon:—his outrages—the people flying to the knight for succour—his care in choosing his armour—his being drest for fight by a young damsels—and most of the circumstances of the battle and victory (allowing for the burlesque turn given to them) are what occur in every book of chivalry, whether in prose or verse.

If any one piece, more than other, is more particularly levelled at, it seems to be the old rhyming legend of Sir Bevis. There a Dragon is attacked from a well in a manner not very remote from this of the ballad:

There was a well, so bare I wyne,
And Bevis stumbald ryght therein.

* * *

Than was he glad without sayle,
And rested a whyle for his avayle;
And dranke of that water his yll;
And than he lepte out, with good wyll,
And with Morgan his branide
He assayled the dragon, I understande:
On the dragon he smote so faste,
Where that he hit the scales braste:
The dragon then faynted sore,
And cast a galon and more

* Collection of Historical Ballads in 3 vol. 1727.
† See above, p. 221, and p. 249.

Out of his mouth of venim strong,
And on Syr Bevis he it fong:
It was venymous y-wis.

This seems to be meant by the Dragon of Wantley's stink, ver. 110. As the polite knight's creeping out, and attacking the dragon, &c. seems evidently to allude to the following:

Bevis blessed himselfe, and forth yode,
And lepte out with haste full good;
And Bevis unto the dragon gone is;
And the dragon also to Bevis.
Longe and harder was that fight
Betwene the dragon and that knight:
But ever when Syr Bevis was hurt sore,
He went to the well, and washed him there;
He was as hole as any man,
Ever freshe as when he began.
The dragon save it might not avayle
Besyde the well to holde batayle;
He thought he would, wyth some wyle,
Out of that place Bevis begyde;
He woulde have flown then awaie,
But Bevis lepte after with good Morlaye,
And byt him under the wyng,
As he was in his flyenge, &c.

Sign. M. jv. L. j. &c.

After all, perhaps the writer of this ballad was acquainted with the above incidents only through the medium of Spenser, who has assumed most of them in his "Faery Queen." At least some particulars in the description of the Dragon, &c. seem evidently borrowed from the latter. See Book I. Canto 11, where the Dragon's "two wynges like sayls—huge long tayl—with sings—his cruel rending claves—and yron teeth—his breath of smothering smoke and sulphur" and the duration of the fight for upwards of two days, bear a great resemblance to passages in the following ballad; though it must be confessed that these particulars are common to all old writers of romance.

Although this ballad must have been written early in the last century, we have met with none but such as were comparatively modern copies. It is here printed from one in Roman letter, in the Pepys Collection, collated with such others as could be procured.

OLD stories tell, how Hercules
A dragon slow at Lerna,
With seven heads, and fourteen eyes,
To see and well discern’d,
But he had a club, this dragon to drub,
Or he had ne’er done it, I warrant ye:
But More of More-Hall, with nothing at all,
He slew the dragon of Wantley.

This dragon had two furious wings,
Each one upon each shoulder;
With a sting in his tail, as long as a flayl,
Which made him bolder and bolder.
He had long claws, and in his jaws
Four and forty teeth of iron;
With a hide as tough as any buff,
Which did him round environ.

Have you not heard how the Trojan horse
Held seventy men in his belly?
This dragon was not quite so big,
But very near, I’ll tell ye.
Devoured he poor children three,
That could not with him grapple;
And at one sup he eat them up,
As one would eat an apple.

All sorts of cattle this dragon did eat.
Some say he ate up trees,
And that the forests sure he would
Devour up by degrees:
For houses and churches were to him geeze and
He ate all, and left none behind,
But some stones, dear Jack, that he could not crack,
Which on the hills you will find.

In Yorkshire, near fair Rotherham,
The place I know it well;
Some two or three miles, or thereabouts,
I vow I cannot tell;
But there is a hedge, just on the hill edge,
And Matthew’s house hard by it;
O there and then was this dragon’s den,
You could not chuse but spy it.

Some say, this dragon was a witch;
Some say, he was a devil,
For from his nose a smoke arose,
And with it burning snivel;
Which he cast off, when he did cough,
In a well that he did stand by;
Which made it look just like a brook
Running with burning brandy.

Hard by a furious knight there dwelt,
Of whom all towns did ring,
For he could wrestle, play at quarter-staff, kick,
cuff and buff,
Call son of a whore, do any kind of thing:
By the tail and the main, with his hands twain
He swung a horse till he was dead;
And that which is stranger, he for very anger
Eat him all up but his head.

Ver. 29. were to him gorse and birches. Other copies.

These children, as I told, being eat;
Men, women, girls, and boys,
Sighing and sobbing, came to his lodging,
And made a hideous noise:
O save us all, More of More-hall,
Thou peerless knight of these woods;
Do but slay this dragon, who won’t leave us a rag
We’ll give thee all our goods.

Tut, tut, quoth he, no goods I want;
But I want, I want, in sooth,
A fair maid of sixteen, that’s brisk and keen,
With smiles about the mouth;
Hair black as sloe, skin white as snow,
With blushes her cheeks adorning;
To annoy me o’er night, ere I go to fight,
And to dress me in the morning.

This being done, he did engage
To hew the dragon down;
But first he went, new armour to Bespeak at Sheffield town;
With spikes all about, not within but without,
Of steel so sharp and strong;
Both behind and before, arms, legs, and all o’er,
Some five or six inches long

Had you but seen him in this dress,
How fierce he look’d and how big,
You would have thought him for to be
Some Egyptian porcupig:
He frightened all cats, dogs, and all,
Each cow, each horse, and each hog:
For fear they did flee, for they took him to be
Some strange outlandish hedge-hog.

To see this fight, all people then
Got up on trees and houses,
On churches some, and chimneys too;
But these put on their trowsers,
Not to spoil their hose. As soon as he rose,
To make him strong and mighty,
He drank by the tale, six pots of ale,
And a quart of aqua-vite.

It is not strength that always wins,
For wit doth strength excell;
Which made our cunning champion
Creep down into a well;
Where he did think, this dragon would drink,
And so he did in truth;
And as he stoop’d low, he rose up and cry’d, boh!
And hit him in the mouth.

Oh, quoth the dragon, pox take thee, come out,
Thou disturb’st me in my drink:
And then he turn’d, and s... at him;
Good lack how he did stink:
Besawur thy soul, thy body’s foul,
Thy dung smells not like balms;
Thou son of a whore, thou stink’st so sore,
Sure thy diet is unwholesome.

Our politick knight, on the other side,
Crest out upon the brink,
And gave the dragon such a douse,
He knew not what to think:
By cock, quoth he, say you so, do you see?
And then at him he let fly,
With hand and with foot, and so they went to't;
And the word it was. Hey boys, hey!
Your words, quoth the dragon, I don't understand;
Then to it they fell at all,
Like two wild hares so fierce, if I may
Compare great things with small.
Two days and a night, with this dragon did fight
Our champion on the ground;
[neat, Tho' their strength it was, their skill it was
They never had one wound.

At length the hard earth began to quake,
The dragon gave him a knock,
Which made him to reel, and Straitway he thought,
To lift him as high as a rock,
And thence let him fall. But More of More-hall,
Like a valiant son of Mars,
As he came like a lout, so he turn'd him about,
And hit him a kick on the a...

Oh, quoth the dragon, with a deep sigh,
And turn'd six times together,
Sobbing and tearing, cursing and swearing
Out of his throat of leather;
More of More-hall! O thou rascal!
Would I had seen thee never;
With the thing at thy foot, thou hast prick'd my a...
And I'm quite undone for ever.

Murder, murder, the dragon cry'd,
Alack, alack, for grief;
Had you but mist that place, you could
Have done me no mischief.
Then his head he shaked, trembled and quaked,
And down he laid and cry'd;
First on one knee, then on back tumbled he,
So gown'd, kick, s..., and dy'd.

 A description of the supposed scene of the foregoing Ballad, which was communicated to the Editor in 1767, is here given in the words of the relater:

"In Yorkshire, 6 miles from Rotherham, is a village, called Wortley, the seat of the late Lord Montague, Esq. About a mile from this village is a Lodge, named Warncliffe Lodge, but vulgarly called Wantley: here lies the scene of the Song. I was there above forty years ago: and it being a woody rocky place, my friend made me clamber over rocks and stones, not telling me to what end, till I came to a sort of a cave; then asked for the next part of the place and pointing to one end, says, Here lay the Dragon killed by Moor of Moor-hall: here lay his head; here lay his tail; and the stones we came over on the hill, are those he could not crack; and yet, white house you see half a mile off, is Moor-hall. I had dined at the lodge, and knew the man's name was Matthew, who was keeper to Mr. Wortley, and, as he endeavoured to persuade me, was the same Matthew mentioned in the Song: in the house is the picture of the Dragon and Moor of Moor-hall, and near it a well, which, says he, is the described in the ball

†† Since the former editions of this humorous old song were printed, the following "Key to the Satire" hath been communicated by Godfrey Bosville, Esq. of Thorp, near Malton, in Yorkshire; who, in the most obliging manner, gave full permission to subjoin it to the poem.

Warncliffe Lodge, and Warncliffe Wood (vulgarly pronounced Wantley), are in the parish of Penistone, in Yorkshire. The rectory of Pennistone was part of the dissolved monastery of St. Stephen's, Westminster; and was granted to the Duke of Norfolk's family: who therewith endowed an hospital, which he built at Sheffield, for women. The trustees let the imprisonment of the great tithes of Pennistone to the Wortley family, who got a great deal by it, and wanted to get still more: for Mr. Nicholas Wortley attempted to take the tithes in kind, but Mr. Francis Bosville opposed him, and there was a decree in favour of the modus in 37th Eliz. The vicarage of Pennistone did not go along with the rectory, but with the copyhold rents, and was part of a large purchase made by Ralph Bosville, in which Duke Francis, Queen Elizabeth, in the 2d year of her reign: and that part he sold in 12th Eliz. to his elder brother Godfrey, the father of Francis, who left it, with the rest of his estate, to his wife, for her life; and then to Ralph, 3d son of his uncle Ralph. The widow married Lionel Rowlestone, lived eighteen years, and survived Ralph.

This precipitated, the ballad apparently relates to the lawsuit carried on concerning this claim of tithes made by the Wortley family. "Houses and churchwards were to him geese and turkeys," which are titheable things, the Dragon chose to live on. Sir Francis Wortley, the son of Nicholas, attempted again to take the tithes in kind: but the parishioners subscribed an agreement to defend their modus. And at the head of the agreement was Lionel Rowlestone, who is supposed to be one of the Stones, dear Jack, which the Dragon could not crack. The agreement is still preserved in a large sheet of parchment, dated 1st of James I. and is full of names and seals, which might be meant by the cost of armour, "with spikes all about, both within and without." More of More-hall was either the attorney, or counsellor, who conducted the suit. He is not distinctly remembered, but More-hall is still extant at the very bottom of Wantley [Warncliffe] Wood, and lies so low, that it might be said to be in a well: as the Dragon's den [Warncliffe Lodge] was at the top of the wood, "with Matthew's house hard by it." The keepers belonging to the Wortley family were named, for many generations, Matthew Northall: the last of them left this lodge, within memory, to be keeper to the Duke of Norfolk. The present owner of More-hall still attends Mr. Bosville's Manor Court at Ox-spring, and pays a rose a year. "More of More-hall, with nothing at all, slew the Dragon of Wantley." He gave him, instead of tithes, so small a modus, that it was in effect nothing at all, and was slaying him with a vengeance. "The poor children three," &c. cannot surely mean the three sisters of Francis Bosville, who would have been of great ages, had he made no will? The late Mr. Bosville had a contest with the descendants of two of them, the late Sir Geo. Savile's father, and Mr. Copley, about the presentation to Penistonn, they supposing Francis had not the power to give this part of the estate from the heirs at law; but it was decided against them. The Dragon (Sir Francis Wortley) succeeded better with his cousin Wordsworth, the freehold lord of the manor (for it is the copyhold manor that belongs to Mr. Bosville) having persuaded him not to join the refractory parishioners, under a promise that he would let him his tithes cheap: and now the estates of Wortley and Wordsworth are the only lands that pay tithes in the parish.

N.B. The "two days and a night," mentioned in ver. 125, as the duration of the combat, was probably that of the trial at law.

XIV.

ST. GEORGE FOR ENGLAND,

THE FIRST PART.

As the former song is in ridicule of the extravagant incidents in old ballads and metrical romances; so this is a burlesque of their style; particularly of the rambling transitions and wild accumulation of unconnected parts, so frequent in many of them. This ballad is given from an old black-letter copy in the Pepys collection, "imprinted at London, 1612." It is more ancient than many of the preceding; but we place it here for the sake of connecting it with the Second Part.

Wuy doo you boast of Arthur and his knightes,
Knowing ' well' how many men have endured fightes?
For besides King Arthur, and Lancelot du lake,
Or Sir Tristram de Lionel, that fought for ladies sake;
Read in old histories, and there you shall see file.
How St. George, St. George the dragon made to St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense. [France; Mark our father Abraham, when first he reskeued Lot, [got:] onely with his household, what conquest there he David was elected a prophet and a king, [sling:] he slew the great Goliath, with a stone within a Yet these were not knightes of the table round; Nor St. George, St. George, who the dragon did confound.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for France; Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

Jephtbah and Gideon did lead their men to fight,
They conquered the Amorites, and put them all to flight;
Hercules his labours ' were' on the plains of Basse; And Sampson slew a thousand with the jawbone of an asse, [mighty spoylle: And eke he throw a temple downe, and did a But St. George, St. George he did the dragon foyle. [France; St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

The warres of ancient monarchs it were too long to tell, [fexcell; And likewise of the Romans, how farre they did Hannibal and Scipio in many a fieldie did fighte: Orlando Furioso he was a worthy knight:

Remus and Romulus, were they that Rome did builde: [yielde. But St. George, St. George the dragon made to St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for France; Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense. The noble Alphonso, that was the Spanish king, The order of the red scarffes and bandrolles in did bring*: [he did begin, He had a troope of mighty knightes, when first Which sought adventures farre and neare, that conquest they might win; The ranks of the Pagans he often put to flight: But St. George, St. George did with the dragon fight. [France; St George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

Many ' knights' have fighted with proud Tamberline:
Cutlax the Dane, great warres he did maintaine:
Rowland of Beame, and good ' Sir' Olivere
In the forest of Acon slew both woolfe and beare:
Besides that noble Hollander, 'Sir' Goward with the hill:
[spill. But St. George, St. George the dragon's blood did St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for France; Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

Valentine and Orson were of King Pepin's blood:
Alfride and Henry they were brave knightes and good:
[maine:
The four sons of Aymon, that follow'd Charle-
Sir Hughon of Burdeaux, and Godfrey of Bullaine:
These were all French knights that lived in that age:
But St. George, St. George the dragon did assuage. St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for France; Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense, Bevis conquered Ascapart, and after slew the boare, [the moore:

And then he cross beyond the seas to combat with Sir Izenbras and Eglamore, they were knightes most bold; [hath told:
And good Sir John Mandeville of travel much

* This probably alludes to "An Ancient Order of Knight hood, called the Order of the Band, instituted by Don Al phonso, King of Spain,....to wear a red riband of three fingers breadth," &c. See Ame's Typog. p. 327.
There were many English knights that Pagans did convert:
But St. George, St. George pluckt out the dragon's
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
[France;]

The noble Earl of Warwick, that was call'd Sir
The infidels and Pagans stoutlie did defie; [Guy,
He slew the giant Brandimore, and after was the death
Of that most ghastly dun cowe, the divell of Duns-
Besides his noble deeds all done beyond the seas:
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
[France;]

Richard Cœur-de-lion, erst king of this land,
The lion gored with his naked hand*:
The false Duke of Austria nothing did he feare;
But his son he killed with a boxe on the eare;
Besides his famous acts done in the holy lande:
But St. George, St. George the dragon did withstand,
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
[France;]

Henry the fifth he conquered all France,
And quartered their arms, his honour to advance
He their cities razed, and threw their castles downe,
And his head he honoured with a double crown:
He thumped the French-men, and after home he came,
But St. George, St. George he did the dragon tame.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for France:
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

St. David of Wales the Welsh-men much advance:
St. Jaques of Spaine, that never yet broke lance:
St Patrick of Ireland, which was St. Georges boy,
Seven yeares he kept his horse, and then stole him away:
For which knavish act, as slaves they doe remaine:
But St. George, St. George the dragon he hath slain.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for
France;
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

---

XV.
ST. GEORGE FOR ENGLAND,

THE SECOND PART,

— was written by John Grubb, M. A. of Christ Church, Oxford. The occasion of its being composed is said to have been as follows. A set of gentlemen of the university had formed themselves into a Club, all the members of which were to be of the name of George; their anniversary feast was to be held on St. George's day. Our Author solicited strongly to be admitted; but his name being unfortunately John, this disqualification was dispensed with only upon this condition, that he would compose a song in honour of their Patron Saint, and would every year produce one or more new stanzas, to be sung on their annual festival. This gave birth to the following humorous performance, the several stanzas of which were the produce of many successive anniversaries.*

This diverting poem was long handed about in manuscript; at length a friend of Grubb's undertook to get it printed, who, not keeping pace with the impatience of his friends, was addressed in the following whimsical macaronic lines, which, in such a collection as this, may not improperly accompany the poem itself.

EXPUGNATUR, SIVE, QUERIMONIUM CULA AD

* Alluding to the fabulous exploits attributed to this king in the old romances. See the Dissertation prefixed to the Third Series.
† To this circumstance it is owing that the Editor has never met with two copies in which the stanzas are arranged alike; he has therefore thrown them into what appeared the most natural order. The versae are properly long Alexan-drines, but the narrowness of the page made it necessary to subdivide them; they are here printed with many improvements.

ANTEOMNIO [ATHERTON] OB POEAMA JOHANNIS GRUB
VIRI TOU WADY INGENIOSISSIMI IN LUCEM NONUND EDIT
TOMI! TUNE SINES DIVINA POEMATA GRUBBI
INTOMB'D IN SECRET THUS STILL TO REMAIN ANY LONGER, ΤΟΝΟΜΑ ΨΕΥΤΙΧΑ ΣΕΛΛΑΣ, ΚΕΡΙΚΑΙ ΕΥΑΡΧΕΙΣ ΑΣΙ
GRUBBE TUEM NOMEN VIVET DUM NOBILIS ALE-A EFFECTI HEROS, DIGRAMIQUE HEROE PUELLAM.
EST GENUS HERCUM, QUOS NOBILIS ELEGIT ALE-A
QUI PRO NUPERIN CLAMANT, QUATORBUS LUCIORS
QUEM VOCITANT HOMINES, BRANDY, SUPERI CHERRY-BRANDY,
SÆPE ILLÍ LONG-CUT, VEL SMALL-CUT FLARE TOBACCO
SUNT SOLITI PIPOS. AST SI GENEROSIOR HERBA
(Per varios casus, per tot descernina rerum)
MUNDUNGUS DESIT, TUM NON FUCARE RECUSANT
BROWN-PAPER TOSTA, VEL QUOD FIT AROUND BED-MAT, HEE LABOR, HEC OPUS EST HEROS AMBECER SEDES!
AST EGO QUO RAPIR? QUO ME FÆRET ENTHEUS ARDOR, GRUBBE TUI MEMOREM? DIVINUM EXPANDE POEMÆ.
QUAE MORA? QUAE RATIO EST, QUIN GRUBBI PROTONIS
ANSER
VIRGILII, FLACCICI SIMILIS CANAT INTER OLORES?
At length the importunity of his friends prevailed and Mr. Grubb's song was published at Oxford under the following title:

THE BRITISH HEROES.
A NEW POEM IN HONOUR OF ST. GEORGE
BY MR. JOHN GRUB.
SCHOOL-MASTER OF CHRIST-CHURCH,
Oxon. 1686.

FAVETE LINGUIS: CARMINA NON PRIUS
AUDITA, MUSARUM SACERDOS CONTAS.
HON.
SOLD BY HENRY CLEMENTS. OXON.
The story of King Arthur old
Is very memorable,
The number of his valiant knights,
And roundness of his table:
The Knights around his table in
A circle sate, d'ye see;
And altogether made up one
Large hoop of chivalry.
He had a sword, both broad and sharp,
Y-cleped Caliburn,
Would cut a fint more easily
Than pen-knife cuts a corn;
As case-knife does a capon carve,
So would it carve a rock,
And split a man at single slash,
From noddle down to nock.
As Roman Augur's steel of yore
Dissected Tarquin's riddle,
So this would cut both conjurer
And whetstone thro' the middle.
He was the cream of Brecknock,
And flower of all the Welsh:
But George did the dragon fell,
And gave him a plucky squelsh. [France]
St. George was for England; St. Dennis was for
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense. [France]

Pendragon, like his father Jove,
Was fed with milk of goat;
And like him made a noble shield
Of she-goat's shaggy coat:
On top of burnish'd helmet he Did wear a crest of leeks;
And onions' heads, whose dreadful nod
Drew tears down hostile cheeks.
Ith and Welb blood did make him hot,
And very prone to ire;
H' was ting'd with brimstone, like a match,
And would as soon take fire,
As brimstone he took inwardly
When scurf gave him occasion,
His postern puff of wind was a
Sulphureous exhalation.
The Briton never tergivers'd,
But was for adverse drubbing,
And never turn'd his back to taunt,
But to a post for scrubbing.
His sword would serve for battle, or
For dinner, if you please;
When it had slain a Cheshire man,
'Twould toast a Cheshire cheese.
He wounded, and, in their own blood,
Did anabaptize Pagans:
But George made the dragon an Example to all dragons. [France]
St. George was for England; St. Dennis was for
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense. [France]

Brave Warwick Guy, at dinner time,
Challeng'd a gyant savage;
And straigt came out the unwieldy lout
Brim-full of wrath and cabbage:
He had a phiz of latitude,
And was full thick i' th' middle;
The cheeks of puffed trumpeter,
And paunch of squire Beadle.

But the knight fell'd him like an oak,
And did upon his back tread;
The valiant knight his weazan cut,
And Atropos his packthread.
Besides he fought with a dun cow,
As say the poets witty,
A dreadful dun, and horned too,
Like dun of Oxford city:
The fervent dog-days made her mad,
By causing heat of weather,
Syrius and Procyon baited her,
As bull-dogs did her father:
Grasiers, or butchers this fell beast.
E'er of her frolick hindred;
John Dossor* she'd knock down as flat.
As John knocks down her kindred:
Her heels would lay ye all along,
And kick into a swoon;
Frewin's t' cow-heels keep up your corpse,
But hers would beat you down.
She vanquish'd many a sturdy wight,
And proud was of the honour;
Was puff'd by mauling butchers so,
As if themselves had blown her.
At once she kic'd, and push't at Guy,
But all that would not fright him;
Who way'd his winyard o'er sir-loyn,
As if he'd gone to knight him.
He let her blood, frenzy to cure,
And eke he did her gall rip;
His tentant blade, like cook's long spit,
Ran thro' the monster's bald-rib:
He read'd up the vast crooked rib,
Instead of arch triumphal:
But George hit th' dragon such a pelt,
As made him on his bum fall.
St. George was for England; St. Dennis was for
France;
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

Tamerlain, with Tartarian bow,
The Turkish squadrons slew;
And fetch'd the pagan crescent down,
With half-moon made of yew:
His trusty bow proud Turks did gall
With showers of arrows thick,
And bow-strings, without strangling, sent
Grand-Visiers to old Nick:
Much turbants, and much Pagan pates
He made to humble in dust;
And heads of Saracens he fixt
On spear, as on a sign-post:
He coop'd in cage Bajazet the prop
Of Mahomet's religion,
As if 't had been the whispering bird,
That prompted him, the pigeon.
In Turkey-leather scabbard, he Did sheath his blade so trenchant:
But George he swing'd the dragon's tail,
And cut off every inch on't.
St. George was for England; St. Dennis was for
France;
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.

The amason Thalestris was Both beautiful and bold;

* A butcher that then served the college.
† A cook, who on fast nights was famous for selling cow-heel and tripe.
She sear'd her breasts with iron hot,
And bang'd her foes with cold,
Her hand was like the tool, wherewith
Jove keeps proud mortals under:
It shine just like his lightning,
And batter'd like his thunder.
Her eye darts lightning, that would blast
The proudest he that swagger'd
And melt the rapier of his soul,
In its corporeal scabbard.
Her beauty, and her drum to foes
Did cause amazement double;
As timorous larks amazed are
With light, and with a low-bell:
With beauty, and that lapland-charm,
Poor men she did bewitch all;
Still a blind whining lover had,
As Pallas had her scrich-owl.
She kept the chastness of a nun
In armour, as in cloyster:
But George undid the dragon just
As you'ld undo a oyster.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
Stout Hercules was offspring of Great Jove and fair Alcmena:
One part of him celestial was,
One part of him terrene,
To scale the hero's cradle walls
Two fiery snakes combin'd,
And, curling into swaddling cloths,
About the infant twin'd;
But he put out these dragons' fires,
And did their hissing stop;
As red-hot iron with hissing noise
Is quench'd in blacksmith's shop.
He cleans'd a stable, and rubb'd down
The horses of new-comers;
And out of horse-dung he rais'd fame
As Tom Wrench does cucumbers.
He made a river help him through;
Alpheus was under-groom;
The stream, disgust at office mean,
Run murmuring thro' the room:
This liquid ostler to prevent
Being tired with that long work,
His father Neptune's trident took,
Instead of three-tooth'd dung-fork.
This Hercules, as soldier, and
As spinster, could take pains;
His club would sometimes spin ye flax,
And sometimes knock out brains;
H' was fore'd to spin his miss a shift
By Juno's wrath and her-spite;
Fair Omphyle whipt him to his wheel,
As cook whips barking turn-spit.
From man, or churl, he well knew how
To get him lasting fame:
He'd pound a giant, till the blood,
And milk till butter came.
Often he fought with huge battoe,
And oftentimes he boxed;
Tapt a fresh monster once a month,
As Hervey; doth fresh hoghead,
He gave Anteus such a bug,
As wrestlers give in Cornwall:

But George he did the dragon kill,
As dead as any door-nail.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
The Gemini, sprung from an egg,
Were put into a cradle:
Their brains with knock'd and bottled-ale,
Were often-times full addle:
And, scarcely hatch'd, these sons of him,
That hurls the bolt trisulate,
With helmet-shell on tender head,
Did tussle with red-ey'd pole-cat,
Castor a horseman, Pollux tho'
A boxer was, I wist:
The one was fam'd for iron heel;
Th' other for leaden fist.
Pollux to shew he was a god,
When he was in a passion
With fist made noses fall down flat
By way of adoration:
This fist, as sure as French disease,
Demolish'd noses' ridges:
He, like a certain lord* was fam'd
For breaking down of bridges.
Castor the flame of fiery steed,
With well-spur'd boots took down;
As men, with leathern buckets, quench
A fire in country town.
His famous horse, that liv'd on oats,
Is sung on oaten quill;
By bards' immortal provender
The nag surviveth still.
This shelly brood on none but knives
Employ'd their brisk artillery:
And flew as naturally at rogues.
As eggs at thief in pillory,
Much sweat they spent in furious fight,
Much blood they did effuse:
Their whites they tended thro' the pores;
Their yolks thro' gaping wound;
Then both were cleans'd from blood and dust
To make a heavenly sign;
The lads were, like their armour, scow'd
And then hung up to shine;
Such were the heavenly double-Dicks
The sons of Jove and Tyndar:
But George he cut the dragon up,
As he had bin duck or windar.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
Gorgon a twisted adder wore
For knot upon her shoulder:
She kemb'd her hissing periwig,
And curling snakes did powder.
These snakes they made stiff changelings
Of all the folks they hist on;
They turned barbars into hones,
And mason's into free-stone:
Sworded magnetic Amazon
Her shield to load-stone changes;

* Lord Lovelace break down the bridges about Oxford, at the beginning of the Revolution. See on this subject a ballad in Smith's Poems, p. 102. Lond. 1715.
† It has been suggested by an ingenious correspondent that this was a popular subject at that time:
Not carted Bawd, or Dan de Foe,
In wooden Buff ere bluster'd so.
Smith's Poems, p. 117.
Then amorous sword by magic belt
Clung fast unto her haunches.
This shield long village did protect,
And kept the army from town,
And chang'd the bullies into rocks,
That came t' invade Long-Compton*.
She post-diluvian stores unmanus,
And Pyrrha's work unravels,
And stares Deucalion's handy boys
Into their primitive pebbles.
Red noses she to rubies turns,
And noddles into bricks;
But George made dragon laretive;
And gave him a bloody flix.
[France;
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.]

By boar-spear Meleager got
An everlasting name,
And out of haunch of basted swine,
He hew'd eternal fame.
This beast each hero's trousers ript,
And rudely shew'd his bare-breshc,
Prickt but the wem, and out there came
Heroic guts and garbage.
Legs were secur'd by iron boots
No more than peas by peascoads:
Brass helmets, with inclosed sculls,
Would crackle in's mouth like Chesnuts.
280
His tawny hairs erected were
By rage, that was resistless;
And wrath, instead of cober's wax,
Did stiffen his rising bristles.
His tusk lay'd dogs so dead asleep,
Nor horn, nor whip cou'd wake 'um:
It made them vent both their last blood,
And their last album-grecum.
But the knight gord' him with his spear,
To make of him a tame one,
290
And arrows thick, instead of cloves,
He stuck in monster's gammon.
For monumental pillar, that
His victory might be known,
He rais'd up, in cylindric form,
A collar of the brawn.
He sent his shade to shades below,
In Stygian mud to wallow;
And eke the stout St. George eftsoon,
He made the dragon follow.
300
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
[France;
Achilles of old Chiron learnt
The great horse for to ride;
H' was taught by th' Centaur's rational part,
The hinnible to bestride.
Bright silver feet, and shining face
Had that stout hero's mother;
As rapier 's silver'd at one end,
And wounds you at the other.
310
Her feet were bright, his feet were swift,
As hawk pursuing sparrow:
Her's had the metal, the speed
Of Braburn's silver arrow.

Thetis to double pedagogue
Commits her dearest boy;
Who bred him from a slender twig
To be the scourge of Troy;
But ere he lasht the Trojans, h' was
In Stygian waters steep;
As birch is soaked first in piss,
When boys are to be whipt.
With skin exceeding hard, he rose
From lake, so black and mudy,
As lobsters from the ocean rise,
With shell about their body:
And, as from lobster's broken claw,
Pick out the fish you might.
So might you from one unshell'd heel
Dig pieces of the knight.
His myrmidons robb'd Priam's barns
And hen-roosts, says the song;
Carried away both corn and eggs,
Like ants from whence they sprung.
Himself tore Hector's pantaloons,
And sent him down bare-breshc'd
To pedant Radamanthus, in
A posture to be switch'd.
But George he made the dragon look,
As if he had been bewitch'd.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
[France;
Full fatal to the Romans was
The Carthaginian Hanni-bal; him I mean, who gave them such
A devilish thump at Cannae:
Moors thick, as goats on Penmenmure,
Stood on the Alpes's front:
Their one-eyed guide*, like blinking mole,
Bor'd thro' the 'ind'ming' mount:
Who, baffled by the massy rock,
Toll vinegar for relief;
Like plowmen, when they hew their way
Thro' stubborn rump of beef.
As dancing louts from humid toes
Cast atoms of ill savour
To blinking Hyatt, when on vile crowd
He merriment does endeavour,
And saws from suffering timber out
Some wretched tune to quiver:
So Romans stuck and squeak'd at sight
Of African carnivor.
The tawny surface of his phiz
Did serve instead of vizard:
But George he made the dragon have
A grumbling in his gizard.
St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense.
[France;
The valour of Domitian,
It must not be forgotten;
Who from the jaws of worm-blowing flies,
Protected veal and mutton.
A squadron of flies errant,
Against the foe appears;
With regiments of buzzing knights,
And swarms of volunteers:

* See the account of Rolfricht Stones, in Dr. Plot's Hist of Oxfordshire.
† Bradburn, a gentleman commoner of Lincoln college, gave a silver arrow to be shot for by the archers of the university of Oxford.
‡ Hannibal had but one eye.
§ A one-eyed fellow, who pretended to make fiddles, as well as play on them; well known at that time in Oxford.

T 2
The warlike wasp encourag'd 'em
With animating hum;
And the loud brazen hornet next,
He was their kettle-drum:

The Spanish Don Cantharido
Did him most sorely pester,
And rais'd on skin of vent'rous knight
Full many a plaguy bluster.

A bee whipt thro' his button-hole,
As thro' key-hole a witch,
And stabb'd him with her little tuck
Drawn out of scabbard breech:

But the undaunted knight lifts up
An arm both big and brawny,
And slaht her so, that here lay head,
And there lay bag and honey:

Then 'mongst the rout he flew as swift,
As weapon made by Cyclops,
And bravely quell'd seditious buzz,
By dint of massy fly-flaps.

Surviving flies do curses breathe,
And maggots too at Caesar:
But George he shav'd the dragon's beard,
And Askelon * was his razor.

St. George he was for England; St. Dennis was for
Sing, Honi soit qui mal y pense. [France ;

John Grubb, the facetious writer of the foregoing song, makes a distinguished figure among the Oxford wits so humorously enumerated in the following distich:

Alma novem gemitibus Rhediviae poetas
Bub, Stubb, Grubb, Crabb, Trap, Young,
Carey, Tickel, Evans.

These were Bub Dodington (the late Lord Melcombe,) Dr. Stubbes, our poet Grubb, Mr. Crabb, Dr. Trapp, the poetry-professor, Dr. Edw. Young, the author of Night-Thoughts, Walter Carey, Thomas Tickel, Esq. and Dr. Evans the epigrammatist.

As for our poet Grubb, all that we can learn further of him, is contained in a few extracts from the University Register, and from his epitaph. It appears from the former that he was matriculated in 1667, being the son of John Grubb, "de Acton Burnell in comitatu Salop. pauperis." He took his degree of Bachelor of Arts, June 28, 1671: and became Master of Arts, June 28, 1675. He was appointed Head Master of the Grammar School at Christ Church; and afterwards chosen into the same employment at Gloucester, where he died in 1697, as appears from his monument in the church of St. Mary de Crypt in Gloucester, which is inscribed with the following epitaph:

H. S. E.

JOHANNES GRUBB, A.M.
Natus apud Acton Burnell in agro Salopiensi
Anno Dom. 1643.

Cujus variam in linguas notitiam,
et felicem erudiendia pueros industriam, grata adhuc memoria testatur Oxonium.
Ibi enim Ædi Christi initiatus,
artes excelluit:

Pueros ad easdem mox excelendas accurate formavit:

Huc demum
unanimi omnium consensus accitus, eamdem suscipit 'provinciam,
quam feliciter adeo absolvit, ut nihil optandum sit nisi ut diutius nobis interfusset?

Fuit enim
proper festivam ingeni suiavitatem, simplicem morum candorem, et precipuum erga cognatos benevolentiam omibus desideratissimum,
Obiit 2do die Aprilis, Anno D'ni, 1697.
Etatis suae 31.
LUCY AND COLIN.

But love had, like the canker-worm,
Consum'd her early prime:
The rose grew pale, and left her cheek;
She dy'd before her time.

"Awake!" she cry'd, "thy true love calls,
Come from her midnight grave;
Now let thy pity hear the maid
Thy love refus'd to save.

"This is the dark and dreary hour,
When injur'd ghosts complain;
Now wawning graves give up their dead,
To haunt the faithless swain.

"Bethink thee, William, of thy fault,
Thy pledge and broken oath:
And give me back my maiden vow,
And give me back my troth.

"Why did you promise love to me,
And not that promise keep?
Why did you swear mine eyes were bright,
Yet leave those eyes to weep?

"How could you say my face was fair,
And yet that face forsake?
How could you win my virgin heart,
Yet leave that heart to break?

"Why did you say my lip was sweet,
And made the scarlet pale?
And why did I, young witless maid,
Believe the flattering tale?

"That face, alas! no more is fair;
These lips no longer red:
Dark are my eyes, now clos'd in death,
And every charm is fled.

"The hungry worm my sister is;
This winding-sheet I wear;
And cold and weary lasts our night,
Till that last morn appear.

"But hark! the cock has warn'd me hence!
A long and last adieu!
Come see, false man, how low she lies,
Who died for love of you."

The lark sung loud; the morning smil'd
With beams of rosy red;
Pale William shook in ev'ry limb,
And raving left his bed.

He hied him to the fatal place
Where Margaret's body lay:
And stretch'd him on the grass-green turf,
That wrap't her breathless clay:

And thrice he call'd on Margaret's name,
And thrice he wept full sore:
Then laid his cheek to her cold grave,
And word spake never more.

* * In a late publication, intitled "The Friends, &c." Lond. 1773, 2 vols. 12mo, (in the first volume) is inserted a copy of the foregoing ballad, with very great variations, which the Editor of that work contends was the original; and that Mallet adopted it for his own, and altered it, as here given.—But the superior beauty and simplicity of the present copy gives it so much more the air of an original, that it will rather be believed that some transcriber altered it from Mallet's, and adapted the lines to his own taste; than which nothing is more common in popular songs and ballads.

XVII.

LUCY AND COLIN.

----was written by Thomas Tickell, Esq. the celebrated friend of Mr. Addison, and Editor of his works. He was the son of a Clergyman in the North of England; had his education at Queen's College, Oxon; was under-secretary to Mr. Addison and Mr. Craggs, when successively secretaries of state; and was lastly (in June 1724) appointed secretary to the Lords Justices in Ireland, which place he held till his death in 1740. He acquired Mr. Addison's patronage by a poem in praise of the opera of Rosamond, written while he was at the University.

It is a tradition in Ireland, that this song was written at Castletown, in the county of Kildare, at the request of the then Mrs. Conolly—probably on some event recent in that neighbourhood.

Of Leinster, fam'd for maidens fair,
Bright Lucy was the grace;
Nor e'er did Liffy's limpid stream
Reflect so fair a face.

Till luckless love and pining care
Impair'd her rosy hue,
Her coral lip, and damask cheek;
And eyes of glossy blue.

Oh! have you seen a lily pale,
When beating rains descend?
So droop'd the slow-consuming maid;
Her life now near its end.

By Lucy warn'd, of flattering swains
Take heed, ye easy fair:
Of vengeance due to broken vows,
Ye perjured swains beware.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And at her window, shrieking thrice,
The raven flap'd his wing.

Too well the love-lorn maiden knew
That solemn boding sound;
And thus in dying words, bespoke
The virgins weeping round.

"I hear a voice you cannot hear,
Which says, I must not stay:
I see a hand you cannot see,
Which beckons me away."
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>THE BOY AND THE MANTLE.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
|"By a false heart, and broken vows, In early youth I die. Am I to blame, because his bride Is thrice as rich as I?" "Ah Colin! give not her thy vows; Vows due to me alone: Nor thou, fond maid, receive his kiss, Nor think him all thy own."
"To-morrow in the church to wed, Impatient, both prepare; But know, fond maid, and know, false That Lucy will be there."
"Then, bear my corse, ye comrades, bear, The bridegroom blithe to meet; He in his wedding-trim so gay, I in my winding-sheet." She spoke, she died;—her corse was borne, The bridegroom blithe to meet; He in his wedding-trim so gay, She in her winding-sheet. Then what were perjured Colin's thoughts? How were those nuptials kept? The bride-men flock'd round Lucy dead, And all the village wept. Confusion, shame, remorse, despair, At once his bosom swell: The damps of death bedew'd his brow, He shook, he groan'd, he fell. From the vain bride (ah, bride no more!) The varying crimson fled, When, stretch'd before her rival's corse, She saw her husband dead. Then to his Lucy's new-made grave, Convey'd by trembling swains, One mould with her beneath one sod, For ever now remains. Oft at their grave the constant hind And plighted maid are seen; With garlands gay, and true-love knots, They deck the sacred green. But, swain forsworn, whoe'er thou art, This hollow'd spot forbear; Remember Colin's dreadful fate, And fear to meet him there.|

|XVIII.|

THE BOY AND THE MANTLE.

As Revised and altered by a Modern Hand.

Mr. Warton, in his ingenious Observations on Spenser, has given his opinion, that the fiction of the "Boy and the Mantle" is taken from an old French piece entitled "Le Court Mantel," quoted by M. de St. Palaye, in his curious "Memoires sur l'ancienne Chevalerie," Paris, 1739, 2 tom. 12mo; who tells us the story resembles that of Ariosto's inchantè cup, "Tis possible our English poet may have taken the hint of this subject from that old French romance; but he does not appear to have copied it in the manner of execution: to which (if one may judge from the specimen given in the Memoires) that of the Ballad does not bear the least resemblance. After all, 'tis most likely that all the old stories concerning King Arthur are originally of British growth, and that what the French and other Southern nations have of this kind were at first exported from this island. See Memoires de l'Acad. des. Inscript. tom. xx. p. 332.

In the "Fabliaux en Contes," 1781, 5 tom. 12mo, of M. Le Grand (tom. i. p. 54), is printed a modern Version of the Old Tale Le Court Mantel, under a new title, Le Manteau maltaillé, which contains the story of this Ballad much enlarged, so far as regards the Mantle, but without any mention of the Knife or the Horn. In Carleile dwelt King Arthur, A prince of passing might; And there maintain'd his table round, Beset with many a knight.

And there he kept his Christmas With mirth and princely cheere, When, lo! a strange and cunning boy Before him did appeare.

A kirtle and a mantle This boy had him upon, With brooches, rings, and owches, Full daintily bedone.

He had a sarke of silk About his middle meet; And thus, with seemely curtesie, He did King Arthur greet.

"God speed thee, brave King Arthur, Thus feasting in thy bowre; And Guenever thy goodly queen, That fair and peerlesse flower.

"Ye gallant lords, and lordinges, I wish you all take heed, Lest, what you deem a blooming rose Should prove a canker weed."

Then straitway from his bosome A little wand he drew; And with it eke a mantle Of wondrous shape and hew.
"Now have thou here, King Arthur,
Have this here of mee.
And give unto thy comely queen,
All-shapen as you see.

"No wife it shall become,
That once hath been to blame."
Then every knight in Arthur's court
Slye glanced at his dame.
And first came Lady Guenever,
The mantle she must trye,
This dame, she was new-fangleed,
And of a roving eye.

When she had tane the mantle,
And all was with it cladde,
From top to toe it shiver'd down,
As tho' with sheers beshradde.
One while it was too long,
Another while too short,
And wrinkled on her shoulders
In most unseemly sort,
Now green, now red it seemed,
Then all of sable hue.
"Beshrow me quoth King Arthur,
I think thou beest not true."

Down she threw the mantle,
Ne longer would not stay;
But storming like a fury,
To her chamber flung away.
She curst the whoreson weaver,
That had the mantle wrought:
And doubtly curst the froward impe,
Who thither had it brought.
"I had rather live in desarts
Beneath the green-wood tree:
Than here, base king, among thy groomes,
The sport of them and thee."

Sir Kay call'd forth his lady,
And bade her to come near:
"Yet dame if thou be guilty,
I pray thee now forbear."
This lady, pertly gigling,
With forward step came on,
And boldly to the little boy
With fearless face is gone.
When she had tane the mantle,
With purpose for to wear:
It shrunk up to her shoulder,
And left her bside bare.
Then every merry knight,
That was in Arthur's court,
Gib'd and laught, and flouted,
To see that pleasant sport.
Downe she threw the mantle,
No longer bold or gay,
But with a face all pale and wan,
To her chamber slunk away.

Then forth came an old knight,
A pattering o'er his creed;
And proffered to the little boy
Five nobles to his meed;
"And all the time of Christmass
Plumb-porridge shall be thine,
If thou wilt let my lady fair
Within the mantle shine."
A saint his lady seemed,
With step demure and slow,
And gravely to the mantle
With mincing pace doth goe.

When she the same had taken,
That was so fine and thin
It shrivell'd all about her,
And show'd her dainty skin
Ah! little did her mincing,
Or his long prayers bestead;
She had no more hung on her,
Than a tassel and a thread.

Down she threwe the mantle,
With terror and dismay,
And, with a face of scarlet,
To her chamber hyed away.
Sir Cradock call'd his lady,
And bade her to come neare,
"Come win this mantle, lady,
And do me credit here."

"Come win this mantle, lady,
For now it shall be thine,
If thou hast never done amiss,
Sith first I made thee mine."

The lady gently blushing,
With modest grace came on,
And now to trye the wondrous charm
Courageously is gone.
When she had tane the mantle,
And put it on her backe,
About the hem it seemed
To wrinkle and to cracke.
"Lye still," shee cryed,  "O mantle!
And shame me not for nought,
I'll freely own whate'er amiss,
Or blameful I have wrought."

"Once I kist Sir Cradocke
Beneathe the green wood tree:
Once I kist Sir Cradocke's mouth
Before he married mee."

When thus she had her shriven,
And her worst fault had told,
The mantle soon became her
Right comely as it shold.
Most rich and fair of colour,
Like gold it glittering shone
And much the knights in Arthur's court
Admir'd her every one.
Then towards King Arthur's table
The boy he turn'd his eye:
Where stood a boar's head garnished
With bayes and rosemarye.

When thrice he o'er the boar's head
His little wand had drawne,
Quoth he, "There's never a cuckold's knife
Can carve this head of brawne."

Then some their whittles rubbed
On whetstone, and on hone:
Some threwe them under the table,
And swore that they had none.

Sir Cradock had a little knife,
Of steel and iron made;
And in an instant thro' the skull
He thrust the shining blade.

He thrust the shining blade
Full easily and fast;
And every knight in Arthur's court
A morsel had to taste.

The boy brought forth a horne,
All golden was the rim:
Said he, "No cuckolde ever can Set mouth unto the brim.

"No cuckold can this little horne
Lift fairly to his head;
But or on this, or that side,
He shall the liquor shed."

Some shed it on their shoulder,
Some shed it on their thigh;
And hee that could not hit his mouth,
Was sure to hit his eye.

Thus he, that was a cuckold,
Was known of every man:
But Cradock lifted easily,
And wan the golden can.

Thus boar's head, horn and mantle,
Were this fair couple's meed:
And all such constant lovers,
God send them well to speed.

Then down in rage came Guenever,
And thus could spightful say,
"Sir Cradock's wife most wrongfully
Hath borne the prize away.

"See yonder shameless woman,
That makes herself so clean:
Yet from her pillow taken
Thrice five gallants have been.

"Priests, clarkes, and wedded men,
Have her lewd pillow prest:
Yet she the wonderous prize forsooth
Must beare from all the rest."

Then bespake the little boy,
Who had the same in hold:
"Chastize thy wife, King Arthur,
Of speech she is too bold:

"Of speech she is too bold,
Of carriage all too free;
Sir king, she hath within thy hall
A cuckold made of thee.

"All frolick light and wanton
She hath her carriage borne:
And given thee for a kingely crown
To wear a cuckold's horne."

 The Rev. Evan Evans, editor of the Specimens of Welsh Poetry, 4to, affirmed that the story of the "Boy and the Mantle," is taken from what is related in some of the old Welsh MSS, of Tegan Earfron, one of King Arthur's mistresses. She is said to have possessed a mantle that would not fit any modest or incontinent woman; this (which the old writers say, was reckoned among the curiosities of Britain) is frequently alluded, to by the old Welsh Bards.

Carlisle, so often mentioned in the Ballads of King Arthur, the editor once thought might probably be a corruption of Caer-leon, an ancient British city on the river Uske, in Monmouthshire, which was one of the places of King Arthur's chief residence; but he is now convinced that it is no other than Carlisle, in Cumberland; the old English Minstrels, being most of them Northern men, naturally represented the Hero of Romance as residing in the North: and many of the places mentioned in the Old Ballads are still to be found there; as Ternswalding, &c.

Near Penrith is still seen a large circle, surrounded by a mound of earth, which retains the name of Arthur's Round Table.

XIX.

THE ANCIENT FRAGMENT OF THE MARRIAGE OF SIR GAWAINE.

The Second Poem in the third Series, intitled "The Marriage of Sir Gawaine, having been offered to the Reader with large conjectural Supplements and Corrections, the old Fragment itself is here literally, and exactly printed from the Editor's folio MS., with all its defects, inaccuracies, and errata; that such austere Antiquaries as complain that the ancient copies have not been always rigidly adhered to may see how unfit for publication many of the pieces would have been if all the blunders, corruptions, and nonsense of illiterate Reciters and Transcribers had been superstitiously retained, without some attempt to correct and amend them.
This Ballad had most unfortunately suffered by having half of every leaf in this part of the MS. torn away; and, as about nine stanzas generally occur in the half-page now remaining, it is concluded that the other half contained nearly the same number of stanzas.

KINGE Arthur lies in merry Carleile
and seemly is to see
and there he hath with him Queene Genever
yt bride so bright of blee

And there he hath with him Queene Genever
yt bride soe bright in bower
& all his barons about him stooode yt were both stiffe and stowre

The K. kept a royall Christmassse of mirth & great honor
... when...

And bring me word what thing it is ye a woman most desire this shalbe thy ransomse Arthur he sayes for Ile haue noe other hier

K. Arthur then held vp his hand according thence as was the law he tooke his leave of the baron there and homword can be draw

And when he came to Merry Carlile to his chamber he is gone
And ther came to him his Cozen Sr Gawaine as he did make his mone

And there came to him his Cozen Sr Gawaine* yt was a curteous knight
why sigh yox soo sore ruckle Arthur he said or who hath done the vnright

O peace o peace thou gentle Gawaine yt faie may thee be sflall for if thou knew my sighing soo deepe thou wold not merauale att all

For when I came to teame wadding a bold barron there I fand wth a great club vpon his backe standing stiffe & strong

And he asked me wether I wold fight or from him I shold be gone
o else I must him a ransomse pay & soe dep't him from

To fight with him I saw noe cause me thought it was not meet for he was stiffe & strong wth all his strokes were nothing sweete

Therfor this is my ransomse Gawaine
I ought to him to pay
I must come againe as I am sworne
vpon the Newyeers day

And I must bring him word what thing it is [About Nine Stanzas wanting.]

Then King Arthur drest him for to ryde in one soo rich array towards the foresaid Tearne wadding yt he might keepe his day

And as he rode over a moore hee see a lady where shee sate betwixt an oke and a greene hollen she was cladd in red scarlett

Then there as shold have stood her mouth then there was sett her eye the other was in her forhead fast the way that she might see

Her nose was crooked & turnd outward her mouth stood foilde a wry a worse formed lady thee shee was neuerman saw wth his eye

To halch vpon him k. Arthur this lady was full faine but k. Arthur had forgott his lesson what he should say againe

What knight art thou the lady sayd that wlt not speake tome of me thou nothing dismayd tho I be ugly to see for I haue halched you courteouselye

& you will not me againe yet I may happen Sr knight shee said to ease thee of thy paine

Give thou ease me lady he said or helpe me any thing thou shalt haue gentle Gawaine my cozen
& marry him wth a ring

Why if I helpe thee not thou noble k. Arthur of thy owne hearts desiringe of gentle Gawaine.....
[About Nine Stanzas wanting.]

And when he came to the tearne wading the baron there cold he srinde* with a great weapon on his backe standing stiffe & stronge

And then he tooke k. Arthur's letters in his hands
& away he cold them, fling
& then he puld out a good browne sword
& cryd himselfe a k.

And he sayd I haue thee & and thy land Arthur to doe as it pleaseth me for this is not thy ransomse sure therefore yeeld thee to me

And then bespoke him noble Arthur
& bade him hold his hands
& give me leave to speake my mind in defence of all my land

* Sic.  + Sic.

* Sic MS.
THE ANCIENT FRAGMENT OF THE MARRIAGE OF SIR GAWAINE.

- the * said as I came over a More
  I see a lady where shee sate between an oke & a green holên shee was clad in red scarlette

- And she says a woman will have her will & this is all her cheef desire doe me right as thou art a baron of akchill this is thy ransome & all thy hyer

- He says an early evningence light on her she walks on yonder more it was my sister that told thee this she is a misshappen hore

- But here Ile make mine avow to god to do her an euill turne for an euuer I may theafe theefe get in a fyer I will her burner

[About Nine Stanzas wanting.]

THE SECOND PART.

Sir Lancelott & Sr Steven bold they rode with them that day and the formost of the company there rode the steward Kay

Soo did Sr Banier & Sr Bore
Sr Garrett wth them so gay soe did Sr Tristeram yt gentle kt
& to the forest fresh & gay

And when he came to the greene forest vnderneath a greene holly tree their sate that lady in red scarlet yt vnseemly was to see

Sr Kay beheld this Lady's face & looked upon her suire whosoever kisses this lady he says
of his kisse he stands in feare

Sr Kay beheld the lady againe & looked upon her snout whosoever kisses this lady he saies
of his kisse he stands in doubt

Peace coz. Kay then said Sr Gawaine amend thee of thy life
for there is a knight amongst us all yt must marry her to his wife

What vHELL do th: wife then said Sr Kay in the duella name anon gett me a wife where ere I may for I had rather be slaine

Then soome tooke vp their hawkes in hast
& some tooke vp their hounds
& some saire they wol not marry her for Citty nor for towne

And then be spake him noble k. Arthur & saire there by this day for a little foule sight & misliking

[About Nine Stanzas wanting.]

Then shee said choose thee gentle Gawaine truth as I doe say
wether thou wilt have me in this liknesse in the night or else in the day

And then bespake him Gentle Gawaine
wth one soe mild of moode says well I know what I wold say god grant it may be good

To have thee fowle in the night when I wth thee shold play yet I had rather if I might have thee fowle in the day

What when Lords goe wth ther seires * shee said both to the Ale and wine alas then I must hyde my selfe
I must not goe withinne

And then bespake him gentle gawaine
said Lady thats but a skill
And because thou art my owne lady thou shalt have all thy will

Then she said blessed be thou gentle Gawaine this day yt I thee see for as thou see me att this time from henceforth I wilbe

My father was an old knight
& yet it chanced soo that he married a young lady yt brought me to this woe

Shee witched me being a faire young Lady to the greene forest to dwell
& there I must walke in womans liknesse most like a feind of hell

She witched my brother to a Carlist B . . . .

[About Nine Stanzas wanting.] that looked soo foule & that was wont on the wild more to goe

Come kisse her Brother Kay then said Sr Gawaine
& amend the of thy life
I swere this is the same lady yt I married to my wife.

Sr Kay kissed that lady bright standing vpon his feeete he swore as he was true knight the spice was neuer so sweete

Well Coz. Gawaine says Sr Kay thy chance is fallen arright for thou hast gotten one of the fairest maides
I euer saw wt my sight

It is my fortune said Sr Gawaine for my Vnckle Arthurs sake
I am glad as grasse wold be of raine great Joy that I may take

* Sic in MS.

* Sic in MS. pro feires, i. e. Mates.
THE HERMIT OF WARKWORTH.

Sr Gawaine toke the lady by the one arme
Sr Kay toke her by the tother they led her straight to k. Arthur as they were brother & brother

K. Arthur welcomed them there all & soe did lady Geneuer his queene with all the knights of the round table
most seemly to be seene

K. Arthur beheld that lady faire that was so faire & bright

he thanked christ in trinity for Sr Gawaine that gentle knight

Soo did the knights both more and least rejoyced all that day for the good chance yt hapened was to Sr Gawaine & his lady gay. Finis

In the Fac Simile Copies, after all the care which has been taken, it is very possible that a redundant e, &c. may have been added or omitted.

THE HERMIT OF WARKWORTH.

This Ballad, together with that already printed, intitled "The Friar of Orders Gray," forming what may be considered the whole of Bishop Percy's original compositions, is here appended as a necessary addition to the foregoing collection.

FIT I.

DARK was the night, and wild the storm,
And loud the torrent's roar;
And loud the sea was heard to dash
Against the distant shore.

Musing on man's weak hapless state,
The lonely Hermit lay;
When, lo! he heard a female voice
Lament in sore dismay.

With hospitable haste he rose,
And wak'd his sleeping fire;
And snatching up a lighted brand,
Forth hied the rev'rend sire.

All sad beneath a neighbouring tree
A beauteous maid he found,
Who beat her breast, and with her tears
Bedew'd the mossy ground.

"O weep not, lady, weep not so;
Nor let vain fears alarm;
My little cell shall shelter thee,
And keep thee safe from harm."

"It is not for myself I weep,
Nor for myself I fear;
But for my dear and only friend,
Who lately left me here:

"And while some sheltering bower he sought
Within this lonely wood,
Ah! sore I fear his wandering feet
Have slip't in yonder flood."

"O! trust in Heaven," the Hermit said,
"And to my cell repair!
Doubt not but I shall find thy friend,
And ease thee of thy care."

Then climbing up his rocky stairs,
He scales the cliff so high;
And calls aloud, and waves his light
To guide the stranger's eye.

Among the thickets long he winds,
With careful steps and slow:
At length a voice return'd his call,
Quick answering from below:

"O tell me, father, tell me true,
If you have chanc'd to see
A gentle maid, I lately left
Beneath some neighbouring tree:

"But either I have lost the place,
Or she hath gone astray:
And much I fear this fatal stream
Hath snatch'd her hence away."

"Praise Heaven, my son," the Hermit said;
The lady's safe and well."
And soon he join'd the wandering youth,
And brought him to his cell.

Then well was seen, these gentle friends,
They lov'd each other dear:
The youth he press'd her to his heart;
The maid let fall a tear.

Ah! seldom had their host, I weep,
Beheld so sweet a pair:
The youth was tall, with manly bloom;
She, slender, soft, and fair.

The youth was clad in forest green,
With bugle-horn so bright:
She in a silken robe and scarf,
Snatch'd up in hasty flight.

"Sit down, my children," says the sage;
"Sweet rest your limbs require!"
Then heaps fresh fuel on the hearth,
And mends his little fire.
"Partake," he said, "my simple store,
Dried fruits, and milk, and curds;"
And spreading all upon the board,
Invites with kindly words.

"Thanks, father, for thy bounteous fare;"
The youthful couple say:
Then freely ate, and made good cheer,
And talk'd their cares away.

"Now say, my children, (for perchance
My counsel may avail),
What strange adventure brought you here
Within this lonely dale?"

"First tell me, father," said the youth,
"(Nor blame mine eager tongue),
What town is near? What lands are these?
And to what lord belong?"

"Alas! my son," the Hermit said,
"Why do I live to say,
The rightful lord of these domains
Is banish'd far away?"

"Ten winters now have shed their snows
On this my lowly hall,
Since valiant Hotspur (so the North
Our youthful lord did call)

"Against Fourth Henry Bolingbroke
Led up his northern powers,
And, stoutly fighting, lost his life
Near proud Salopia's towers.

"One son he left, a lovely boy,
His country's hope and heir;
And, oh! to save him from his foes
It was his grandsire's care.

"In Scotland safe he plac'd the child
Beyond the reach of strife,
Nor long before the brave old Earl
At Braham lost his life.

"And now the Percy name, so long
Our northern pride and boast,
Lies hid, alas! beneath a cloud;
Their honours reft and lost.

"No chiefrain of that noble house
Now leads our youth to arms;
The bordering Scots despoil our fields,
And ravage all our farms.

"Their halls and castles, once so fair,
Now moulder in decay;
Proud strangers now usurp their lands,
And bear their wealth away.

"Nor far from hence, where you full stream
Runs winding down the lea,
Fair Warkworth lifts her lofty towers,
And overlooks the sea.

"Those towers, alas! now lie forlorn,
With noisome weeds o'erspread,
Where feasted lords and courtly dames,
And where the poor were fed.

"Meantime far off, 'mid Scottish hills,
The Percy lives unknown:
On strangers' bounty he depends,
And may not claim his own.

"O might I with these aged eyes
But live to see him here,
Then should my soul depart in bliss!"—
He said, and dropt a tear.

"And is the Percy still so lov'd
Of all his friends and thee?
Then, bless me, father," said the youth,
"For I, thy guest, am he."

Silent he gaz'd, then turn'd aside
To wipe the tears he shed;
And lifting up his hands and eyes,
Pour'd blessings on his head:

"Welcome, our dear and much-lov'd lord,
Thy country's hope and care:
But who may this young lady be,
That is so wondrous fair?"

"Now, father! listen to my tale,
And thou shalt know the truth:
And let thy sage advice direct
My inexperienced youth.

"In Scotland I've been nobly bred
Beneath the Regent's hand,
In feats of arms, and every lore
To fit me for command.

"With fond impatience long I burn'd
My native land to see:
At length I won my guardian friend
To yield that boon to me.

"Then up and down in hunter's garb
I wander'd as in chase,
Till in the noble Neville's house
I gain'd a hunter's place.

"Some time with him I liv'd unknown,
Till I'd the hap so rare
To please this young and gentle dame,
That Baron's daughter fair."

"Now, Percy," said the blushing maid,
"The truth I must reveal;
Soul's great and generous, like to thine,
Their noble deeds conceal.

"It happen'd on a summer's day, —
Led by the fragrant breeze,
I wander'd forth to take the air
Among the green-wood trees.

"Sudden a band of rugged Scots,
That near in ambush lay,
Moss-troopers from the border-side,
There seiz'd me for their prey.

* Robert Stuart, Duke of Albany. See the continuation of Fordun's Scoti-Chronicon, cap. 18, cap. 23, &c.
† Ralph Neville, first Earl of Westmoreland, who chiefly resided at his two castles of Brancepeth, and Raby, both in the Bishoprick of Durham.
"My shricks had all been spent in vain;
But Heaven, that saw my grief,
Brought this brave youth within my call,
Who flew to my relief."

"With nothing but his hunting spear,
And dagger in his hand,
He sprung like lightning on my foes,
And caus'd them soon to stand."

"He fought till more assistance came:
The Scots were overthrown;
Thus freed me, captive, from their bands,
To make me more his own."

"O happy day!" the youth replied:
"Blest were the wounds I bear!
From that fond hour she deign'd to smile,
And listen to my prayer."

"And when she knew my name and birth,
She vow'd to be my bride;
But oh! we fear'd (alas, the while!)
Her princely mother's pride:"

"Sister of haughty Bolingbroke,
Our house's ancient foe,
To me, I thought, a banish'd wight,
Could ne'er such favour shew."

"Despairing then to gain consent,
At length to fly with me
I won this lovely timorous maid;
To Scotland bound are we."

"This evening, as the night drew on,
Fearing we were pursued,
We turn'd adown the right-hand path,
And gain'd this lonely wood:"

"Then lighting from our weary steeds
To shun the pelting shower,
We met thy kind conducting hand,
And reach'd this friendly bower."

"Now rest ye both," the Hermit said;
"Awhile your cares forego:
Nor, Lady, scorn my humble bed:
—We'll pass the night below."

FIT II.

LOVELY smil'd theblushing morn,
And every storm was fled:
But lovelier far, with sweeter smile,
Fair Eleanor left her bed.

She found her Henry all alone,
And cheer'd him with his sight;
The youth consulting with his friend
Had watch'd the livelong night.

What sweet surprise o'erpower'd her breast!
Her cheek what blushes dyed,
When fondly he besought her there
To yield to be his bride!!

"Within this lonely hermitage
There is a chapel meet:
Then grant, dear maid, my fond request,
And make my bliss complete."

"O Henry, when thou deign'st to sue,
Can I thy suit withstand?
When thou, lov'd youth, hast won my heart,
Can I refuse my hand?"

"For thee I left a father's smiles,
And mother's tender care;
And whether weal or woe betide,
Thy lot I mean to share."

"And wilt thou then, O generous maid!
Such matchless favour shew,
To share with me, a banish'd wight,
My peril, pain, or woe?"

"Now Heaven, I trust, hath joys in store
To crown thy constant breast:
For know, fond hope assures my heart
That we shall soon be blest.

"Not far from hence stands Coquet Isle*
Surrounded by the sea;
There dwells a holy friar, well known
To all thy friends and thee;"

"'Tis Father Bernard, so rever'd
For every worthy deed;
To Raby Castle he shall go,
And for us kindly plead.

"To fetch this good and holy man
Our reverence host is gone;
And soon, I trust, his pious hands
Will join us both in one."

Thus they in sweet and tender talk
The lingering hours beguile:
At length they see the hoary sage
Come from the neighbouring isle.

With pious joy and wonder mix'd
He greets the noble pair,
And glad consents to join their hands
With many a fervent prayer.

Then strait to Raby's distant walls
He kindly wends his way:
Meantime in love and dalliance sweet
They spend the livelong day.

And now, attended by their host,
The Hermitage they view'd,
Deep-hewn within a craggy cliff,
And overhung with wood.

* Joan, Countess of Westmorland, mother of the young lady, was daughter of John of Gaunt, and half sister of King Henry IV.

† Adjoining to the cliff which contains the Chapel of the Hermitage, are the remains of a small building, in which the Hermit dwelt. This consisted of one lower apartment, with a little bedchamber over it, and is now in ruins; whereas the Chapel, cut in the solid rock, is still very entire and perfect.

* In the little island of Coquet, near Warkworth, are still seen the ruins of a cell, which belonged to the Benedictine monks of Tynemouth-Abbey.
And near a flight of shapely steps,
All cut with nicest skill,
And piercing through a stony arch,
Ran winding up the hill:

There deck'd with many a flower and herb
His little garden stands;
With fruitful trees in shady rows,
All planted by his hands.

Then, scoop'd within the solid rock,
Three sacred vaults he shows:
The chief, a chapel, neatly arch'd,
On branching columns rose.

Each proper ornament was there,
That should a chapel grace;
The lattice for confession fram'd,
And holy-water vase.

O'er either door a sacred text
Invites to godly fear;
And in a little sculptur'd hung
The cross, and crown, and spear.

Up to the altar's ample breadth
Two easy steps ascend;
And near, a glittering solemn light
Two well-wrought windows lend.

Beside the altar rose a tomb
All in the living stone;
On which a young and beauteous maid
In goody sculptur'd shone.

A kneeling angel, fairly carv'd,
Lean'd hovering o'er her breast;
A weeping warrior at her feet;
And near to these her crest *.

The cliff, the vault, but chief the tomb
Attract the wondering pair;
Eager they ask, "What hapless dame
Lies sculptur'd here so fair?"

The Hermit sigh'd, the Hermit wept,
For sorrow scarce could speak:
At length he wip'd the trickling tears
That all bedew'd his cheek.

"Alas! my children, human life
Is but a vane of woe;
And very mournful is the tale
Which ye so fain would know!"

THE HERMIT'S TALE.

Youxla lord, thy grandsire had a friend,
In days of youthful fame;
Yon distant hills were his domains,
Sir Bertram was his name.

Where'er the noble Percy fought,
His friend was at his side;
And many a skirmish with the Scots
Their early valour tried.

Young Bertram lov'd a beauteous maid,
As fair as fair might be;
The dew-drop on the lily's cheek
Was not so fair as she.

Fair Widdrington the maiden's name,
Yon towers her dwelling-place*;
Her sire an old Northumbrian chief,
Devoted to thy race.

Many a lord, and many a knight,
To this fair damsel came;
But Bertram was her only choice;
For him she felt a flame.

Lord Percy pleaded for his friend,
Her father soon consents;
None but the beauteous maid herself
His wishes now prevents.

But she, with studied fond delays,
Defers the blissful hour;
And loves to try his constancy,
And prove her maiden power.

"That heart," she said, "is lightly priz'd,
Which is too lightly won;
And long shall rue that easy maid
Who yields her love too soon."

Lord Percy made a solemn feast
In Alnwick's princely hall;
And there came lords, and there came knights,
His chiefs and barons all.

With wassail, mirth, and revelry,
The castle rang around:
Lord Percy call'd for song and harp,
And pipes of martial sound.

The minstrels of thy noble house,
All clad in robes of blue,
With silver crescents on their arms,
Attend in order due.

The great achievements of thy race
They sung; their high command:
How valiant Mainfred o'er the seas
First led his northern band.

Brave Galfrid next to Normandy
With venturous Rollo came;
And, from his Norman castles won,
Assum'd the Percy name.

They sung how in the Conqueror's fleet
Lord William shipp'd his powers,
And gain'd a fair young Saxon bride
With all her hands and towers.

* This is a Bull's Head, the crest of the Widdrington family. All the figures, &c., here described are still visible, only somewhat effaced with length of time.

* Widdrington Castle is about five miles south of Warkworth.

† In Lower Normandy are three places of the name of Percy: whence the family took the surname of De Percy.

‡ William de Percy (fifth in descent from Galfrid or Geoffrey de Percy, son of Mainfred) assisted in the conquest of England, and had given him the large possessions, in Yorkshire, of Emma de Pote (so the Norman writers name her), whose father, a great Saxon lord, had been slain fighting along with Harold. This young lady, William Then journeying to the Holy Land,
There bravely fought and died;
But first the silver crescent won,
Some paynim Solder's pride.

They sung how Agnes, beauteous heir,
The Queen's own brother wed,
Lord Josceline, sprung from Charlemagne,
In princely Brabant bred*;

How he the Percy name reviv'd,
And how his noble line,
Still foremost in their country's cause,
With godlike ardour shine.

With loud acclamis the list'ning crowd
Applaud the master's song,
And deeds of arms and war became
The theme of every tongue.

Now high heroic acts they tell,
Their perils past recall:
When, lo! a damsel young and fair
Stepp'd forward through the hall.

She Bertram courteously address'd;
And, kneeling on her knee,—
"Sir knight, the lady of thy love
Hath sent this gift to thee."

Then forth she drew a glittering helm,
Well plaited many a fold;
The casque was wrought of temper'd steel,
The crest of burnish'd gold.

"Sir knight, thy lady sends thee this,
And yields to be thy bride,
When thou hast prov'd this maiden gift
Where sharpest blows are tried."

Young Bertram took the shining helm,
And thrice he kiss'd the same:
"Trust me, I'll prove this precious casque
With deeds of noblest fame."

Lord Percy, and his Barons bold,
Then fix upon a day
To scour the marches, late oppress,
And Scottish wrongs repay.

The knights assembled on the hills
A thousand horse or more:
Brave Widdrington, though sunk in years,
The Percy standard bore.

Tweed's limpid current soon they pass,
And range the borders round:
Down the green slopes of Tiviotdale
Their bugle-horns resound.

As when a lion in his den
Harsh heard the hunters' cries,
And rushes forth to meet his foes;
So did the Douglas rise.

Attendant on their chief's command
A thousand warriors wait:
And now the fatal hour drew on
Of cruel keen debate.

A chosen troop of Scottish youths
Advance before the rest;
Lord Percy mark'd their gallant mien,
And thus his friend address'd:

"Now, Bertram, prove thy lady's helm,
Attack ye forward band;
Dead or alive I'll rescue thee,
Or perish by their hand."

Young Bertram bow'd, with glad assent
And spurr'd his eager steed,
And calling on his lady's name,
Rush'd forth with whirlwind speed.

As when a grove of sapling oaks
The livid lightning rends;
So fiercely 'mid the opposing ranks
Sir Bertram's sword descends.

This way and that he drives the steel,
And keenly pierces through;
And many a tall and comely knight
With furious force he slew.

Now closing fast on every side,
They hem Sir Bertram round:
But dauntless he repels their rage,
And deals forth many a wound.

The vigour of his single arm
Had well nigh won the field;
When ponderous fell a Scottish axe,
And clave his lifted shield.

Another blow his temples took,
And rift his helm in twain;
That beauteous helm, his lady's gift!
— His blood bedew'd the plain.

Lord Percy saw his champion fall
Amid th' unequal fight;
"And now, my noble friends," he said,
"Let's save this gallant knight."

Then rushing in, with stretch'd-out shield,
He o'er the warrior hung,
As some fierce eagle spreads her wing
To guard her callow young.

Three times they strove to seize their prey,
Three times they quick retire:
What force could stand his furious strokes,
Or meet his martial fire?

Now gathering round on every part
The battle rang'd again;
And many a lady wept her lord,
That hour untimely slain.

FROM A PRINCIPLE OF HONOUR AND GENEROSITY, MARRIED: FOR HAVING HAD ALL HER LANDS BESTOWED UPON HIM BY THE CONQUEROR, "HE (TO USE THE WORDS OF THE OLD WHITBY CHRONICLE) WEDDED HER THAT WAS VERY BEAUTEOUS TO THEM, IN DISCHARGING OF HIS CONSCIENCE." — See Harl. MSS. 694 (56). He died at MONTJOY, near JERUSALEM, IN THE FIRST CRUSADE.

* Agnes de Percy, sole heiress of her house, married Josceline de Louvaine, youngest son of Godfrey Barbatus, Duke of Brabant, and brother of Queen Adeliza, second wife of King Henry I. He took the name of Percy, and was ancestor of the earls of Northumberland. His son, Lord Richard de Percy, was one of the twenty-six barons chosen to see the magna charta duly observed.
Percy and Douglas, great in arms,
There all their courage show'd;
And all the field was strew'd with dead,
And all with crimson flow'd.

At length the glory of the day
The Scots reluctant yield,
And, after wondrous valour shown,
They slowly quit the field.

All pale, extended on their shields,
And weltering in his gore,
Lord Percy's knights their bleeding friend
To Wark's fair castle bore *.

"Well hast thou earn'd my daughter's love,"
Her father kindly said;
"And she herself shall dress thy wounds,
And tend thee in thy bed."

A message went; no daughter came.
Fair Isabel ne'er appears;
"Beshrew me," said the aged chief,
"Young maidens have their fears.

"Cheer up, my son, thou shalt her see,
So soon as thou canst ride;
And she shall nurse thee in her bower,
And she shall be thy bride."

Sir Bertram at her name reviv'd,
He bless'd the soothing sound;
Fond hope supplied the nurse's care,
And heal'd his ghastly wound.

FIT III.

One early morn, while dewy drops
Hung trembling on the tree,
Sir Bertram from his sick-bed rose;
His bride he would go see.

A brother he had in prime of youth,
Of courage firm and keen;
And he would 'tend him on the way,
Because his wounds were green.

All day o'er moss and moor they rode,
By many a lonely tower;
And 'twas the dew-fall of the night
Ere they drew near her bower.

Most drear and dark the castle seem'd,
That wont to shine so bright;
And long and loud Sir Bertram call'd
Ere he beheld a light.

At length her aged nurse arose,
With voice so shrill and clear,—
"What wight is this, that calls so loud,
And knocks so boldly here?"

"'Tis Bertram calls, thy lady's love,
Come from his bed of care:
All day I've ridden o'er moor and moss
To see thy lady fair."

"Now out, alas!" she loudly shriek'd;
"Alas! how may this be?
For six long days are gone and past
Since she set out to thee."

Sad terror seiz'd Sir Bertram's heart,
And ready was he to fall;
When now the drawbridge was let down,
And gates were opened all.

"Six days, young knight, are past and gone;
Since she set out to thee;
And sure, if no sad harm had happ'd,
Long since thou wouldst her see.

"For when she heard thy grievous chance,
She tore her hair, and cried,
'Alas! I've slain the comeliest knight,
All through my folly and pride!"

"And now to atone for my sad fault
And his dear health regain,
I'll go myself, and nurse my love,
And soothe his bed of pain."

"Then mounted she her milk-white steed
One morn at break of day;
And two tall yeomen went with her,
To guard her on the way."

Sad terror smote Sir Bertram's heart,
And grief o'erwhelm'd his mind:
"Trust me" said he, "I ne'er will rest Till I thy lady find."

That night he spent in sorrow and care;
And with sad-boding heart
Or ever the dawning of the day
His brother and he depart.

"Now, brother, we'll our ways divide,
O'er Scottish hills to range;
Do thou go north, and I'll go west;
And all our dress we'll change.

"Some Scottish carle hath seiz'd my love,
And borne her to his den;
And ne'er will I tread English ground
Till she's restor'd again."

The brothers straight their paths divide,
O'er Scottish hills to range;
And hide themselves in quaint disguise,
And oft their dress they change.

Sir Bertram, clad in gown of grey,
Most like a palmer poor,
To halls and castles wanders round,
And begs from door to door.

Sometimes a minstrel's garb he wears,
With pipe so sweet and shrill;
And wanders to every tower and town,
O'er every dale and hill.

One day as he sat under a thorn,
All sunk in deep despair,
An aged pilgrim pass'd him by,
Who mark'd his face of care.

* Wark Castle, a fortress belonging to the English, and of great note in ancient times, stood on the southern banks of the River Tweed, a little to the east of Tiviotdale, and not far from Kelso. It is now entirely destroyed.
"All minstrels yet that e'er I saw
Are full of game and glee;
But thou art sad and woegone!
I marvel whence it be!"

"Father, I serve an aged lord,
Whose grief afflicts my mind;
His only child is stolen away,
And fain would her find."

"Cheer up, my son; perchance," he said,
"Some tidings I may hear:
For oft when human hopes have fail'd,
Then heavenly comfort's near."

"Behind yon hills so steep and high,
Down in a lowly glen,
There stands a castle fair and strong,
Far from the abode of men."

"As late I chanc'd to crave an alms,
About this evening hour,
Methought I heard a lady's voice
Lamenting in the tower."

"And when I ask'd what harm had happ'd,
What lady sick there lay?
They rudely drove me from the gate,
And bade me wend away."

These tidings caught Sir Bertram's ear,
He chanc'd him for his tale;
And soon he hasted o'er the hills,
And soon he reach'd the vale.

Then drawing near those lonely towers,
Which stood in dale so low,
And sitting down beside the gate,
His pipes he 'gan to blow.

"Sir Porter, is thy lord at home,
To hear a minstrel's song;
Or may I crave a lodging here,
Without offence or wrong?"

"My lord," he said, "is not at home,
To hear a minstrel's song;
And, should I lend thee lodging here,
My life would not be long."

He play'd again so soft a strain,
Such power sweet sounds impart,
He won the churlish porter's ear,
And mov'd his stubborn heart.

"Minstrel," he said, "thou play'st so sweet,
Fair entrance thou should'st win;
But, alas! I'm sworn upon the rood
To let no stranger in.

Yet, minstrel, in yon rising cliff
Thou'lt find a sheltering cave;
And here thou shalt my supper share,
And there thy lodging have."

All day he sits beside the gate,
And pipes both loud and clear:
All night he watches round the walls,
In hopes his love to hear.

The first night, as he silent watch'd
All at the midnight hour,
He plainly heard his lady's voice
Lamenting in the tower.

The second night, the moon shone clear,
And girt the spangled dew;
He saw his lady through the grate,
But 'twas a transient view.

The third night, wearied out, he slept
Till near the morning tide;
When, starting up, he seiz'd his sword,
And to the castle hied.

When, lo! he saw a ladder of ropes
Depending from the wall:
And o'er the moat was newly laid
A poplar strong and tall.

And soon he saw his love descend
Wpept in a tartan plaid.
Assisted by a sturdy youth
In Highland garb y-clad.

Amaz'd, confounded at the sight,
He lay unseen and still;
And soon he saw them cross the stream,
And mount the neighbouring hill.

Unheard, unknown of all within,
The youthful couple fly;
But what can 'scape the lover's ken,
Or shun his piercing eye?

With silent step he follows close
Behind the flying pair,
And saw her hang upon his arm
With fond familiar air.

"Thanks, gentle youth," she often said;
"My thanks thou well hast won:
For me what wiles hast thou contriv'd!
For me what dangers run!"

"And ever shall my grateful heart
Thy services repay:"
Sir Bertram would no further hear,
But cried, "Vile traitor, stay!"

"Vile traitor! yield that lady up!"
And quick his sword he draw'd;
The stranger turn'd in sudden rage,
And at Sir Bertram fell.

With mortal hate their vigorous arms,
Gave many a vengeance blow;
But Bertram's stronger hand prevail'd,
And laid the stranger low.

"Die, traitor, die!"—A deadly thrust
Attends each furious word.
Ah! then fair Isabel knew his voice,
And rush'd beneath his sword.

"O stop," she cried, "O stop thy arm!
Thou dost thy brother slay!"
And here the Hermit paus'd, and wept:
His tongue no more could say.
At length he cried, "Ye lovely pair,
How shall I tell the rest?
Ere I could stop my piercing sword,
It fell, and stabb'd her breast."

"Wert thou thyself that hapless youth?
Ah! cruel fate!" they said.
The Hermit wept, and so did they:
They sigh'd; he hung his head.

"O blind and jealous rage," he cried,
"What evils from thee flow?"
The Hermit paus'd; they silent mourn'd:
He wept, and they were woe.

Ah! when I heard my brother's name,
And saw my lady bleed,
I rav'd, I wept, I curst my arm
That wrought the fatal deed.

In vain I clasp'd her to my breast,
And clos'd the ghastly wound;
In vain I press'd his bleeding corpse,
And rais'd it from the ground.

My brother, alas! spake never more,
His precious life was flown:
She kindly strove to soothe my pain,
Regardless of her own.

"Bertram," she said, "be comforted,
And live to think on me:
May we in heaven that union prove,
Which here was not to be!

"Bertram," she said, "I still was true;
Thou only hast my heart:
May we hereafter meet in bliss!
We now, alas! must part.

"For thee I left my father's hall,
And flew to thy relief,
When, lo! near Cheviot's fatal hills
I met a Scottish chief,

"Lord Malcolm's son, whose proffer'd love
I had refus'd with scorn;
He slew my guards, and seiz'd on me
Upon that fatal morn;

"And in these dreary hated walls
He kept me close confin'd;
And fondly sued, and warmly press'd,
To win me to his mind.

"Each rising morn increas'd my pain,
Each night increas'd my fear!
When, wandering in this northern garb,
Thy brother found me here.

"He quickly form'd the brave design
To set me, captive, free;
And on the moor his horses wait,
Tied to a neighbouring tree.

"Then haste, my love, escape away,
And for thyself provide;
And sometimes fondly think on her
Who should have been thy bride."

Thus, pouring comfort on my soul,
Even with her latest breath,
She gave one parting, fond embrace,
And clos'd her eyes in death.

In wild amaze, in speechless woe,
Devoid of sense, I lay:
Then sudden, all in frantic mood,
I meant myself to slay.

And, rising up in furious haste,
I seiz'd the bloody brand *
A sturdy arm here interpos'd,
And wrench'd it from my hand.

A crowd, that from the castle came,
Had miss'd their lovely ward;
And seizing me, to prison bare,
And deep in dungeon barr'd.

It chan'd that on that very morn
Their chief was prisoner ta'en;
Lord Percy had us soon exchang'd,
And strove to soothe my pain.

And soon those honour'd dear remains
To England were convey'd;
And there within their silent tombs,
With holy rites, were laid.

For me, I loath'd my wretched life,
And long to end it thought;
Till time, and books, and holy men,
Had better counsels taught.

They rais'd my heart to that pure source
Whence heavenly comfort flows;
They taught me to despise the world,
And calmly bear its woes.

No more the slave of human pride,
Vain hope, and sordid care,
I meekly vow'd to spend my life
In penitence and prayer.

The bold Sir Bertram, now no more
Impetuous, haughty, wild;
But poor and humble Benedict,
Now lowly, patient, mild.

My lands I gave to feed the poor,
And sacred altars raise;
And here, a lonely anchorite,
I came to end my days.

This sweet sequester'd vale I chose,
These rocks, and hanging grove;
For oft beside that murmuring stream
My love was wont to rove.

My noble friend approv'd my choice;
This blest retreat he gave;
And here I carv'd her beauteous form,
And scoop'd this holy cave.

Full fifty winters, all forlorn,
My life I've linger'd here;
And daily o'er this sculptur'd saint
I drop the pensive tear.

*i.e. sword.
And thou, dear brother of my heart!
So faithful and so true,
The sad remembrance of thy fate
Still makes my bosom rue!

Yet not unpitied pass'd my life,
Forsaken or forgot,
The Percy and his noble sons
Would grace my lowly cot;

Oft the great Earl, from toils of state
And cumbrous pomp of power,
Would gladly seek my little cell,
To spend the tranquil hour.

But length of life is length of woe!
I liv'd to mourn his fall:
I liv'd to mourn his godlike sons
And friends and followers all.

But thou the honours of thy race,
Lov'd youth, shalt now restore;
And raise again the Percy name
More glorious than before.

He ceas'd; and on the lovely pair
His choicest blessings laid:
While they, with thanks and pitying tears,
His mournful tale repaid.

And now what present course to take
They ask the good old sire;
And, guided by his sage advice,
To Scotland they retire.

Meantime their suit such favour found
At Raby's stately hall,
Earl Neville and his princely spouse
Now gladly pardon all.

She, suppliant, at her nephew's* throne
The royal grace implor'd:
To all the honours of his race
The Percy was restor'd.

The youthful Earl still more and more
Admir'd his beauteous dame:
Nine noble sons to him she bore,
All worthy of their name.

*King Henry V. Anno 1414.
GLOSSARY.

The Scottish words are denoted by s., French by f., Latin by l., Anglo-Saxon by a.s., Icelandic by isl., &c.

For the etymology of the words in this volume, the reader is referred to Janii Etymologicum Anglicannm, Edidit Ed. Lye.

Oxon, 1743, folio.

A.

Ath, p. 2, col. 2, Athe, p. 3, col. 1, o'th', of the.
Atwar, s. out over, over and above.
A Tueyle, p. 2, col. 2, of Tweed.
Auld, s. old.
Aireat, golden.
Austerne, p. 75, col. 1, stern, auster.
Awoe, p. 8, col. 1, vow.
Awoe, vow.
Awoyd, p. 54, col. 2, void, vacate.
Awe, s. away.
Axed, asked.
Aynce, p. 73, col. 1, against.
Aye, ever, also, ah, alas.
Auein, Agein, against.
Asont, s. beyond.
Asont theingle, s. beyond the fire. The fire was in the middle of the room.
In the west of Scotland, at this present time, in many cottages they pile their peats and turfs upon stones in the middle of the room. There is a hole above the fire in the ridge of the house to let the smoke out at. In some places are cottage-houses, from the front of which a very wide chimney projects like a bow window; the fire is in a grate like a malt-kiln grate, round which the people sit; sometimes they draw this grate into the middle of the room.—Mr. Lambe.

B.

Be', s. ball.
Bacheleeere, p. 12, col. 1, &c. knight.
Bairst, s. child.
Bairst, s. child.
Bairstd, s. bearded.
Baith, s. Bath, both.
Bale, evil, mischief, misery.
Below, s. a nursery term, husb., lullaby, &c.
Baloushte, p. 5, col. 2, Better our bales, i. e. remedy our evils.
Bane, bone.
Ban, curse, Bannning, cursing.
Banderolls, streamers, little flags.
Bar, bare.
Bar-bed, bare-bed, or perhaps bared.

Base court, the lower court of a castle.
Basnite, Bassite, Basnyte, Basnonet, Bassonette, helmet.
Batteles, heavy sticks, clubs.
Baud, s. bold.
Bauzen, s. Skinne, p. 80, col. 1, perhaps sheepe's leather dressed and coloured red, f. Barane, sheep's leather. In Scotland, sheepskin mittens, with the wool on the inside, are called bauzen mittens. Bauson also signifies a bader, in old English, it may therefore signify perhaps bader's skin.
Bayard, a noted blind horse in the old romances. The horse on which the four sons of Aymon rode is called Bayard Montalbon, by Skelton, in his "Philipp Sparrow."

Bearing arrow, an arrow that carries well. Or perhaps bearing or birring, i. e. whirling or whirring arrow, from isl.

Bir. ventus, or a.s.

Bena, tremens.
Beaun, Bairn, s. child, also human creature.
Be, a. by, Be that, by that time.
Beed, bale.
Bede, offer, engage.
Bedeene, immediately.
Bedight, bedecked.
Bedone, wrought, made up.
Bedyls, beadles.
Bedfall, befallen.
Befoir, s. before.
Befor, before.
Begylde, p. 25, col. 1, beguiled, deceived.
Behast, heard.
Behest, commands, injunctions.
Behove, p. 47, col. 1, behoof.
Belfe, immediately, presently.
Belfye, p. Belfe, immediately, by and by, shortly.

Benne-bow, s. bent bow, qu.
Bene, Beon, an expression of contempt.
GLOSSARY.

Ben, be, are Ben, Bene, been
Ben, s. within the inner-room

"But o' house," means the outer part of the house, outer room, viz. that part of the house into which you first enter, suppose from the street. "Ben of house," is the inner room, or more retired part of the house. The daughter did not lie out of doors. The cottagers often desire their landlords to build them a Ben and a Ben. (Vid. Gloss.)—Mr. Lambe.

Ben, s. within doors

Of the Scottish words Ben and But, Ben is from the Dutch Binne. Lat. intra, initus, which is compounded of the preposition By or Be (the same as By in English), and of In.

Benison, blessing

Bent, s. long grass, also wild fields, where hens, &c. grow
Bent, p. 2, col. 2, bents, p. 12 col. 1. (where hens, long coarse grass, &c. grow) the field, fields

Benyagne, p. 26, col. 1, Benigne, benign, kind Beoth, be, are Beares, barns
Beere, s. bier
Bereth, (Introdl.) bearth
Her the prys, bare the prize
Berys, bearth
Beverne, become
Beherewome, a lesser form of impregnation
Beherade, cut into shreds
Beasmirche, to soil, discoulour
Besprent, besprinkled
Beste, beast, art
Bested, abode
Bestis, beasts
Bentworth, p. 49, col. 2, distracted
Beth, be, are
Be that, p. 2, col. 2, by that time
Beete, did beat
Bet, better, bett, did beat
Bevers, discovers, betrays
Bickarte, p. 2, col. 2, bicker'd, skirmished

(It is also used sometimes in the sense of, "swiftly coursed," which seems to be the sense, p. 2, col. 2.—Mr. Lambe)

Mr. Lambe also interprets "Bicker ing," by rattling, e. g.

And on that sée Ulysses head,
Sad curves down does Bicker.

Translat. of Ovid.

Bill, &c., p. 74, col. 2, I have delivered a promise in writing, confirmed by an oath.

Bimi beuati, by my loyalty, honestly
Birk, s. birch-tree
Blan, Blanne, did blin, i. e. linger, stop
Blane, p. 4, col. 1, Blanne, did blin, i. e. linger, stop
Blare, to embazon, display
Blaw, s. blow
Blee, complexion
Blee, colour, complexion

Bleid, s. Blede, bleed
Blen, blended
Blent, ceased
Blime, cease, give over
Blinkan, Blinkand, s. twinking
Blinking, squinting

Blink, s. a glimpse of light, the sudden light of a candle seen in the night at a distance
Blinks, s. twinkles, sparkles
Blit, blessed
Blive, Beline, s. immediately

Bloomed, p. 80, col. 1, beset with bloom
Blude, Bludid red, blood, s. blood red
Bluid, Bluidy, s. bloody
Bluth, Bith, s. sprightly, joyous
Blug, s. joy, sprightliness
Blure, Balerie, s. instantly
Boare, bate, bone
Boke, p. 25, col. 1, abode, stayed
Boist, Boistris, s. boast, boasters
Bookman, clerk, secretary
Boltus, bowls
Boltes, shafts, arrows
Bomen, p. 2, col. 2, bowman
Boon, favour, request, petition
Boone, a favour, request, petition
Bonn, Bonnie, s. comely
Bore, born
Borrowed, p. 9, col. 1, warranted, exchanged for

Borrowes, Boroue, pledge, surety
Boroue, p. 42, col. 2, to redeem by a pledge

Bote, boot, advantage
Boot, Boote, advantage, help, assistance
Boote, gain, advantage
Bot, s. but, sometimes it seems used for both, or, besides, more over

Bot and, s. p. 13, col. 1. (it should probably be both and), and also Bot, s. without, Bot dreid, without dread, certainly Bougill, s. bugle-horn, hunting horn
Bougills, s. bugle horns
Bouned, Bowned, Bowned, prepared, got ready, the word is also used in the north in the sense of went or was going
Bone, to dine p. 11, col. 2, going to dine
Bowne, is a common word in the North for going, e. g. Where are you bowne to, where you are going
Bower Bower, any bowed or arched room, a parlour, chamber, also a dwelling in general
Bower, bower, habitation, chamber, parlour, perhaps from isal. Bown, to dwell
Bower-woman, s. chamber-maid
Bower-window, chamber-window
Bowsendes, bounds
Bowre, ready

Bowre, ready, Bowned, prepared
Bowre ye, prepare ye, get ready
Bows, bows
Braed, Braid, s. broad
Brae, s. the brow or side of a hill, a declivity
Braes of Yarrow, s. the hilly banks of the river Yarrow
Braid, s. broad, large
Brae, tufts of fern
Bran, sword
Brandes, swords
Brast, burst
Bruc, s. brave
Brufly, s. bravely
Brayd, s. arose, hastened
Brayd attoure the Ben, s. hasted over the field

Brayde, drew out, unbeathed
Breech, p. 80, col. 1, breaches
Breske, breske, bred mischief
Brede, breadth. So Chaucer
Bred banner, p. 7, col. 1, broad banner

Brenand-drake, p. may perhaps be the same as a fire-drake, or fiery serpent, a meteor or fire-work so called. Here it seems to signify burning embers, or fire brands

Breug, Bryng, bring Bren, s. burn
Breere, Breere, briar
Brother, brethren

Bridal (properly bride-all), the nuptial feast
Briggs, Bridge, bridge
Brinne, public, universally known a. s. Byrne, idem

Brod-or, s. a broad forked headed arrow
Broacho, Broanche, 1st, a spit. 2dly, a bodkin. 3dly, any ornamental trinket. Stone buckles of silver or gold, with which gentlemen and ladies clasp their shirt-bosoms and handkerchiefs, are called in the north, brooches, from the f. broche, a spit Broach, an ornamental trinket, a stone buckle for a woman's breast, &c. vid. Broacho. Gloss. vol. 3.

Brocht, s. brought
Brodlinge, pricking
Brooke, p. 72, col. 2, bear, endure
Brooke, p. 4, col. 2, enjoy
Broak her with winne, enjoy her with pleasure, a. s. brok

Broach, broad Bros, brought
Bryttlyng, p. 2, col. 2, Bryting, p. 2, col. 2, cutting up, quartering, carving

Buen, Bueh, been, be
Bugle, bugle-horn, a hunting-horn, being the horn of a bugle, or wild bull
Glossary.

Butk, s. book
Burgens buds, young shoots
Burn, Bourn, brook
Bushment, ambushment, ambush, a snare to bring them into trouble
Bushet, Bushed, dressed
Bush ye, s. dress ye
Bush, dress, deck
Buak and bown, p. 31, col. 2; i.e. make yourselves ready and go; Bown, to go. (North country.)
Buted them, p. 25, col. 2, prepared themselves, made themselves ready
Bute, s. boot, advantage, good
But, if, unless
But without, But let, without hindrance
But, s. without, out of doors
But, or Butt, is from the Dutch Buitten. Lat. extra, prior, proriter-quam, which is compounded of the same preposition, By or Be, and of unt, the same as out in English.
Butt, s. out, the outer room, Buttes, butts to shoot at Bydyas, Bides, abides
Byevens, Beeres, biers
Bye, buy, pay for, also A-bye, suffer for Byll, Bill, an ancient kind of halberd, or battle-axe, p. 2, col. 2.
Byn, Bin, Bin, been, be, are Byrche, birch-trees, birch-wood
Byre, a cow-house
Byste, beast, art
Byth, p. 40, col. 2, of three

C
Cadgily, s. merrily, cheerfully
Caitiff, s. slave
Calde, callcdy, p. 3, col. 1, called
Calliver, a kind of musket
Camsehe, s. stern, grim
Canna, s. cannot
Can cane, p. 7, col. 2, p. 8; Gan, began to cry
Can curtesye, know, understand good manners
Can, Gan, began
Cannes, wooden-cups, bowls
Canabangui, ital. ballad-singers, singers on benches
Cantiles, pieces, corners
Canly, s. cheerful, chatty
Capul, a poor horse
Capull hyde, p. 23, col. 2, horsehide
Care-bed, bed of care
Cawi, churl, clown. It is also used in the north for a strong hale old man
Carline, s. the feminine of carle
Carpe, to speak, recite, also to censure
Carping, reciting
Carpe of care, p. 4, col. 2, complain through care
Carlitch, churlish, discourteous

Cast, p. 3, col. 1, mean, intend
CaU, s. call
Cauld, s. cold
Cawte, vid. Kane
Cautiffs, Caitiff, slave, despisicible wretch
Cerse, certainly
Cetywall, p. 79, col. 2, Setivall, the herb Valerian: also, mountain spikenard. See Gerard's Herbal
Chantelecere, the cock
Chap, knock
Chayme, chain
Chays, chase
Check, to stop
Check, to rate at
Che, (Somerset dialect), I
Chief, the upper part of the scutcheon in heraldry
Chis, s. choose
Chenealters, f. knights
Chilis, (Som. dial.) I will Child, p. 28, knight, children, p. 19, col. 2, knights
Chield, s. a slight or familiar way of speaking of a person, like our English word fellow.
The Chield, i.e. the fellow
Chowld, (ditto) I would Christianie, Christendom
Christenye, Chrystante, Christendom
Churche-ale, a wake, a feast in commemoration of the dedication of a church
Churl, clown, a person of low birth, a villain
Chuf, Chufe, chief
Chylder, children, children's Chybled, brought forth, was delivered
Chlatts, s. clothes
Clattered, beat so as to rattle
Clove, clawed, tore, scratched: p. 47, col. 1, figuratively beat
Cled, s. clothed
Cleeding, s. clothing
Cled, s. clad, clothed
Clenking, clinking, jingling
Clepe, call
Cleaped, Cleped, called, named
Clerke, scholar
Clerke, clergymen, literati, scholars
Cliding, s. clothing
Clim, the concretion of Clement
Clough, a north-country word for a broken cliff
Clouch, clutch, grasp
Cote, cot, cottage
Cocker, p. 80, col. 1, a sort of buskins or short boots fastened with laces or buttons, and worn by farmers or shepherds. In Scotland they are called Cutikins, from Cute, the ankle. " Cokers, fishermen's boots."— (Littleton's Dictionary)
Cohorted, incited, exhorted
Cokeney, seems to be a dimitive for cook, from the Latin coquinarius, or coquinarius. The meaning seems to be that "every five and five had a cook or scullion to attend them."— Chaucer's Cant. Tales, 8vo. vol. iv. p. 253.
Callayne, p. 8, col. 1, Cologne steel
Cold rost, (a phrase), nothing to the purpose
Cold, could, knew
Colyne, Cologne steel
Com, came
Comen, Comynn, come
Confistered, confederated, entered into a confederacy
Con, con, gan, began. Item. Conspringe, (a phrase), sprung
Con fere, went, passed
Con thanks, give thanks
Cep head, the top of anything, sax
Cordwain, p. 30, col. 1, cordwayne, properly Spanish or Cordovan leather; here it signifies a more vulgar sort
Corsiere, p. 4, col. 1, courser steed
Cost, coast side
Coote, coat
Cote, cot, cottage. Item. coat
Corydagnost, daily, every day
Could, cold. Item, could
Could be, p. 75, col. 2, was. Could, dve, p. 8, col. 2, died (a phrase)
Could bear, a phrase for bare
Could creep, s. crept. Could say, said
Could weip, s. wept
Could his good, knew what was good for him. Or perhaps could live upon his own
Couttie, p. 78, col. 2, count, earl
Coupe, a pen for poultry
Courtlen, knew
Couth, could
Courtive, covetousness
Covynrie, p. 80, col. 1, Coventry
Cromasie, s. crimson
Cranchy, merry, sprightly, exciting
Cranton, skull
Craddence, belief
Crevi, crevice, chink
Crick, s. properly an ant, but means probably any small insect
Crinkle, run in and out, run into flexures, wrinkle
Crister cors, p. 3, col. 1, Christ's curse
Croft, an inclosure near a house
Crois, cross
Crookit my knee, make lame my knee. They say in the north, "the horse is crookit," i.e. lame. "The horse crooks," i.e. goes lame
Crook, twist, wrinkle, distort
Crouch, crutch
Crouneth, crown ye
Crow, to pucker up
Crumpling, crooked; or perhaps with crooked knotty horns
Crainte
Cule, s. cool
Cum, s. cone, p. 3, col. 2, came
Cummon, s. gossip, friend, f.
Cummrte, Compere
Cure, care, heed, regard

D.
Dale, s. deal, But give I date, unless I deal
Dampned, damned
Dampened, p. 42, col. 1, condemned
Dan, an ancient title of respect, from Lat. Dominus
Dank, moist, damp
Danske, Dutchmark, query
Dar'd, s. hit
Darr, perhaps for Thar, there
Dart the trie, s. hit the tree
Lawkin, diminutive of David
Dartier, hughty, coyness holdeth
Dava (intro'd.), days
Dealan, deland, s. dealing
Deare, day, charming pleasant day
Deas, Deis, the high table in a hall, from f. Dais, a canopy
Dee, s. die
De, dey, dy, p. 3, col. 1, 3, col. 2, 4, col. 2, die
Deed is do, deed is done
Deed (intro'd.) dead
Deid, s. Dede, deed. Item, deed
Deeid-bell, s. passing-bell
Dell, deal, part, p. 27, col. 2, Every dell, every part
Dell, narrow valley
Delt, dealt
Delt, dealt
Deetege, dight, richly fitted out
Demain, demosnes, estate in lands
Deem, deemed, judge, doomed
Deemed, doomed, judged, &c.; thus, in the Isle of Man, judges are called deemsters
Denay, deny (rhythmi gratia)
Dent, a dint, blow
Deint, s. deem'd, esteem'd
Deip, s. Depe, deep
Deip, s. Deere, Dere, dear
Deir, s. dear. Item, hurt, trouble, disturb Deol, dole, grief
Diepe-fette, deep-fetched
Depurred, purified, run clear
Deere, hurt, mischief
Deery, precisely, richly
Deere, Deye, die
Deere, Deere, dear, also hurt
Derked, darkened
Dern, s. secret, I dern in secret
Descreere, describe
Descrye, Describe, describe

Deyus, devise, the act of bequeathing by will Dight, decked, put on
Dight-dicht, s. decked, dressed, prepared, fitted out, done
Dill, p. 11, col. 2, dole, grief, pain.
Dill I drwe, p. 12, col. 1, pain I suffer. Dill was dight, p. 11, col. 2, grief was upon him.
Dill, still, calm, mitigate Din, Diane, noise, bustle
Ding, knock, beat
Dint, stroke, blow
Discut, discussed
Disna, s. does not
Dis, p. 21, col. 1, this
Distree, the horse rode by a knight in the tournament
Dites, ditties
Dochter, s. daughter
Dois, s. Doys, does
Dole, grief
Dol. See Deol, Dule
Dolours, dolorous, mournful
Dolfuldumps, pp. 49, col. 2, 69, col. 2, sorrowful groom, or heaviness of heart
Doun, p
Dosend, s. dosing, drowsy, torpid, benumbed, &c.
Doth, Dothe, doeth, do
Doubt, fear
Doublet, a man's inner garment, waistcoat
Doubtious, doubtful
Doughtie, &c. doughty man
Doughtie, Doughty, Doughtie,
Doughtie, doughty, formidable
Doughiness of dent, sturdiness of blows
Dounae, s. p. 11, col. 2, am not able; properly, cannot take the trouble
Doute, doubt. Item, fear
Doutted, doubted, feared
Doutzy, doughty
Dukter, daughter
Dug-trough, a dought-trough, a kneading trough
Drake. See Bremend Drake
Drap, s. drop
Dropping, s. dropping
Dre, p. 3, col. 1, Drie, p. 31, col. 1, suffer
Draid, s. Dredge, Drede, dred
Dreeps, s. drips, drops
Drepy, s. dryey
Drie, s. suffer
Drowers, drovers, p. 67, col. 2, such as drive herds of cattle, deer, &c.
Druce, drew
Drue, p. 8, col. 2, suffer
Drygelines, dryness
Drying, drink
Drywars, p. 2, col. 2, drovers
Duble dyse, double (false) dice
Dude, did. Dudest, didat
Doughtie, doughty
Dule, s. Dool, Dol, Dole, grief

Dwellan, Dwellwand, s. dwelling
Dyan, Dyand, s. dying
Dyce, s. dice, chequer-work
Dyd, Dye, did
Dyght, p. 4, col. 1, sight, p. 14, col. 2, dressed, put on, put Dyht, to dispose, order
Dyne, s. dinner
Dyte, Dight, blow, stroke
Dysguynge, disguising, masking
Dynt, vid. Dight

E.
Fame, Ene, p. 7, col. 2, uncle
Eard, s. earth
Earn, s. to curdle, make cheese
Esthe, easy
Estheather
Ech, Eche, Eiche, Elke, each
Ee, s. Eie, eye, Een, Eyne, eyes
Es, even, evening
Eftsoon, pour forth
Eftsoon, in a short time
Eked, s. added, enlarged
Ein, s. even
Eir, Eeir, s. e'er, ever
Ek, also; Elke, each
Elde, s. elder
Elerdings, Sextie, Elriche, Erbitch, Erliche; wild, hideous, ghostly
Item, lonesome, uninhabited, except by spectres, &c. Gloss. to A. Ramsay, Erbitch, laugh.
Gen. Shap. a. 5.

In the ballad of Sir Cavlione, we have "Elridge Hill," p. 12, col. 1; Elridge Knight, p. 13, col. 1.
Elridge, s. Eridge, Eeridge, Eriffe, thus describes the night-owl, "Laithely of forme, with crunk cam-scro beirk, Usomge to here was his wyhte Elricle, "drik." In Bannatyne's MS. Poems (fol. 135, in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh) is a whimsical rhapsody of a deceased old woman, travelling in the other world, in which,
"Scho wanderit, and zeid, by to an Elriche well." In the Glossary to G. Douglas, El-riche, &c., is explained by "wild, hideous, Lat. Trax, immansis"; but it seems to imply somewhat more, as in Allan Ramsay's Glossary.
Elke, each
Elumunge, p. 26, col. 1, embell-ishing. To illumine a book was to ornament it with paintings in miniature
Ellyconys, s. Helicons
Elisch, peevish, fantastical
Eme, kinsman, uncle
Endyed, dyed
Ein, s. En, yres, Ene, s. even Enbarned, &c., p. 26, col. 1, hooked, or edged with mortal dread
Enbankered, cankered
Enough, s. enough
Ense, follow
Entemedent, f. understanding
Glossary.

Gowyde, p. 3, col. 2, gained
Garde, Gar, s. make, cause, force, compel
Gargeyld, p. 27, col. 1, from Gargouille, f. the spout of a gutter.
The tower was adorned with spouts cut in the figures of greyhounds, lions, &c.
Gar, s. to make, cause, &c.
Gerald, p. 23, col. 1, the ring within which the prick or mark was set to be shot at Gart, Garred, s. made
Gayed, made gay (their clothes)
Gear, Geire, Geir, Gair, s. goods, effects, stuff
Gederede ys host, gathered his host Gift, Gere, give Giel, s. gave
Geere will swoy, this matter will turn out, affair terminate.
Gerte, (intro.) pierced
Gest, act, feat, story, history, (it is jest in MS.)
Gettinge, what he had got, his plunder, booty
Gee, Gezind, give, given
Gibed, jeered
Gie, Gien, s. give, given
Giff, if
Gife, Giff, if
Gi, Gis, s. give Gillore, (Irish) plenty
Gimp, Jimp, s. neat, slender
Gin, s. an, if
Gin, Gym, engine, contrivance
Gina, begins
Gip, an interjection of contempt
Gist, s. pierced, Thorough-girt pierced through Give oere, s. surrender
Gye, Gif, Giff, if
Glave, s. sword
Glade, p. 2, col. 2, a red-hot coal
Glegg, merriment, joy
Glen, s. a narrow valley
Glente, glanced, slit
Glie, s. glee, merriment, joy
Glint, s. glistered
Glase, p. 25, col. 1, set a false glass or colour
Gloar, s. stare, or frown
Glace, canting dissimulation, fair outside
Goddes, p. 26, col. 1, goddess
Godde, (intro.) good
God, p. sc. a good deal
Goden, e'en, good e'nings
God, Godnes, good, goodness
God before, s. pr. God be thy guide, a form of blessing
Goggling eyen, goggle eyes
Gone, (intro.) go.
Goget, the dress of the neck
Gowan, s. the common yellow crow-foot, or goldcup
Gowd, s. Gould, gold
Graite, scarlet

Gratished gouden, s. was caparisoned with gold
Gramercye, i. e. I thank you, f.
Grand-mercie
Gravange, p. 77, col. 1, granary, also a lone country house
Grayted, s. decked, put on Grea-hondes, grey-hounds
Greece, p. 44, col. 2, fat, (a fat hart) from f. grasse
Gree, a step, p. 27, col. 2, a flight of steps, Grees
Gree, s. prizze, a victory
Greened, grew green
Grennyng, p. 19, col. 2, grinning
Greet, s. weep
Gret, great, grieved, swoln, ready to burst
Gret, Groat, great
Greves, Groves, bushes
Grovers, attendants, servants
Groundway, groundwall
Grounde, oundy, ground
Groumes, groundis, (rhythmia gratia.
Vid. Sowne)
Groote, in Nottinghamshire is a kind of small beer extracted from the malt after the strength has been drawn off. In Devon it is a kind of sweet ale medicated with eggs, said to be a Danish liquor.
Grovwe is a kind of fare much used by Danish sailors, being boiled groats, (i.e. boiled oats) or rice hulled barley, served up very thick, and butter added to it. (Mr. Lambe).
Gripped, gripping, tenacious, miserly
Grype, a griffin
Grysetly gromen, p. 8, col. 2, dreadfully gromen.
Gude, Gudl, Gud, s. good
Guerdon, reward
Gule, red
Gule, jest, joke
Gyle, guile
Gyles, guiles
Gyn, engine, contrivance
Gyrd, garded, lashed
Gys, s. guise, form, fashion

Habbe ase he brow, have as he brews
Habbergeon, f. a lesser coat of mail
Habbe, p. 25, col. 1, able
Haggis, a sheep's stomach stuffed with a pudding made of mince-meat, &c.
Ha, Hae, s. have. Item, hall
Ha, s. hall
Ha, have
Hail, H ale, s. whole, altogether
Hatched, Halsed, saluted, embraced, fell on his neck, from halse, the neck, throat
Hatesome, wholesome, healthy
Hatt, holdeth
Hame, Hamward, home, homeward
Handbow, p. 47, col. 2, the longbow, or common bow, as distinguished from the cross-bow
Han, have, 3 pers. plur.
Hare swerdes, their swords
Harrowed, harrassed, disturbed
Harbocher, p. 79, col. 2, perhaps charlocke, or wild rape, which bears a yellow flower, and grows among corn, &c.
Harmisine, harness, armour
Harty lust, p. 26, col. 1, hearty desire
Harus, harrows
Hustardalis, p. 25, col. 1, perhaps hasty rash fellows, or upstarts, &c.
Hauid, s. to hold. Item, hold, strong, bold
Haus-bane, s. the neck-bone, (halse-bone) a phrase for the neck
Haves, (of) effects, substance, riches
Hav, have
Haviour, behaviour
Hawberk, a coat of mail consisting of iron rings, &c.
Hawkin, synonymous to Halkin, dimin. of Harry.
Hayl, advantage, profit, (p. 7, col. 1, for the profit of all England,) a. s. Hol, salus
Heal, p. 3, col. 2, hail
Hear, here, hair
Hear, p. 3, col. 2, here
Heiwness, the heathen part of the world
Hech, hatch, small door
Hecht to lay thee law, s. promised engaged to lay thee low
Hede, Hied, he'd, he would, heed
Hed, Hede, head
Hee's, s. he shall, also he has
He, p. 2, col. 2, Hee, p. 7, col. 1, Hye, high
He, Him, haisten
He, p. 44, col. 2, Hye, to hie or hasten
Heicht, s. height
Heiding-hill, s. the 'heading (i.e. beheading) hill. The place of execution was anciently an artificial hillock
Helt, s. hell, health
Heur, s. here, p. 3, col. 1, hear
Hevin, head
Helpeth, help ye
Hem, Em, them
Henne, hence
Hend, kind, gentle
Hente, (intro.) help, pulled
Hent, Hente, held, laid hold of, also received
Heo, (intro.) they Hether, Her, hare, their Herketh, hearken ye
Hert, Hertis, heart, hearts
His, s. has
Hest, hast
Hest, p. 12, col. 2, command, in-junction
Hett, Height, bid, call, command
Hed, het
Hether, litter
Hether, s. heath, a low shrub that grows upon the moors, &c. so luxuriantly as to choke the grass, to prevent which the inhabitants set whole acres of it on fire, the rapidity of which gave the poet that apt and noble simile, in p. (Mr. Hutchinson.)
Hearch, s. a rock or steep hill
Hevede, Hevedest, had, lastest
H евеvicн, Hевеveич, heavenly
Heowkes, heralds' coats
Heunye in to, hewn in two
Heuwyn, Heuning, hewing, hack- ing
Hew-day guise, frolick, sportive frolicsome manner

This word is perhaps corruptly given, being apparently the same with HYDEEUIC, or HYDEEUVIC, which occurs in Spenser, and means a "wild frolick dance."—Johnson's Dictionary.

Heynd, Hend, gentle, obliging
Heyne, high, Heyd, s. hied
Hicht, A-hicht, s. on height
Hit dames to wall, s. high (or great) ladies to wall, or, hysten, ladies, to wall, &c.
Hit, Hye, He, Hee, high
Hight, p. 13, col. 1, p. 3, col. 2, engage, engaged, promised, p. 40, col. 1, named, called Hi, Hiz, p. 21, col. 1, he Hillus, hills
Hilt, taken off, flayed, Sax. hylden
Hinch-boys, Hench, properly haunch-men, pages of honour, pages attending on persons of office
Hind, s. behind
Hinde, Hend, gentle
Hings, s. hangs
Hinny, s. honey
Hep, Hep, the berry which con- tains the stones or seeds of the dog-rose
Hir, Hir lane, s. her, herself alone
Hirsel, s. herself
Hit, p. 3, col. 2, it
Hit, it. Hit be write, it be written
Hode, hood, cap
Hoo, ho, p. 6, col. 1, an interjection of stopping or desisting, hence stoppage
Holden, probably a corruption for holly
Holden, bold

Hole, whole. Holl, idem
Hooty, s. slowly
Holtes, woods, groves, p. 7, col. 1, in Norfolk a plantation of cherry trees, is called a "cherry holt," also sometimes "hills." Holtes seems evidently to signify hills in the following passage from Tu- berville's "Songs and Sonnets," 1567, fol. 56:
"Ye that frequent the hilles, And highest Holters of all, Assist me with your skilful quilles, And listen when I call."
As also in this other verse of an ancient poet,
"Underneath the Holtes so hoar.
Holtes hair, s. hoar hills
Holy-voode, holy cross
Holy, p. 26, col. 1, wholly, or perhaps whole, whole
Hom, Hem, them
Honden wyrnyge, hands wring
Hondrith, Hundred, hundred
Hone, hand
Hunge, hang, hung
Hontyng, hunting
Hopp-halt, limping, hopping, and halting
Hose, stockings
Hount, hunt
Howe, give the sacrament
Hoved, p. 27, col. 1, heaved, or perhaps hovered (p. 7, col. 1.) hung moving, (Gl. Chauc.) Hoved or hoven means in the North swelled. But Mr. Lambe thinks it is the same as hound, still used in the North, and applied to any light sub- stance heaving to and from an undulating surface. The vowel u is often used there for the consonant v
Hoxerse, Hoxers, hours
Huerete, heart
Huggle, hug, clasp
Hoe, Hyst, high, highest
Hughty, s. P. col. 1, on high, aloft
Hyp-halt, lame in the hip
Hyndattowere, s. behind, over, or about Hys, his, also is Hyt, (intro.) it
Hyznes, highness

I
Ich, I, Ich bippeth, I bequeath
Iclipped, called
If, if
Ifere, to gather
Ifeth, in faith
Ifordly, s. ill-favoured, ug- lily
Ifd, I'd, I would
If e, I'll, I will
Ifa, s. each, every one
Ifa, every If, every one
Ifk, This Ifk, s. this same
Ifk one, each one
I-lore, lost, I-strike, stricken
Im, p. 21, col. 1, him

Impe, a little demon
In fere, I fere, to gather
Ingle, s. fire
Inowe, enough
Into, s. in
Intres, p. 27, col. 2, entrance, ad- mittance
Io forth, corruptly printed so, should probably be loe, i. e. ballmo
Irful, angry, furious
Ise, I shall
Is, p. 21, col. 1, is, his
I troub, (I believe) verily
Its neir, s. it shall ne'er
I-tuned, tuned
I-wazen, (I think) verily
I wisse, (I know) verily
I wot, (I know) verily
I wus, I was, (I know) verily
Iye, eye
Junglers, talkative persons, tell- tales, also wranglers
Jenkyn, diminutive of John
Jim, s. slender
Jogelers, p. 35, col. 1, jugglers
Jo, s. sweet-heart, friend. Jo is properly the contraction of joy, so rejoice is written rejoice in old Scottish MSS. particularly Banatyne's—passim
Joe, s. joll or jowl
Jup, s. an upper garment, fr. a Petticoat

K
Kall, p. 26, col. 2, call
Kame, s. comb
Kameing, s. combing
Kan, p. 25, col. 2, can
Kantle-piece, corner
Karts, cartis, charis. Karnis of kynd, p. 25, col. 1, charis by nature
Kauk, s. chalk
Kauted, p. 21, col. 1, called
Kout and keene, p. 7, col. 2, cautious and serene. I. cautus
Keipand, s. keeping
Keel, s. raddle
Kempes, soldiers, warriors
Kempere-man, p. 18, col. 2, sol- dier, warrior, fighting-man

Kempt, combed
Kems, s. combs
Kend, s. knew
GLOSSARY.

Ken, Kenst, know, knowest
Ken, keen

Keepe, p. 80, col. 2, care, heed.
So in the old play of Hick Scorer (in the last leaf but one), "I keepe not to clyme so slye," i.e. I study not, care not.

Kepers, &c., p. 47, col. 2, those that watch by the corpse shall tye up my winding-sheet

Kever-chiefs, handkerchiefs, (vid. introd.)

Kid, Kyd, Kithe, made known, shown
Killed, s. tucked up
Kind, Kinde, nature, p. to corp is our kind, it is natural for us to talk of

Kirk, s. church
Kirkwa, s. p. church wall, or perhaps church-yard-wall
Kirm, s. churl
Kirtle, a petticoat, woman's gown
Kists, s. chests
Kif, p. 26, col. 1, cut
Kith and kin, acquaintance and kindred
Kithe or Kin, acquaintance nor kindred

Knave, p. 23, col. 2, servant
Knellan, Kneland, s. knitting, ringing the knell
Knicht, s. knight
Knights fee, such a portion of land as required the possessor to serve with man and horse

Knower, Knolde, little hills

Kayled, knelt
Kowarde, coward
Kowe, cow

Kurtzeis, p. 26, col. 1, courteous
Knuntrey, p. 26, col. 1, countrey
Kythe, appear, also make appear, shew, declare
Kythed, s. appeared

Kytte, vid. Kirtle. In the introd. it signifies a man's under garment

Rale, in his Acts of English Votaries, (2nd part, col. 53), uses the word KYTLE to signify a Monk's Frock. He says Roger Earl of Shrewsbury, when he was dying, sent "to Chynuke, in France, for the Kyrtle of Hugh the Abbot there," &c.

Kye, Kine, cows

L.

Lacke, want
Laide unto her, imputed to her
Laith, s. loth

Laithly, s. loathsome, hideous
Lambs-wool, a cant phrase for ale and roasted apples, p.

Lane, Lain, s. lone. Her lane, a lane by herself
Lang, s. long

Langsome, s. p. 83, col. 2, long, tedious

Lap, s. leaped

Largesse, f. gift, liberality
Lasse, less
Lauch, laughed, s. laugh, laughed
Launde, p. 44, col. 2, lawn
Layden, laid

Lay, p. 12, col. 2, law
Lay-land, p. 12, col. 2, land that is not plowed, green-award

Lay-lands, p. 14, col. 1, lands in general

Layne, lain. Vid. Leane
Layen, lain, also laid

Leal, Leil, s. loyal, honest, true, f. loyal
Lenne, p. 8, col. 1, conceal, hide.

Leve, s. leve
Leve, phrase of contempt
Lea, lea, field, pastures
Le, p. 31, col. 2, lea, the field

Lee, s. lie

Lemman, lover
Lemman, leman, lover, mistress, a. s. leman

Lenger, longer
Length in, resideth in Leer, p. 85, col. 1, look

Leere, p. 14, col. 1, face, complexion, a. s. hue, faces, vultus

Lerned, learned, taught
Lesse, s. lose
Lett, Latte, hinder, slacken, leave off, Late, let Lettest, hinderest, detained
Let, p. 2, col. 1, hinder, p. 18, col. 1, hidrend

Letting, hindrance, i.e. without delay
Leuch, Laugh, s. laughed

Leeve London, p. 73, col. 1, dear London, an old phrase
Leveeth, believed
Lever, rather
Loves and Boxes, leaves and boughs

Loved, ignorant, scandalous
Leyke, Like, play

Levre, love, p. 79, col. 2, learning, lore
Libbards-bone, a herb so called Libbard, leopard
Lichly, s. lightly, easily, nimbly
Lie, s. Lee, field, plain

Lig, s. lie

Lightly, easily
Lightsome, cheerful, sprightly

Lied, p. 80, col. 1, pleased

Limitours, friars licensed to beg within certain limits

Limicacius, a certain precipitant allowed to a limitour

Lingell, a thread of hemp rubbed with rosin, &c., used by rustics for mending their shoes

Live, flesh, complexion

Lith, Liche, Lythe, p. 40, col. 2, attend, bearken, listen

Lither, p. 18, col. 2, idle, worthless, naughty, froward

Liver, deliver

Liverness, p. 74, col. 2, deliverance, (money, or a pledge, for delivering you up)

Lodiye, loathsome. Vid. Loythily

Lo'e, Loed, s. love, loved

Lough, Love, Lugh, laughed

Loo, hallow!

Loyt, Loythily, Vid. Loythily

Loy, leaped

Lovel, Losel, a sorry worthless person

Love, lesson, doctrine, learning

Lover, lost

Lost,losed, loosed

Lothily, (vide Lodiye,) loathsome

The adverbial terminations somet and ly were applied indifferently by our old writers: thus as we have Loythily for loathsome, so we have Uscon in a sense not very remote from Ugly, in Lord Vernon's Version of King, 11. v. 3. "In every place the usconye sights I saw."

Loud and still, phrase, at all times

Laugh, p. 44, col. 1, laugh

Louded, looked

Lounge, (Introds.) long

Loun, s. p. 83, col. 2, Loun, p. 32, col. 2, Loun, &c., was, from the Irish, Linn, slothful, sluggish

Lour, Lour, s. Laver, had rather

Loulit, Louoise, lowed, did obeisance

Loveth, love, plural number

Lowe, p. 23, col. 2, a little hill

Lounis, s. blazes, rather opposed to windy, boisterous

Loute, Lolit, how, stopp

Lucite, Lucit, s. loved

Lucit, love

Lucis, Lucis, s. loves, love

Lucks, s. looks

Lurdeu, p. 43, col. 1, Lurdeyn, sluggard, drone

Lyn, Lyd, s. lying

Lyer, grey, a name given to a horse from its grey colour, as Bayard, from bay

Lyde, p. 44, col. 1, 44, col. 2, Lyn, p. 23, col. 1

See Linde

Lynde, p. 44, col. 2, the lime tree, or collectively lime trees, or trees in general

Lye, lies

Lyteneth, (Introds.) listen
GLOSSARY.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Word</th>
<th>Meaning</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Meany</td>
<td>retinue, train, company</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meed, Meede</td>
<td>reward</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meie, s.</td>
<td>mood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meise, s.</td>
<td>soften, reduce, mitigate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meit, s. Meet, fit, proper</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Melli, honey; also, meddling, mingle</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Me, men</td>
<td>Me con (men 'gan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Men of arms, p. 8, col. 1, gens d'armes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Menieree, a species of fur</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mess housing, p. s.</td>
<td>p.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Menzie, s. Meaney, retinue, company</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Merchies, marches</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Messager, f. messenger</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Me-thunkeith, methinks</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Met, Meit, s. Meete, meet, fit, proper</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meyn. See Meany</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mickle, much, great</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Micht, might</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Midge, a small insect, a kind of gnat</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michte, mighty</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minged, p. 12, col. 2, mentioned</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minny, s. mother</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minstrual, s.minstruel, musician, &amp;c.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minstrelism, music</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirke, s. dark, black</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirkie, dark, black</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirry, s. Meri, merry</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mндdoubt, p. 78, col. 1, suspect, doubt</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscreants, unbelievers</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirkyped, miscarried</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Misen, mistake, also, in the Scotch idiom, &quot;let a thing alone.&quot; (Mr. Lambe)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mistert, s. to need</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitther, s. mother</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mode, p. 44, col. 1, mood</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moltening, by means of, f.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mold, mould, ground</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mo, Moe, more</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mome, a dull stupid person</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moment, voaning, bemoaning</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mone, moon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mon, s. month</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mongsunday, Monday</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>More, originally and properly signified a hill, (from a. s. mons, mons,) but the hills of the North being generally full of boys, a Moor came to signify boggy marshy ground, in general</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mores, p. 12, col. 1, hills, wild downs</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morrowangus, mornings</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morne, To morne, to-morrow in the morning</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morne, s. p. 20, col. 2, on the morrow</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morning, mourning</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mort, death of the deer

Moses, swampy grounds, covered with peat moss

Mout, must

Mote I thee, might I thrive

Mought, met, mote, might

Mowe, may, Moss, s. mouth

Mucheole bost, Mickle boast, great boast

Mude, s. mood

Malne, mill

Mun, Mun, s. must

Mure, Murren, a. wild downs, heaths, &c.

Murne, Murnt, Murning, s.mourn, mourned, mourning

Muis, muses

Myllan, Milan steel

Myne-ye-ple, p. 3, col. 2, perhaps, many plies, or folds.

Mzyne is still used in this sense in the North. (Mr. Lambe)

Myrry, merry

Myrsyd, p. 25, col. 2, misused, applied to a bad purpose

Myst, Mysty, might, mighty

N

Naithing, s. nothing

Nams, names

Na, Ne, s. no, none

Nane, s. none

Nar, p. 2, col. 2, Norse, nor. Item, than

 Nathaness, nevertheless

Nat, not

Near, s. Ner, Nere, ne'er, never

Next, oxen, cows, large cattle

Neatherd, a keeper of cattle

Neatresse, a female keeper of cattle

Neigh him near, approach him near

Nee, Ne, nigh

Neir, s. Nere, ne'er, never

Nere ne were, were it not for

Neist, Nyest, next, nearest

Nejungle, Newjangled, fond of novelty, of new fashions, &c.

Nicked him of naye, p. 17, col. 1, nicked him with a refusal

Nicht, s. night

Nipt, pinched

Noble, a gold coin, in value 20 grunts, or 6s. 6d.

Robes, p. 25, col. 1, Nobleesse, nobleness

Nolly, noddles, heads

Nom, took, Nome, name

Nance, purpose, For the nonce, for the occasion

Non, none, None, noon

Norland, s. northern

Norse, s. Norway

North-gales, North Wales

Non, now

Nourte, s. nurse

Nutt, Nocht, s. nought, also not, seems for 'ne mought'

Naught, nought

---

Lyth p. 79, col. 2, Lyth, Lythsome, plant, flexible, easy, gentle

Lyven na More, live no more, no longer

Lyzt, light

Madden, made

Mahound, Mahouene, Mahomet

Mair, s. Marr, more

Mait, s. might

Majeste, Meist, Majeste, may'st

Making, sc. verses, versifying

Makyss, Makes, mates

As the words make and mate were in some cases used promiscuously by ancient writers; so the words cake and cate seen to have been applied with the same indifferency: this will illustrate that common English Proverb, "to turn Cat (i.e. Cate) in pan." A Pan-cake is in Northamptonshire still called a Pan-cate.

Male, p. 3, col. 2, coat of mail

Mone, p. 3, col. 1, man. Item moon

Mone, Maining, s. moon, moaning

Mangouel, an engine used for discharging great stones, arrows, &c. before the invention of gun-powder

March perti, p. 4, col. 2, in the parts lying upon the marches

March-piue, p. 79, col. 2, March-pane, a kind of biscuit

Margarite, a pearl, l.

Marow, s. equal

Mark, a coin, in value 13a. 4d.

Marti, s. marred, hurt, damaged

Must, Maste, may'st

Masteryss, p. 22, col. 2, Mayestry, p. 46, col. 1, a trial of skill, high proof of skill

Maugre, spite of, ill will (1 in-cur)

Maugre, in spite of Mauger, Maugre, spite of Maun, s. must

Mau, s. Man, must

Matis, s. a thrush

Maut, s. malt

Maud, Mayde, maid

Maye, p. 8, col. 1, maid, (rhythmni gratin)

Mayne, p. 14, col. 2, force, strength, p. 22, col. 1, horae’s mano

Mere, a labyrinth, any thing entangled or intricate

On the top of Catherine-Hill, Winchester, (the usual play-place of the school,) was a very perplexed and winding path running in a very small space over a great deal of ground, called a Mix-Maze. The senior boys obliged the juniors to tread it, to prevent the figure from being lost, as I am informed by an ingenious correspondent.

Mean, moderate, middle sized
GLOSSARY.

Novels, noodles, heads
Noye, v. 175, annoy, query
Nutz, nought, not
Nurtured, educated, bred up
Nye, Ny, nigh
Nyzt, night

O
Obraid, s. upbraid
Ocht, s. ought
Oferlying, superior, paramount, opposed to underling
O gyn, s. of, a phrase
Ofoughten, Unfoughten, unfought
On-oft, aloft
On, one, an
On, one, On man, p. 3, col. 1, one
Oue, on Ouy, s. any
Oyys, once
Or, Ere, before; or seems to have the force of the Latin vel and to signify even O-eve, pp. 6, col. 1, 7, col. 1, before
O-eve, before ever
Orisons, s. prayers, f. orations
Ost, Oste, host, host.
Ou, Owe, you, your. Ubid, our
Out alas! exclamation of grief
Out-bridge, drew out, unsheathed
Out-horn, the summoning to arms by the sound of a horn
Out over, s. quite over, over
Outrake, p. 73, col. 2, an out-ride or expedition. To raik, s. is to go fast. Outrake is a common term among shepherds. When their sheep have a free passage from inclosed pastures into open and airy grounds they call it a good outrake. (Mr. Lambe).

Oware of none, hour of noon
Owches, bosses or buttons of gold
Owene, Aurea, Ain, s. own
Owe, Ouer, s. or'
Owe, s. over
Oure word, s, the last word, the burthen of a song
Out, out

P
Pall, a cloak or mantle of state
Palle, a robe of state. Purple and pall, i.e. a purple robe or cloak, a phrase
Palmer, a pilgrim, who, having been at the Holy Land, carried a palm branch in his hand.
Paramour, lover. Item, a mistress
Parde, Perdie, verily, f. par dieu
Paregull, equal
Partake, participate, assign to Parti, party, p. 3, col. 1, a part Patterning, murmuring, mumbling, from the manner in which the Paternoster was anciently hurried over, in a low, inarticulate voice
Pa, s. the river Po
Paunky, s. shrewd, cunning, sly, or saucy, insolent
Paves, p. 25, col. 1, a pavice, a large shield that covered the whole body, &c. pavois
Pavillan, pavillion, tent
Pay, liking, satisfaction, hence well apaid, i.e. pleased, highly satisfied
Paynim, pagan
Peakish, p. 77, col 1
Pearlins, a coarse sort of bone-lace
Pee, Piece, sc. of cannon
Pele, a baker’s peel
Penon, a banner or streamer, borne at the top of a lance
Pentarchye of tenses, five tenses
Perchmine, f. parchment
Perelous, parious, perilous, dangerous
Per fin, verily, f. par foy
Peere, Pere, Peer, equal
Peer, Peerless, equal, without equal
Peright, perfect
Peeing, peeping, looking narrowly
Perill, danger
Perkin, diminutive of Peter
Perles, p. 26, col. 2, peerless
Pees, Pepe, peace
Peris, Pearceed, pierced
Pect, part
Peryd, parted
Petye, pity
Peun, pain
Philancie, Philomel, the nightingale
Pibrocks, s. Highland war-tunes
Piece, s. a little Pight, Pyght, pitched
Pild p. 76, col. 1, pleased, bald
Fine, famish, starve
Pious chanzon, p. 48, col. 1, a godly song, or ballad
Mr. Rowe’s Ed. has “The first row of the Rebrick,” which has been suppomposed by Dr. Warburton to refer to the red-lettered titles of old Ballads. In the large collection made by Mr. Potts, I do not remember to have seen one single ballad with its title printed in red letters,

Pite, Pitte, Pyte, pity
Plaine, complaint
Plaining, complaining
Playand, s. playing
Play-felles, playfellows
Pleasure, pleasure
Plein, complain
Platt, s. platted
Plawne, a small wooden hammer occasionally fixed to the plow, still used in the North; in the Midland counties in its stead is used a plow-hatchet

Plyst, plight
Plobbat, a cant word for a whore
Pollys, Powlls, Polis, head
Pompad, p. 61, col. 2, pompous
Pondered, a term in Heraldry, for sprinkled over
Popingay, a parrot
Porcupig, porcypine, f. porcipeig
Portner, perhaps pocket or pouch.
Pantoniere in fr. is a shepherd’s scrip (vide Colgrave)
Portres, p. 27, col. 1, porteress
Powlls, polis, head
Pouannes, p. 77, col. 1, pounds, (rhythm gratis)
Pow, Pou, Powed, s. pull, pulled Press, Prese, press
Pread, p. 43, col. 1, pressed,

Press, f. ready
Prestly, p. 45, col. 1, Prestly, p. 14, col. 1, readily, quickly
Pricked, spurred forward, travelled a good round pace
Pricke-wand, p. 23, col. 1. a wand set up for a mark
Priches, p. 22, col. 2, the mark to shoot at Prig’s, prove
Prying, s. provy, tasting
Prove, proof
Proces, bravery, valor, military gallantry
Proves, p. 25, col. 1, prowess
Praude, pride. Item, proud
Pryke, p. 46, col. 1, the mark, commonly a hazel wand
Pryme, daybreak
Pusing, s. pulling
Pussing, strong, powerful
Pulde, pulled Purchased, procured
Purjel, an ornament of embroider
Purjelled, embroidered
Purjayed, provided

Q
Quadrant, p. 27, col. 1, four-square
Quail, shrunk, flinch, yield
Quaint, cunning, nice, fantastical
Quarry, p. 67, col. 1, in hunting or hawking is the slaughtered game, &c.
Quat, s. quitted
Quay, Queay, s. a young heifer, called a Wice in Yorkshire
Quean, sorry, base woman
Quell, subdue, also kill
Quel, cruel, murderous
Quelch, a blow or bang
Quere, quire, choir
Quest, p. 43, col. 1, inquest Quaha, s. who
Quhais, s. where Quhan, Quhan, s. when Quhaneer, s. whene’er
Quhatten, s. what Quhat, s. what
GLOSSARY.

Quen, s. when
Quy, s. why
Quick, alive, living
Quikets, quibbles, l. quiddibet
Quilt, requisite
Quo, quoth
Quyle, s. while
Querry, p. 2, col. 2, See Quarry above
Quyte, p. 4, col. 2, requited
Quyt, s. quit
Quyknit, s. quickened, restored to life

R
Rade, s. rode
Rae, a roe
Raik, s. to go a-pace, Raik on raw, go fast in a row
Rame, reign
Rane, s. rose
Ranted, s. were merry. Vide Gloss. to Gentle Shepherd
Ranishing, seems to be the old hunting term for the stroke made by a wild boar with his fangs. See p. 54, col. 2
Raught, reached, gained, obtained
Rayne, reaue, rain
Rayse, race
Rast, Raught, or self-bered
Reachess, careless
Reade, p. 6, col. 2, Rede, advise, bit off
Read, advice
Rea me, Reaume, realm
Reas, p. 2, col. 2, raise
Reave, bereave
Reckt, regarded
Rede, Read, advise, advice
Rede, Houd, read
Redresse, care, labour
Ref, bereave, or perhaps Ride, split
Relf, Reeve, Reave, buliff
Reft, bereft
Register, the officer who keeps the public register
Reid, s. advise
Reid, s. reed, Rede, red
Reidroan, s. red-roan, p. 15, col. 1
Reek, s. smoke
Rekeles, Recklesse, regardless, void of care, rash
Remed, s. remedy
Renneth, Renning, renneth, running
Renn, run, p. 51, col. 2
Renish, p. 16, col. 2, Renisaat, p. 18, col. 1, perhaps a derivation from Renissaat, to shine
Rennied, p. 25, col. 2, refused
Rexcous, rescues
Reeve, bailiff
Reve, bereave, deprive
Rever, s. robbers, pirates, rovers
Rewith, regrets, has reason to repent
Revie, s. take pity
Rwe, ruth, Reeve, pity
Ryll, Ryal, royal
Richt, s. right
Riddle, seems to be a vulgar idiom for unriddle; or is perhaps a corruption of reade, s. advise
Ride, make an inroad
Rin, s. run. Rin my errand; a contracted way of speaking for "run on my errand." The pronoun is omitted. So the French say faire message
Rise, shoot, bush, shrub
Rive, rife, abounding
Roche, rock
Roode-cross, crucifix
Rood-left, the place in the church where the images were set up
Rood, Roode, cross, crucifix
Ronne, run, Roone, p. 7, run
Ronge, roof
Route, go about, travel
Routhe, ruth, pity
Rownd, Rownyd, whispered
Row, Rowd, s. roll, rolled Rowyned, round
Rought, rout
Rudd, ruddiness, complexion
Rude, s. Rood, cross
Ruell-bones, perhaps bones diversely colored, f. Riele, or perhaps small bone rings from the f. rouelle, a small ring or hoop.—Cotgrave's Diet.
Rues, Rwethe, pitieth
Rugged, pulled with violence
Rushy, should be Rashy gair, rushy stuff, ground covered with rushes
Ruthful, rueful, woful
Ruth, pity
Ruthe, pity, wee
Ryde, p. 46, col. 2, ranger
Ryd, p. 72, col. 1, i. e. make an inroad, Ryde, in p. 17, col. 2, (ver. 136), should probably be rise
Rynde, p. 8, col. 1, rent
Ryschus, rushes
Ryue, rue
Ryti, right

S
Safer, saphyre
Saff, s. soft
Saif, s. safe
Sair, s. sore
Sain, s. same
Salt, s. shall
Saif, s. sake, Savely, safely
Saisme, seized
Sar, s. shirt
Sar, Sair, s. sore
Sa, Sae, s. so
Sat, Set, set
Sault, s. salt
Sawnde, saved
Saw, Say, speech, discourse
Say, Assay, attempt
Say, saw
Say us no harms, say no ill of us
Sayne, say
Scent, scarce. Item scantiness
Schalt, shall
Schapped, p. 8, col. 1, perhaps swapped. Vid. loc.
Schattered, shattered
Schaw, s. show
Schene, s. Sheen, shining, also brightness
Schip, s. ship
Schiples, s. shipless
Scho, p. 10, col. 2, Sche, p. 7, col. 1, s. she Schone, shone
Schoot, shot, let go
Schoute, Schoutte, shout
Schiull, s. shrill
Schute, s. shook
Sciat, slate, little table-book of slates to write upon
Scomfit, discomfit
Scot, tax, revenue, a year's tax of the kingdom, also shot, reckonimg
Scathe, hurt, injury
Sei, said
Seik, s. Seke, s. seek Set, s. seek
SEL, self
Seleer, Siller, silver
Senneshall, steward
Sen, seen
Sen, s. since
Senwy, mustard seed, f. sennio
Sertayne, Sertayn, certain, certainly
See, Sees, s. sea, seas
Se, Sene, Seying, see, seen, seeing Seething, boiling
Seatweall, see Citywall
See, seyen
Say you, say to you
Sey, s. say, a kind of woolen stuff
Seyd, s. saw
Shae, Be shave, be shaven
Shaws, little woods
Sheen, p. 2, col. 2, entirely, (penitus)
Sheete, She'll, she will Sheene, Shone, shining
Sheits, Sheets, s. sheets
Shee's, she shall
Sheene, shining
Shent, shamed, disgraced, abused
Shipenes, Shipens, cow-houses, sheep-pens, a. s. Seypen
Sheere, Shive, a great slice or luncheon of bread
Shield-bone, the blade bone, a common phrase in the north
Shimmered, s. glittered
Shimmering, shining by glances
Shirt of male or mail, was a garment for defence, made all of rings of iron, worn under the coat. According to some the hauberk was so formed
GLOSSARY.

Shoon, s. Shoone, p. 64, col. 1, shoes
Shoke, p. 25, col. 2, shookest
Shold, Sholde, should Shope, shaped
Shope, betook me
Shorte, s. shorten
Sho, Scho, s. she
Shote, shot
Shrodd, p. 21, col. 2. Vid. locum
Shread, cut into small pieces
Shreen, Shriven, confessed her sins
Shree, a bad, an ill-tempered person
Shreward, a male shrew
Shriff, confession
Shrique, confess. Item, hear confession
Sroges, shrubs, thorns, briars.
G. Doug. Scorrigs
Skullen, shall Shulde, should Shunted, shunned
Shyers, shires
Shynyd, s. shining
Sh, kin, skip, related
Sich, Sir, s. such, Sich, s. sigh
Sick-like, s. such like
Side, s. long
Sied, s. saw
Sigh-clout, p. 52, col. 1, (Syth-clout), a clout to strain milk through, a straining clout
Sighan, Sighand, s. sighing
Silk, Sike, such
Siler, surely, certainly
Siller, s. silver
Sindle, s. seldom
Sixteth, sit ye
Sith, p. 2, col. 2, since
Skaith, South, harm, mischief
Skath, perhaps from the Germ. Scathel, malicious, perverse (Sie Dan. Skalek nequitia, malicia, &c. Sheringham de Aug. Orig. p. 318); or perhaps from the Germ. Schachlen, to squint. Hence our northern wood Shelly, to squint
Skinder, one that serves drink
Skinkled, s. glittered
Skomfit, discomfit
Skott, shot, reckoning
Slade, a breadth of greensward between plow-lands or woods, &c.
Slated, s. whetted, or perhaps wiped
Slattred, slit, broke into splinters
Slaw, slew, p. 80, col. 1, (Sc. Abel)
Slaw, Stone, slain
Slath, slayeth
Sle, s. slay, also aly
Sle, Sla, Slie, Sle, slay, Sleest, slayest
Sleip, s. Slepe, sleep
Stede, p. 12, col. 2, slit, split
Sloane, p. 13, col. 1, slain
Slo, p. 25, col. 1, Sloe, slay
Sloagh, p. 3, col. 1, slew
Smithers, s. smotherers
Sna', Sauer, s. snow
Sall, Saullle, Soule, soul
Saldain, Soldan, Sowdan, sultan
Sawm, s. Son, sun
Sand, a present, a sending Sane, soon
Sort, company
Soothly, truly
Sooth, truth, true
Soth, Sethe, South, Southe, South, truth
South-Ynglode, South England
Sowldan, Soldan, sultan
Sowile, s. Sold, should Soiling, victualting. Sowle is still used in the north for any thing eaten with bread; a. s. supple, suple, Joh. xxi. 5, (or to soule, may be from the French word saouler, "to stuff and cram, to glut." Vid. Cotgrave)
Sowelen, Sowdain, sultan
Sower, sound (rhy. gr.)
Sowre, sour
Sovere, Soare, sore
Sower, p. 19, col. 2, shoemaker
Soit, f. silk
Spak, Spak, s. spake
Spereere, Vide locum
Spec, Spak, Spack, s. spake
Speid, speeded, succeeded
Speik, s. speak
Spier, s. Spere, Spere, Spere, Spire, ask, enquire
So Chaucer, in his Rhyme of Sir Thomas,
"... He soughte north and south, And oft he spired with his mouth." i. e. enquired,—not spied, as in the new edition of Canterbury Tales, vol. ii. p. 231.
Spence, Spens, expense
Spended, p. 4, col. 1, probably the same as spanned, grasped
Spreeded, Sprared, i. e. fastened, shut
So in an old "Treatise of agayst Pestilence," &c. 4to. Emprynted by Wynkyn de Worde." we are exhorted to "spere (i. e. shut or bar) the wyndowes against the south," fol. 5.
Spillan, Spilland, s. spilling
Spill, p. 51, col. 1, Spille, p. 15, col. 1, spoil, come to harm
Spill, spoil, destroy, kill
Spindles and whorles, the instruments used for spinning in Scotland, instead of spinning wheels
The rock, spindles, and whorlces are very much used in Scotland and the northern parts of Northumberland, at this time. The thread for shoe-makers, and even linen webs, and all the twine of which the Tweed salmon nets are made, are spun upon spindles. They are said to make a more even and smooth thread than spinning wheels. Mr. Lambe.

Sporeles, spurless, without spurs
Spole, shoulder; f. espaulle. It seems to mean "arm-pit"
Sprent, p. 3, col. 2, spurred, sprung out
Spurring, froth that purges out
Spurn, Spurne, a kick, p. 5, col. 1. See Tear
Spyde, spied
Spyle, spoiled, destroyed
Spit, p. 2, col. 2, Spyte, spite
Squanty, a blow, or bang
Stabile, p. 20, col. 1, perhaps 'establish Stalwart, Stalworth, stout
Stalworthyle, stoutly
Stane, s. Stean, p. 21, col. 1, stone
Stark, p. 14, col. 1, stiff, p. 25, col. 2, entirely
Startopes, buskins, or half boots worn by rusties, faced down before
Stead, Stede, place
Stem, s. stone
Steedly, steady
Stel, steel, Steilly, s. steely
Stele, steel
Steid, s. Steede, steed
Steir, s. stir
Sterris, stars
Sterne, stern, or perhaps, stars
Stert, start, p. 82, col. 2, started
Sterte, Sterlled, started
Stiven, p. 22, col. 2, time
Stevens, p. 23, col. 2, voice
Still, quiet, silent
Stint, stop, stopped
Stirende stage, p. 6, col. 2, a friend interpreted this, "many a stirring travelling journey
Stonderes, standers by
Stoup of weir, pillar of war
Stound, Stonde, (introd.) space, moment, hour, time
Stond, Stoun, A-stound, a-while
Stour, p. 4, col. 1, 19, col. 1, Stower, 12, col. 2, Stowe, 8, col. 2, 14, col. 2, fight, disturbance, &c. This word is applied in the north to signify dust agitated and put into motion, as by the sweeping of a room.
Stower, Stoure, stir, disturbance, flight
Stown, stolen
Stowe, strong, robust, fierce
Stras, Strae, s. straw
Straight, straight
Streke, Streken, strick
Street, street
Strick, strict
Strike, stricken
Stroke, p. 3, col. 2, struck
Stude, Stuid, s. stood
Glossary.

Stygtyde, stinted, stayed, stopped
Sty, start
Suar, sure
Summere, a sumpter horse
Sum, s. some
Sumpters, p.78, col.2, horses that carry clothes, furniture, &c.
Sun, s. soon
Sure by ys chin, sworn by his chin
Surcease, cease
Suthes, Suth, soon, quickly
Swippe, p.3, col.2, Swapped, p.8, col.2, Swopepe, struck violently, Scot. Swape, to scourge, (vid. Gl. Gaw. Doug.) or perhaps exchanged; sc. blows, so "Swape or Swopp" signifies
Swaid, the grassy surface of the ground
Swarde, Swared, climbed, or, as it is now expressed in the midland counties, Swurm, To swurm, is to draw oneself up one a tree, or any other thing, clinging to it with the legs and arms, as hath been suggested by an ingenious correspondent
Swat, s. Swate, Swatte, did sweat
Swear, p.2, col.2, sware
Swarde, Sword, sword
Swere, swearing, oath
Swecen, s. Swete, sweet
Swere, Swire, neck
Swepyly. A Swepyly is that staff of the flag, with which corn is beaten out, vulg. a Supple, call'd, in the midland counties, a Swindell, where the other part is termed the hand-staff
Swinkers, labourers
Seith, quickly, instantly
Suye, sigh
Swoying, whoring
Swayng, striking fast, (Cimb. Suypan, cito agere, or rather "scourging" from volvere, rapare).—Scot. Swep, to scourge. Vide. Glossary to Gawin Douglass
Sy, such
Syde-sheer, p.2, col.2, Sydis-sheer, p.2, col.2, on all sides
Syd, side
Syn, s. then, afterwards
Sysemell, Ishmael
Sith, since
Siy, sight

T.
Taiken, s. token, sign
Tanis, s. Tane, token
Take, taken
Talents, p.17, col.1, perhaps golden ornaments, hung from her head to the value of talents of gold
Targe, target, shield

Tear, p.5, col.1, this seems to be a proverb, "That tearing, or pulling, occasioned his spurn or kick"
Teene, Tene, sorrow, indignation, wrath, properly injury, afront
Teeneffu, s. full of indignation, wrathful, furious
Te he! interjection of laughing
Tend, s. heed
Teraignant, the god of the Saracens. See a memoir on this subject in page 19
The old French romancers, who had corrupted termagant into tervagant, couple it with the name of Mahomet, as constantly as ours: thus, in the old Roman of Blanchardin:
"Cy guer pison tait Apolin, Et Mahomet et Tervagant."
Hence Fontaine, with great honour, in his tale entitled "La Fiancée du Roy de Garbe," says,
"Et ravissant Mahom. Jupin, et Tervagant, Avec maint autre dieu non moins extravagant."
Mem. de l'Acad. des Inscrip. tom. 20, p. 432.

As termagant is evidently of Anglo-
Saxon derivation, and can only be explained from the elements of that language: its being corrupted by the old French romancers proves that they borrowed some things from ours.

Terry, diminutive of Thierry Theodoricus, Didiericus. Lat. also of Terence
Te to, Te make, to make Tha, them, Thah, though
Their, their, Their, There, there
Thame, s. them
Than, s. then
There, Their, Their, There, there
There, Their, p.2, col.2, there
They, their, Mote he thee, may he thrive

The God, seems contract'd for
The he, i.e. high God.
The, They, thrive. So mote I thee, so may I thrive

So in Chancer, passim, Canterbury Tales, vol.1, p.368.
"God let him never the." Tho, they, The weare, p.2, col.1, they were
They, their, They'd, the end.
Ther-for, p.3, col.1, therefore Theirto, thereto, These, these Ther, p.2, col.2, their
This, they
Thie, thoy, Thoue, thou
Thi sone, thy son
Thilke, this
Thir townounds, s. these twelve months
Thir, s. this, these Thirteenth, thirty thousand
Thotch, thought
Thole, Thobed, suffer, suffered
The, then, those, the Thoue, s. thou art

Thoust, thou shalt, or shouldst
Thralld, p.76, col.2, captive, p.29, col.1, Thaldon, captivity
Thrang, s. throng, close
Threvis, s. throes
Threape, to argue, to affirm or assert, in a positive overbearing manner
There, Thari, s. three Thire, Thire, three
Thrift, thrive
Thrilled, twirled, turned round
Thritte, thirty
Throng, p.42, col.2, hastened
Thropes, villages
Throw, s. through
Throuch, Throuch, s. through
Thud, noise of a fall
Thews, manners. In p.51, it signifies limbs
Theyerther-ward, thither-ward, to wards that place
Tibbe. In Scotland, Tibbe is the diminutive of Isabel
Tift, s. puff of wind
Till, s. to, when, query
Till, p.4, col.2, unto, p.18, col.2, entice
Tild down, pitched, q.t.
Timkin, diminutive of Timothy
Tine, p.11, col.2, lose
Tint, s. lost
Tirled, twirled, turned round
Too-fall, s. twilight

Too-fall of the night, "seems to be an image drawn from a suspended canopy, so let fall as to cover what is below."—Mr. Lambe.
To, too, Item, two Tone, Tone, the one
Ton, p.3, col.1, Tone, the one
Tor, a tower; also a high pointed rock, or hill
Tow, Tow, two, Too, s. two
Tow, s. p.31, col.1, to let down with a rope, &c.
Tower, p.6, col.2, town
Trowverse, treason
Tranchant, f. cutting
Tres-hardie, th. thrice hardy
Treatory, Treatory, treechery
Trichard, treacherous, fr. fricheur
Trichten, trick, deceive
Tride, tried
Trie, s. Tre, tree
Triestfurth, s. draw forth to an assignation
Trifulecote, three forked, three pointed Trom, exact
Trot, truth, faith, fidelity
Trough, Trought, troth
True, thoth, true
Trew, believe, trust, also verity
Trumped, p.4, boasted, told bragging lies, lying stories. So in the north they say, "that's a trump," i.e. a lie; "she goes about trumping," i.e. telling lies.
Glossary.

Trumpets, made of a tree, perhaps, "wooden trumpets," musical instruments fit enough for a mock tournament.

Tuik, s. took
Take gude keip, s. kept a close eye upon her Tul, s. till, to Turn, p. 78, col. 2, such turn, such an occasion
Turnes a crab, sc. at the fire roasts a crab
Tuik, an interjection of contempt, or impatience
Twa, s. two
Tuik, s. two
Twin'd, s. p. 10, col. 2, parted, separated. Vid. G. Douglas Turtle, twist, s. thoroughly twisted, "twisted," "twirled twist," 4. tortillë

U
Uch, each
Ugsome, s. shocking, horrible
Unbought, for bethought. So Unlosse, for loose
Uncestous, fat, clammy, oily
Undermerles, afternoons
Undight, undevik, undressed
Unempt, uncombed
Unmeklyke, mis-shapen
Unmynfit, s. undisturbed, uncon- founded, perhaps Unmynvit
Unsecket, opened; a term in falcon.
Unsett steven, p. 29, col. 2, unap- pointed time, unexpectedly
Unmounse, s. unlucky, unfortunate
Untyl, unto, p. 42, col. 2, against Urc, use
Uther, s. others

V
Vair, (Somersetsh. Dialect,) fair
Valent, s. valiant
Vazen, (Som.) probably for Vai- then, 1. e. faiths; as Housen, Clozen, &c.
Veu, (Introd.) approach, coming
Vices, (probably contracted for devices) p. 27, col. 1, screws, or perhaps, turning pins, swivel. An ingenious friend thinks a vice is rather "a spindle of a press," that goeth by a vice, that seemeth to move of itself.

Viëne, p. 25, col. 1, rascally
Vice, (Somerset.) five
Voiced, p. 43, col. 2, quitted, left the place

Friers, (Som.) friars

W
Wa, s. way, wall
Wadded, perhaps from Wood, i. e. of a light blue colour.

Taylor, in his History of Gavel-kind, p. 49, says, "Bright, from the British word brith, which signifies their wood-color; this was a light blue."—Minshaw's Dictionary.

Wad, s. Wald, Wolde, would Wae, Waffo', woe, woful
Wanworth, s. woe betide
Waine, waggon
Wallowit, s. fided, withered
Walker, a fuller of cloth
Walter'd, Welterd, rolled along, also wallowed
Waltering, wiltering
Waly, an interjection of grief
Wane, s. womb
Wane, Wem, s. belly
Wane, p. 3, col. 2, the same as Ane, one
So Wone, p. 4, col. 1, is one

In fol 355 of Bannatyne's MS. is a short fragment in which Hane is used for Ane; or, one: viz.
"Amongst the monsters that we find, There's wane belov'd of womankind, Rewound for antiquity, From Adam's drive his pedigree."

Wan neir, s. draw near Warrnyte, s. uneasy
War, p. 2, col. 2, aware
Warde, s. advise, forewarn
Ward, s. watch, sentinel
Warke, s. work
Warl, s. world
Warld, s. col. 15, col. 2, worlds
Wary, s. becurd
Wassell, drinking, good cheer
Wate, s. Wete, Wete, Witte, Wot, Wote, Wotte, know
Wate, s. blamed, Prat. of Wyte, to blame
Wat, p. 3, col. 1, Wot, know, am aware
Wat, s. wet, also knew
War, to grow, become Wayward, foward, peevish
Wayde, waved
Wcol, p. 4, col. 2, wall
Wede, p. 28, col. 2, happiness, prosperity, &c.
Weare, s. drive in gently
Weariful, s. wearsome, tiresome, disturbing
Weede, clothing, dress
Weedes, clothes
We, s. little
Weel, well, also "wel"
Wen, Woon, think, thought
Weet, s. wet
Weds, p. 4, col. 2, widows
Weil, s. Weep, weep
Weinde, s. Wende, Went, Wende, Weneed, thought
Weid, s. Wede, Weed, clothes, clothing

Weird, wizard, witch, properly fate, destiny
Well away, exclamation of pity
Weldyng, ruling
Wel of pite, source of pity
Welkin, the sky
Weme, wemb, belly, hollow
Wen, (Introd.) hurt
Wende, went, Wendeth, goeth

Wende, p. 44, col. 2, Weene
Wen, Wens, go, goes
Wene, Wenus, wun, weneest
Werrre, Weir, s. war. Warris, s. wars
Werryed, worried
Wereth, defendeth
Werke, work
Were, were
Wes, was Westin, s. western
Witting, western, or whistling
Wist, s. who
Whair, s. where Whan, s. when
Whang, s. a large slice
Wheeling, wheeling
Weder, whither
Whig, sour whey, or butter-milk
While, p. 70, col. 1, until Whit, s. which Whittles, knives
Whit, jot
Whoard, board
Whores. Vide Spindles
Whos, p. 25, col. 2, whoso
Whyllys, whilst
"Hr," s. with
Wight, p. 50, col. 2, person, p. 76, col. 1, strong, lusty
Wight, human creature, man or woman
Wighty, p. 22, col. 1, strong, lusty, active, nimble
Wightlye, p. 12, col. 1, vigorously
Willy, p. 20, col. 1, shall Wild, worm, serpent
Wildings, wild apples
Witfull, p. 22, col. 2, wandering, perverse, erring
Winnar, p. 10, col. 2, will not
Windar, perhaps the contraction of Windower, a kind of hawk
Windling, windling
Win, s. get, gain
Wissome, p. 83, col. 1, agreeable, engaging
Worke wishier, work more wisely
Wishe, direct, govern, take care of, a. s. Pyrrh
Wiss, p. 73, col. 2, know, wist, knew
Wit, Weet, know, understand
Withonest, Witheboughten, without Wolster, s. Webster, weaver
Wood-wroth, s. furiously enraged
Woodweeke, p. 21, col. 2, or Wood- wale, the golden oule, a bird of the thrush kind. Gloss. Chauc. The original MS. has Woodvewe
Wode, Wod, wood, also mad
Wode-ward, towards the wood
Woe-begone, p. 14, col. 1, lost in woe, overwhelmed with grief
Woe-man, a sorrowful man
Woe-worth, woe be to [you] a. s. northan (fieri) to be, to become
GLOSSARY.

Wo, woful, sorrowful
Wolde, would Wonne, dwell
Wonders, wondrous
Wonde, (Introd.) wound, winded
Wond'd. p. 79, col. 2, Wonn'd, dwelt
Wonderly, Wonderly, wondrously
Won, wont, usage
Wone, p. 4, col. 1, one
Worshipfully friendly, of worshipful friends
Worthe, worthy
Wot, know, think
Wote, Wot, know, I wote, verily

Y
Y, I, Y synge, I sing
Yae, a each
Yelping, s. yelping
Yaned, yawned
Yate, p. 73, col. 1, gave Yate, gate
Y-beare, Y-boren, bear, borne.
So Y-founde, found, Y-mud, made, Y-wonne, won
Y-bult, built
Ych, Yche, each
Yholde yef, I should if
Yhone, p. 8, col. 2, each one
Ychou, each one
Ycholle (Introd.) I shall
Ychopseed, cut with the chisel
Y-cleped, named, called
Y-cous'd, taught, instructed
Y-core, chosen
Ydle, idle
Yee, p. 8, col. 1, eye
Yeared, buried
Y bent, Y-bent, bent
Yede, Yode, went
Y seith, Y-seith, in faith
Ycha, Ilka, each, every Yelde, yielded
Yenough, yough, enough
Yerrarchy, hierarchy
Yere, Yeere, year, years
Yerle, p. 3, col. 1, Yerle, earl
Yerly, p. 2, col. 2, early Yese, ye shall
Yestreen, a yester evening
Yf, if Yere, together
Y-founde, found
Ygnornance, ignorance
Yl, ill
Ylke, Ilk, same, That ylk, that same
Ylythe (Introd.) listen
Yn, in

Yn house, home
Ynglede, England
Ynglish, Ynglyshe, English
Yode, went
Yowe, you
Y-picking, picking, calling, gathering
Y's, is, his, in his
Y-slaw, slain
Y'songe, (Introd.) sung
Y't, it
Yth, p. 2, col. 2, in the Y-were, were
Y-wis, p. 28, col. 1, I, wis, verily
Y-wrought, wrought
Y-sea, truly, verily
Y-gate, molten, melted

Z
Zaering-bell, Som. Sacred bell, a little bell rung to give notice of the elevation of the host
Zee, Zeene, Som. see, seen
Zees, ye shall
Ze, s. ye, Ze'e, ye are Zede, Yede, went
Zef, Yef, if
Zeirs, s. years
Zelow, s. yellow
Zene, take care of, a. s. semen
Zent, through, a. s. zeon°
Zestrone, s. yester e'en
Zit, s. Zet, yet
Zonder, a. yonder
Zong, s. young
Zou, a. you, Zour, s. your Zould, s. you'd, you would Zour-lane, Yournal, alone, by yourself
Zouth, s. youth
Zule, s. Yule, christmas
Zung, s. young

* * The printer has usually substituted the letter z, to express the character ȝ, which occurs in old MSS.; but we are not to suppose that this ȝ was ever pronounced as our modern z; it had rather the force of y, (and, perhaps, of gh), being no other than the Saxon letter ȝ, which the Scots and English have, in many instances, changed in y; as geatb, yard, geat, year, geons, young, &c.
On May 29, Part I., of
MONTAIGNE’S ESSAYS,
With Notes, &c., uniform with Gifford’s Massinger, Percy’s Reliques, Byron’s Life, Works, &c.
No. II. will appear in June.

Handsomely bound in cloth, royal 8vo., with Portrait, Vignette, &c., price 13s., or complete in 12 Parts,

THE PLAYS OF PHILIP MASSINGER,

In Lowndes’s Bibliographer’s Manual, it is stated, speaking of “Gifford’s” edition, that a more perfect edition of an old Poet than this never issued from the press.

This elegant and correct reprint of Massinger, from the text of Gifford, with his Critical and Explanatory Notes, and the general Critical Remarks of Dr. Ireland appended to each play,—this new edition of one of the noblest of our old dramatists, merits our highest commendation, and can scarcely fail to command an extensive share of public favour—elegantly printed, and in all other respects fitted to adorn the first libraries of the land.—New Monthly Magazine.

Handsomely bound in cloth, 8s. 6d.; or complete in Seven Parts, at One Shilling each,

RELIQUES OF ANCIENT ENGLISH POETRY.
Just Published, in 12 Parts, price 1s. each, or handsomely bound in cloth, 13s. uniform with the above,

EDMUND SPENSER’S FAERIE QUEENE, AND OTHER WORKS.

SCHLEGEL’S LECTURES ON DRAMATIC ART AND LITERATURE.
Translated from the Original German by JOHN BLACK.

This is a work of extraordinary merit.—Quarterly Review.

The present work contains a critical and historical account of the ancient and modern Drama. The Greek, Latin, Italian, French, Spanish, German and the English. The view which the author has taken of the standard productions, whether tragic or comic, is ingenious and just, and his reasonings on the principles of taste are as satisfactory as they are profound.—Edinburgh Review.

We hail with great pleasure the timely republication of this work, fraught and overflowing as it is with the noblest and most philosophic criticism.—Morning Herald.

WILLIAM HAZLITT’S WORKS.
Just published, Third Edition, in one vol. foolscap 8vo., cloth, 6s.

1. LECTURES ON THE DRAMATIC LITERATURE OF THE AGE OF ELIZABETH.

He possesses one noble quality at least for the office which he has chosen, in the intense admiration and love which he feels for the great authors on whose excellencies he chiefly dwells. His relish for their beauties is so keen, that while he describes them, the pleasure they impart becomes almost palpable to the sense, and we seem to feast and banquet on their “nectar’d sweets.” He introduces us almost corporally into the divine presence of the Great of old times, enables us to hear the living oracles of wisdom drop from their lips. He draws aside the veil of Time with a hand tremulous with mingled delight and reverence; and descants with kindling enthusiasm on all the delicacies of that picture of genius which he discloses. His intense admiration of intellectual beauty seems always to sharpen his critical faculties. He perceives it by a kind of intuitive power, how deeply soever it may be buried in rubbish, and separates it in a moment from all that would encumber or deface it. The knowledge communicated in these Lectures breaks no sweet enchantment, nor chills one feeling of youthful joy. His criticisms, while they extend our insight into the causes of poetical excellence, teach us at the same time more keenly to enjoy and more fondly to revere it.—Edinburgh Review.

2 vols. 8vo, with Portrait (published at 23s.) reduced to 15s.

2. LITERARY REMAINS of the late WILLIAM HAZLITT, with a Notice of his Life, by his Son; and Thoughts on his Genius and Writings by Sir E. L. BULWER and Serjeant TALFOURD.
3. SKETCHES AND ESSAYS. Now First Collected by his Son.
We have no hesitation in saying that no one of his previous volumes surpasses it in the varied excellence of its contents—whether we regard the philosophical subtlety of their spirit of observation, the fearless force of their satire, the unrivalled critical acumen of their literary discussions, the felicitous truth of their pictures of society, or the power, the purity, and the brilliancy of their style. The volume contains no less than Eighteen Essays.—Court Journal.

Royal 18mo, cloth, 3s.

4. CHARACTERISTICS IN THE MANNER OF ROCHEFOUCAULT'S MAXIMS.
Second Edition, with an Introduction by R. H. Horne, author of "Cosmo de Medici." Here we have "in the rough" all the author’s well-known theories of human character and action, as well as his happiest principles of criticism and poetry;—truly admirable, profoundly reasoned, and well expressed. We commend them a general perusal.—Examiner.

Third Edition, foolscap 8vo, cloth, 6s.

5. CHARACTERS OF SHAKESPEARE’S PLAYS.
Second Edition, 12mo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

6. ESSAYS ON THE PRINCIPLES OF HUMAN ACTION, on the Theories of Hartley and others; and now first published, on Abstract Ideas.

Second Edition, 8vo (published at 10s. 6d.), reduced to 5s. 6d.

7. SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, Contemporary Portraits.
8vo, (Published at 14s.) reduced to 6s. 6d.

8. POLITICAL ESSAYS, WITH SKETCHES OF PUBLIC CHARACTERS.
The remarkable faculty of saying brilliant things, in which the wit only ministers to the wisdom, is very conspicuous in all his writings."—Literary Gazette.

Second Edition 8vo. (published at 10s.), reduced to 5s. 6d.,

SPEECHES OF CHARLES PHILLIPS, ESQ.
Delivered at the Bar, and on various public occasions in Ireland and England.
Edited by himself. With Portrait.
 More than 100,000 of these Speeches were sold separately; and when collected a very large Edition were sold in a few months; and of the present Edition very few remain.

2 vols. foolscap 8vo., cloth, (published at 12s.) reduced to 5s.

THE WORKS OF CHARLES LAMB,
The two volumes now presented to the world altogether justify the previous eulogy of his admirers. They contain miscellaneous poetry, a tragedy, a farce, a tale, and a variety of essays. The essays upon Shakespeare and the contemporary dramatists evince a fine taste and a deep reading in the dramatic literature of England. The tale is a sweet and melancholy story; it is not unlike the finer part of Mackenzie. The first volume contains the poetry, the tragedy, the tale of Rosamond Gray, and a very interesting paper upon Christ’s Hospital. In the second volume are the essays, the letters under assumed signatures, and the farce. Upon the whole, we consider Mr. Lamb to be gifted with talents of no common order.—Literary Gazette

Second Edition, 8vo, (published at 10s. 6d.), reduced to 4s. 6d.,

RECOLLECTIONS OF CURRAN,
AND SOME OF HIS CONTEMPORARIES, WITH PORTRAIT.
By Charles Phillips, Esq.
“One of the most extraordinary pieces of biography ever produced. Nothing can be more lively and picturesque than its representation of the famous original. No library should be without it, and it would be hopeless to attempt any addition thereto.”—Brougham’s Statesmen, Vol. II. p. 191.

18mo. (published at 7s. 6d.) 2s.

REPORT ON THE STATE OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION IN PRUSSIA.
By M. Victor Cousin. Translated by Sarah Austin.
We recommend its perusal to all readers, not as an amusing book, but, what is better, as a book of which almost every page, not omitting the preface, affords materials for important and useful reflection.—Quarterly Journal of Education, No. 15.
Percy, Thomas, Bp. of Dromore
Reliques of ancient English poetry

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE
CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY